THE FOLLOWING IS WHAT THE EMINENT PROFESSOR

MR. WALTER MACFARREN

WRITES, AFTER INSPECTING

CHALLEN & SON'S... ARDETON Pianoforte:

"Careful examination has satisfied me that your ARDETON Pianoforte is calculated to furnish both students and professors with a long-felt want, for it enables them at will to detach the keyboard, or clavier, from the pianoforte action, and thus to practise their technical exercises without annoyance to their neighbours, or distress to their own ears, and the ingenious device by which the weight of the touch can be varied from one to nine ounces above normal renders it a really valuable invention, which I shall take every opportunity of recommending."

Signed—WALTER MACFARREN.

January 20, 1904.

DEAR SIRS,—I feel it both a duty and pleasure to thank you for your two magnificent Concert Grand Pianofortes used by me during my first tour in Great Britain. I cannot speak too highly of the brilliant and sympathetic tone and responsive touch possessed by them. I can confidently say you need fear no rival.

Yours faithfully,

WILHELM BACKHAUS.

January 22, 1904.

DEAR SIRS,—It affords me the greatest pleasure to state that the Concert Grand Pianos of your manufacture used by me at my Concerts at Queen's Hall and St. James's Hall, London, met with my entire approval.

I consider the tone of a remarkably sweet and sympathetic quality, and of unusual sustaining power, the touch very responsive and light. Having always been used to Pianos of German make, it was a great and agreeable surprise to me to find such a perfect instrument of English manufacture.

Yours faithfully,

(Dr.) RICHARD STRAUSS.

MR. WILLIAM WILD

(TENOR).

(Pupil of Andrew Black, Esq.)

Of the "Sir Charles and Lady Hallé South African Concert Tour," 1905: London (Queen's Hall) Concerts, and principal Provincial Choral Societies: Manchester (Gentlemen's) and Richter Concerts. Also of the Constantinople Choral Society's Concerts.

"The impersonation of Rinaldo has been sustained by Mr. William Wild, whom the Choral Society of Constantinople had especially engaged from England for this production. He possesses a fine tenor voice of sufficient strength, and above all, uses it very artistically."—Standard (Journal), March 19, 1904.

"Mr. William Wild, who has been specially engaged by the Constantinople Choral Society, is the possessor of a fine tenor voice of a very sweet quality, and entirely under command. His rendering of the important tenor solos was brilliant, while his artistic merits are enhanced by his modest demeanour."—Levant Herald and Eastern Express, March 21, 1904.

"The tenor, Mr. William Wild, who had come especially from London to sing 'The Crusaders,' proved a great acquisition to the Society. His voice is a pure and very sweet tenor, over which he has complete control. In his solo work and in connection with the chorus, he showed himself a true artist, and it is to be regretted that engagements in England prevented him from giving the public more opportunities of hearing him in this city."—Le Monde Oriental, March 26, 1904.

For Terms, Vacant Dates, &c., address—

Grosvenor Square, Stalybridge, Nr. Manchester.

MR. FURNESS WILLIAMS

(THE NEW TENOR).

BECHSTEIN HALL.—"Much should be heard of Mr. Furness Williams in the future."—London Scotsman.

JUDAS MACCABEUS.—RUTHIN CHORAL SOCIETY.—"Mr. Furness Williams met with a really splendid reception. His voice possesses a richness of quality seldom heard among tenor vocalists. His rendering of 'How vain is man' was well nigh perfection, and the climax was reached in 'Sound him an alarm,' which was magnificently and unflatteringly sung."—Denbighshire Free Press.

"We have no hesitation in saying that he was the most successful vocalist of the evening. He has a splendid tenor voice of the robust kind, and his renderings of 'Call forth thy powers,' 'Sound an alarm,' and 'How vain is man' were exceptionally good. Undoubtedly he is a singer of great promise—indeed, of more than promise, for he is already a tenor who should be most useful to any Society or in any concert. He was received on each occasion with genuine appreciation, out of sheer admiration for his voice and his ability."—North Wales Times.

BARROW CHORAL SOCIETY.—"Mr. Furness Williams had quite a flattering reception. He was in excellent voice, and in the recitative 'Thanks to my brethren' and 'How vain is man' he had full scope for displaying his vocal abilities, which he did to advantage."—Barrow Herald.

THE CREATION.—LOUTH CHORAL SOCIETY.—"Mr. Furness Williams was a valuable acquisition to the concert. His fine voice, especially in the higher passages, was very pleasant to listen to."—Lincoln Mercury.

THE HORN OF PEACE.—STANFORD CHURCH AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.—"Mr. Furness Williams is a tenor of more than ordinary ability, and the pleasant quality of his voice and his easy method were fully displayed in the recitative 'Watchman, will the night soon pass?'"—Standard News.

MISCELLANEOUS CONCERT.—ELY.—"Mr. Furness Williams essayed Wagner's 'Walter, Preislied,' from 'The Meistersinger, with signal success, his cultured voice and fluent delivery stamping him as an accomplished artist. . . . 'Sound an alarm,' from 'Judas Maccabæus,' lost none of its old charm in Mr. Williams's hands, and the clarion ring of his sustained high notes retained its sweetness to the end of the solo."—Cambridgehire Times.

MR. SAMUEL BISHOP

(BASS-BARITONE).

THE EXETER ORATORIO SOCIETY'S FESTIVAL.

PRESS NOTICES.

"ELIJAH."—"The part of the Prophet is one in which Mr. S. Bishop has made for himself a reputation, and his singing thereof last night was superlatively fine. The intensity of feeling with which Mr. Bishop sang the cry of human weakness, 'It is enough,' with the recit. preceding, and the sentences addressed to the Angel, could not have been more impressive; yet equal in power was his interpretation of the scene on the mountain, with the sublime prayer, 'Lord God of Abraham.' More devotional and artistically powerful rendering of the whole of the music pertaining to the part it would be difficult to give."—Western Morning News, December 1, 1904.

"ELIJAH."—"It was a fortunate circumstance that led the Society to engage Mr. S. Bishop for the part of the Prophet. He sang with a brilliance and with an expression which he probably never reached before, and he proved himself one of the most able exponents of this exacting part which has ever been heard in the city."—Devon and Exeter Gazette, December 1, 1904.

"ELIJAH."—"In the rôle of the Prophet Mr. S. Bishop was superb. The music of 'Elijah' is just what he requires to display his powerful bass voice to the fullest advantage. He certainly rose to his opportunity, and gave an exposition of the part which will long be remembered by all who were present. His singing throughout was flawless. . . . Mr. Bishop excelled in every detail, and fully demonstrated his title to be considered in the first rank as an exponent of the title-rôle of this great work."—Western Times, December 1, 1904.

"ELIJAH."—"The performance will long be remembered for the powerful interpretation of the rôle of the Prophet by Mr. S. Bishop, and he certainly justified his title to be regarded as one of the best exponents of the part now before the public."—Express and Echo, December 1, 1904.

For terms and vacant dates, apply—

3, Argyll Street, Regent Street, London, W.

MR. JAMES COLEMAN

(BASS)

(Vicar-Choral, Lichfield Cathedral, of the Birmingham Festival Choral Society, and Principal Provincial Concerts).

"MESSIAH."—"The honours of the evening were, however, carried off by Mr. J. Coleman, who is deservedly popular here. The quality of his deep voice was fully revealed in 'Why do the nations,' and so enraptured were the audience that he had to twice bow his acknowledgments, and the conductor to raise his hand appealingly, before the unanimous demand for an encore was allowed to drop."—Tamworth Herald, Dec. 9, 1904.

WARRINGTON MUSICAL SOCIETY.—"Mr. Jas. Coleman is one of the most pleasing and finished baritones that we have had the pleasure of listening to. He has a powerful voice, whilst his tasteful blending of light and shade was charming in the extreme. His rendering of the opening solo at once established him as first favourite, an impression confirmed as time went on."—Warrington Observer, Nov. 19, 1904.

REDDITCH.—"The promoters were fortunate in securing the services of Mr. J. Coleman, of Lichfield Cathedral, who has few equals on the English concert platform either in ballad or oratorio. His rich voice is of great range and perfect evenness of tone, and the finished artist appears in every bar of his singing."—Redditch Indicator, Dec. 3, 1904.

ERNEST J. BREMNER PRIZE SONATINA.

ERNEST J. BREMNER, the winner of our Prize Sonatina Competition, was born at Bristol on November 6th, 1868, the son of an English father and a German mother. When he was but eighteen months old his parents took up their residence in Germany. By a singular coincidence young Bremner spent his childhood in Endenich-bei-Bonn, in the very house in which Robert Schumann died. After completing his course of study at the Gymnasium at Moers on the Rhine, and at Bonn, he entered the Conservatoire at Cologne under the tuition of such renowned professors as Max Pauer (pianoforte), Arnold Mendelssohn and Bartmuss (organ), Jensen (counterpoint), and Franz Wüllner (composition). He passed his examination in 1891, and became teacher of music and conductor of the Men's Choral Society at Siegen, and in 1893 was appointed organist and choir-master at "Unserer lieben Frauen-Kirche" at Bremen, a position which he still holds.

The Sonatina, which gained the prize in our recent competition, is now published.

Price ... 1s. 3d.

"E. James Bremner's Prize Sonatina, for the Pianoforte, deserves to be classed amongst the best productions of its order issued within recent years. It comprises the usual three movements, the first being conspicuous for its inviting and nicely contrasted thematic material. A lovely song without words makes up the slow movement, which, truth to tell, might have been conceived by Mendelssohn himself. We heartily congratulate the composer on the appearance of his prize composition."—Musical Opinion.

MUSIC IN PICTURES.

I.—THE NATIONAL GALLERY.

The sister arts of painting and music furnish an interesting analogy. This may be exemplified by a beautiful picture and a Beethoven symphony,—the one delighting the eye, the other charming the ear. The subject-matter is attractive in both, and the workmanship perfect. It is quite possible to paint a picture that has a repulsive subject, and it is possible to compose a symphony that is as void of melody as it is of understanding; in both instances the technique may be above reproach, but skill in technical attainment will not atone for the lack of the one thing needful—beauty.

This analogy, or the suggestiveness arising therefrom, is introductory to a subject which from time to time will, we hope, find a place in these columns—a series of illustrated articles on ‘Music in pictures.’ Various collections, both British and foreign, will be laid under contribution for pictorial representation. Something will be said about the artist who painted the picture, in addition to some remarks upon the instruments, &c., depicted upon the canvas. The first instalment of these papers deals, naturally perhaps, with some of the pictures having musical subjects in the National Gallery.

There are doubtless some Londoners who have never passed the portal of the National Gallery, the dome-capped building situated on the north side of Trafalgar Square, an open space which has been designated ‘the finest site in Europe.’ And it may be taken for granted that comparatively few know anything of the history of the nation’s gallery of art. Its origin may be briefly told. Like a good many British institutions, the establishment of a National Gallery had long been discussed, when King George IV. suggested the propriety of purchasing the Angerstein collection of pictures. Lord Dover was the first to bring the matter before Parliament in 1823, and Sir George Beaumont backed up the proposal by offering to present his own pictures to the nation as soon as the Government provided a proper place for their reception. A Parliamentary grant of £60,000, voted April 2, 1824, established the National Gallery. It was opened at the house of Mr. Angerstein, in Pall Mall—whose pictures had in the meantime been acquired—on May 10, 1824. Fourteen years elapsed before the original portion of the present permanent building was erected. This was designed by William Wilkins, R.A., and opened to the public on April 9, 1838. Up to the year 1869 the Royal Academy of Arts occupied part of the building, supplements. It is painted by Jan Miense Molenaer, a native of Haarlem (1610?-1668). His earlier works give proof of the tutelage of Franz Hals, but later the noble example of Rembrandt is perceivable in the products of his brush. Molenaer's pictures contain much animation and often a felicitous humour. An example of his earlier work is the 'Spinnet players' in the State Museum at Amsterdam, while the 'Ballad-singer' at the Berlin Museum is a very favourable specimen of this master's style. The picture we reproduce represents a handsome wainscotted room, in which a young lady and gentleman, seated on when its locale was removed to Burlington House, Piccadilly, built on the site of the mansion formerly occupied by Lord Burlington, Handel's patron and friend, the house then being situated 'in the midst of the fields'!

Of the five pictures we have selected from the National Gallery collection, four are by Dutch artists of the 17th century, the period of the virginal, lute, and other old-world instruments. The first, called, though somewhat inadequately, 'Musical Pastime,' forms one of our special chairs, are singing. They are accompanying themselves on their respective instruments—he on a theorbo, she on a cittern, while the music-book lies open on the fair singer's knee. The theorbo is the large double-neck lute with two sets of tuning pegs. Thomas Mace in his 'Musick's Monument' (1676) says that the theorbo is no other than the old English lute; but, as the late Mr. Hipkins has said, 'Early in the 17th century many large lutes had been altered to theorbos by substituting double necks for the original single ones.' Mace regards the lute as a solo instrument, and the theorbo as an accompanying instrument; therefore our artist is quite correct in thus depicting them.

There is some doubt as to who invented the with a harp to accompany the song 'Breathe soft, ye winds,' a fact which would seem to support old Mace's view of its being an accompanying instrument. The cittern (or cithern) is also of the lute family; but it is strung with wire strings, generally theorbo; but it sufficeth to know that it can be attributed to the early part of the 17th century, a period coinciding with the rise of accompaniment. Handel writes for the theorbo in his oratorio of 'Esther' (1732), where he uses it in combination adjusted in pairs of unisons, and played with a plectrum of quill. In 1666 John Playford published his 'Musick's Delight on the Cithren, restored to a more easie and pleasant manner of playing than formerly.' Citterns were played in barbers' shops to relieve the tedium of customers waiting their turn to be shaved. There is an 18th century poem which says

In former times 't hath been upbrayded thus,
That barber's music was most barbarous.

Another feature of the picture that will not escape notice is the richly carved stool or low stand on which are placed a flagon and wineglass. The dog is a somewhat abstracted listener, while animal nature is further portrayed by the roast fowl that the serving woman is placing on the table, against which leans a viola da gamba, its head adorned with the gentleman's plumed hat. The portrait on the wainscot behind is that of a Prince of Orange. The costume of the figures is that of about the year 1630. This picture is in every respect a charming specimen of old-world art.

Gabriel Metsu (1630-1667), the painter of 'The Music Lesson,' was born at Leyden, and at the early age of fourteen had become a member of the Leyden Guild of Painters. Upon his removal to Amsterdam he came under the influence of Rembrandt. Metsu became a master of the first order. We learn that 'he was unsurpassed in his fine observation of character and gesture, in his exquisite and expressive drawing of hands, in his delicate manipulation and finish, in the spirituel touch of his pencil, and in the refinement and beauty of his colouring.' Moreover, 'his compositions are faultless in arrangement and in balance of parts.' Here, again, is an interesting analogy between painting and music. Four of Metsu's pictures are in the possession of the King at Buckingham Palace: one of them being a portrait of the artist, while another represents a gentlemen playing on the violoncello. He seems to have had a penchant for musical subjects, of which there are sixteen known examples. That in the National Gallery which (on p. 11) we reproduce is of a lady seated at an open virginal, holding a piece of music in her hand, while she converses with a gentleman who has in his hand a glass of wine. It is not quite clear whether the gentleman is the music-master: but there is no doubt about the congruity of such an accessory as the fiddle on the table at his side, though the jug on the floor is not quite so obvious an accompaniment to the musical scene thus pictorially depicted.

Another native of Leyden and a contemporary of Metsu was Jan Steen (1626 (?) - 1679), who, being the son of a brewer, eventually combined the business of a tavern-keeper with the occupation of painting. His jovial habits do not seem to have affected his artistic perception, indeed, after Rembrandt, he is considered to be the most genial painter of the Dutch School. His canvases give expression to inexhaustible humour and boundless high spirits and fun, qualities that have made his works popular in England. Sir Joshua Reynolds thought so highly of Steen's best works that he found therein points of contact with Raphael. The Buckingham Palace collection is strong in examples by Steen, one of His Majesty's possessions being a portrait of the artist himself playing a violin. 'The Music-Master' in the National Gallery (reproduced on p. 9) contains the figure of a young lady, wearing a yellow bodice and blue skirt, seated at a harpsichord with her music-book open before her. The master appears to be lacking in politeness to his fair pupil, as he is wearing his hat, but he is leaning on the instrument watching the movement of the young lady's fingers. The jovial artist has his little joke in putting his own name on the harpsichord—'Johannis Steen Fecit'—as though he himself had manufactured the instrument! A duet is evidently in prospect, as in the background a boy is bringing a lute into the room. The lute—an instrument much in vogue during the 17th century—is too well known to need description. The sound-holes are often very beautifully fretted; and we all know what remarkable transformations were accomplished by means of the instrument in the hands of such a master as Orpheus.

Godfried Schalcken (1643-1706) was one of the best pupils of Gerard Dow. He visited England, and while here worked with much success, being employed for some time by William III. Schalcken is chiefly distinguished for his pictures of candle-light painted on a small scale. His portrait of King William III., by candle-light, now at Amsterdam, proves that he could also succeed in full-lengths. One of his best pictures is at Buckingham Palace: it is called 'A Concert of Music,' in which the artist himself is taking part, his instrument being, like that of Metsu in the same collection, a violin. The National Gallery example of Schalcken's pictures—'A Duet, or Singing Lesson,' reproduced on p. 10—is of a lady with music, and a gentleman tuning his cittern upon which he is about to accompany the fair singer. They are seated at a table covered with a Turkey rug, on which lies a pink rose. The remainder of the picture speaks for itself; but we may add that the size of the original, painted on oak, is 10½ in. in height by 8 in. in width.

The last of our illustrations is a picture which formed part of the Mantua Collection purchased by Charles I. in 1630; it subsequently became the property of Mr. Angerstein. It is of the School of Vecellio (Titian), and is entitled 'A Maestro di Capella giving a Music Lesson.' The boy in the group is being instructed in singing to the accompaniment of a bass stringed instrument, while one of the onlookers has a pitch-pipe in his mouth, perchance to aid the boy in his intonation. It is evident that the young chorister is being taught to open his mouth well: therefore if one may find 'books in running brooks' and 'sermons in stones,' singers, at least, may not peruse in vain these notes on 'Music in Pictures.'

MR. AND MRS. JOAH BATES.

A DISTINGUISHED AMATEUR AND A NOTABLE SINGER.

Joah Bates was born at Halifax, where his father, Henry Bates, combined the occupation of parish clerk with the business of an innkeeper. The date of his birth is given in various books of reference—including the 'Dictionary of National Biography' and Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (both editions)—as March 19, 1740-41. But this is surely an error. In order to verify the above date we asked Mr. F. de G. English, organist of Halifax Parish Church, to kindly procure a copy of the entry of Bates's baptism from the Registers. This he did, and here it is:

Register of Baptisms in the Parish Church of Halifax.

March 8th. Joah Henry Bates. Hal. Parish Clerk.

Therefore, as the infant was baptized on March 8, he must have been born before March 19! Mr. English, in sending the above extract, says: 'Bates had only the name of Joah: the entry "Joah Henry Bates" means "Joah, son of Henry Bates," as was the custom of writing up our Registers (which are in splendid condition) in those days, e.g., "Sarah Joshua Hirst," which comes next in the book. "Hal," of course, stands for Halifax, to specify the township, the parish of Halifax at that time being about the size of a small diocese of the present day.'

Joah received his education at the Free School of the town then under the headmastership of Dr. Samuel Ogden, the celebrated classical scholar and orientalist. The organ and the theory of music he learned from Hartley, organist of Rochdale, for whom he frequently deputized. On January 15, 1755, Master Joah entered the Manchester Grammar School, to which his brother Henry had been admitted two years earlier. Both the boys were clever. Henry became Vicar of Freckenham, Suffolk, a cure he held for forty-three years, and Joah proved that he could write Latin verse during his pupilage at Manchester. The following is a specimen of his skill in this direction, a Latinized version of Edmund Waller's familiar lyric, 'Go, lovely rose!':

Go, lovely Rose!
Tell her that wastes her time and me
That now she knows,
When I resemble her to thee,
How sweet and fair she seems to be.

I nunc, et illi dic, Rosa amabilis
Quæ me morando conterit, et dies
Quam pulchra, quam dulcis videtur
Cum similem tibi comparerem.

While at Manchester the boy became much impressed with the fine organ-playing of John Wainwright, composer of the tune 'Christians, awake!', then deputy-organist of the Collegiate Church, which is now the cathedral. (Some books of reference wrongly give Robert Wainwright as the organist who influenced him; but this is impossible, as Robert Wainwright was only a child seven or eight years old when Bates was a schoolboy at Manchester.) John Wainwright's 'grand style of organ-playing' was the model upon which Bates formed his own ideals in that direction, with the result that he became an excellent organist.

He remained less than two years at Manchester Grammar School, because on August 2, 1756, he obtained a scholarship at Eton College. Upon his arrival at Eton, his love for music received a considerable check, if indeed for a time it was not entirely quenched, as it was then contrary to the rules for a boy on the foundation to use any musical instrument. Young Bates 'remained in this state of musical privation for some months,' as a biographer puts it, 'and had no other means of practising than by playing imaginary keys on the table, which for a considerable time was his custom every day.' Later on, however, he had a chance of playing on the organ in the College Chapel, when his talent for music was made known to Mr. George Graham, one of the assistant masters. This kind man, who possessed a harpsichord, invited Joah to his rooms, 'and finding what an extraordinary performer he was, obtained permission for him to pursue his musical studies, accommodated him with the use of his instrument, and procured him liberty to play on the College organ at his leisure hours.' The organist of the College at that time was Edward Webb, who also held the organistship of St. George's Chapel, Windsor. It should not be forgotten that Dr. Arne, like Joah Bates, was an Etonian.

On August 2, 1756, Bates was nominated for a scholarship at King's College, Cambridge, but he was not admitted to the College till May 4, 1760. In the meantime he had entered Christ's College. He competed for one of the Craven University Scholarships against ten picked men of the University, and was successful, his fellow-victor being the celebrated Thomas Zouch, of Trinity, the divine and antiquary. He took his B.A. degree in 1764, M.A. in 1767, and contributed some Latin hexameters to the Cambridge verses on the Peace of 1763. Seven years later he was elected a Fellow, and soon after a tutor of King's College. Bates became a man of mark at Cambridge, his society being eagerly sought after. Dr. Smith, Master of Trinity and author of a well-known treatise on 'Harmonics,' took a particular fancy to him, making him not only a welcome and frequent guest at the Master's Lodge, but leaving him a legacy. Smith also gave him lessons in harmony and in the study of acoustics. In the practical side of music Bates made himself indispensable at the University. Not only was he a fine performer on the harpsichord, but he warmly championed the works of Handel. He excelled as a conductor, and as long as he remained at Cambridge 'he performed the part of Coryphæus at all public and private concerts.' It was at his instigation and under his energetic sway that the first oratorio performance ever given north of the Trent took place, the occasion being the opening of a new organ at his native town, Halifax, on which occasion Herschel, afterwards the great astronomer, led the violins.

One of Bates's pupils at King's was a son of the Earl of Sandwich, a notorious nobleman to whom is due the use of the term sandwich as applied to a certain convenient edible. The Earl was very fond of music. At Hinchbrook, his place near Huntingdon, he regularly devoted one night a week to it. In a year and a half he had managed to gather together an orchestra of sixty to seventy performers from the towns and villages round. He caused six oratorios to be performed on six successive nights by the same executants, each work having been previously rehearsed in the morning of each day. After the performance supper was served, and after supper glees were sung. The Earl played the drums, and it is recorded by a guest at those music-makings that 'his Lordship constantly animated the whole by his own personal assistance, keeping everybody in the best order and in the best humour; submitting himself at the same time to the discipline of the orchestra with the most scrupulous obedience.' Bates opened Snetzler's organ in St. Martin's Church, Leicester (in 1774), on which occasion Lord Sandwich played the drums, and Squire Scroope, of Coleby, Lincolnshire, performed on the trumpet. The latter gentleman had a very irascible temper, and at this said organ opening 'he knocked out, by a blow, not a blast, of his trumpet all the front teeth of a reverend gentleman who had said something to irritate him!'

In connection with a concert which was given by Lord Sandwich in Christ's Hall, Cambridge, for the benefit of Ximenes, a Spanish musician, the following verses were written:

Now the masters all mount in a terrible row,
And tuned is each fiddle and rosin'd each bow,
And Giardini, when got in his tantrums and fits,
Frights the poor dilettanti quite out of their wits.

At the harpsichord now Joah Bates takes his place,
Tho' he casts a sheep's eye at his dear double bass;
To the heartstrings it grieves him to quit it so soon,
For though he mayn't play it, he'll put it in tune.

But when he begins to sprawl over a chorus,
And lays the whole matter so clearly before us,
No hearer so stupid but soon understands,
He's full son of Briareus, and heir to his hands.

Lord Sandwich meantime, ever active and steady,
Eyes the drums with impatience, and cries, 'Arn't you ready?'

Knows who are the alert, and who always ask pardon,
And who are the men must be fetched from the garden.

When the band is all marshalled from front to the rear,
And Miss Ray and Norris and Busy appear;
When impatience to start shines in every man's face, Steals in Dr. Shepherd* a-tuning his bass.

But now hushed is each noise, and on each raptur'd ear,
Break such sounds as the angels stand list'n'ing to hear;
Handel rouses, and hearing his own Thunder roar,
Looks downward from Heaven, and calls out encore.

* Master of Christ's.

Bates left Cambridge upon receiving a small appointment, worth £100 a year, in the Post Office, secured to him through the influence of Lord Sandwich, First Lord of the Admiralty, whose private secretary he had become. He soon exchanged this post for the more lucrative one of a Commissioner of the Victualling Office, on Tower Hill, where he resided, his house becoming the resort of persons of the highest rank. This was in 1776, the year when a committee of noblemen and gentlemen founded the Ancient Concerts, or, to give them their formal title, 'The Concert of Antient Music.' Joah Bates was appointed conductor, an office he held, except for two years, until 1793. For nineteen years the concerts were given at the New Rooms, Tottenham Street, Tottenham Court Road, one of the rules being 'that no music composed within the previous twenty years should be performed.' A full band took part, and some of the most eminent singers of the day appeared. The terms of subscription were fixed at five guineas for twelve weekly performances, and the music for each concert was selected by the directors in rotation. When in 1785 the Royal Family began to attend the concerts they were called 'The King's Concerts.' To show his interest in the performances King George III. sometimes wrote out the programmes in his own hand. We give a facsimile of one of these royal documents:

In the year 1780 Bates married his former pupil, the gifted Miss Sarah Harrop, with whom he is said to have received between £7,000 and £8,000. She was born of very humble parents in Lancashire, and worked for some time at a factory in Halifax, her future husband's native town. On one occasion when she sang in public there, Dr. Howard, of Leicester, prophesied that 'she would one day throw all the English, nay, even the Italian female singers far behind her.' The Sandwich Catch Club thereupon deputed Dr. Howard to bring the factory-girl to London. She there studied oratorio and English songs under Joah Bates and Italian vocalization under Sacchini. Her progress was very rapid, and she became one of the most successful concert and Festival vocalists of her day. Lord Mount Edgcumbe, who frequently heard her sing in private and in public, said 'Her voice was perhaps not so celestial as Mrs. Sheridan's' (Dr. Burney called Mrs. Sheridan and Mrs. Bates 'exquisite and darling singers') 'but was nevertheless one of the finest quality; full, rich, and commanding; of great compass, flexibility, and power. . . . I have known her to go out upon a staircase and there sing without accompaniment the simple ballad "Shepherds, I have lost my love," making the whole house ring with the volume of her voice, which came over the ear with a most beautiful and almost magical effect.' Although she was pre-eminent in her interpretation of sacred music, which she sang with great feeling, she was hardly less successful in Italian airs, while her most famous English song was Purcell's 'Mad Bess.'

Miss Seward, the authoress, and known as 'The Swan of Lichfield,' in a letter dated June 5, 1786, says: 'I breakfasted with Mr. Bates and heard his seraphic wife excel, in several of Handel's finest airs, Mara and every other syren. I observed to him that Mara (according to the custom of the time) put too much gold fringe and tassels upon that solemn robe of melody, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." "Do not say gold, madam," he replied, "it was despicable tinsel." There can be no doubt that Mrs. Bates may be regarded as one of the greatest of English vocalists, and it is pleasant to know that her success gave a great impetus to the cultivation of music among factory girls in the North of England. May there not be to-day some Sarah Harrops, working hard for their daily bread, who are only awaiting an opportunity to become known as queens of song?

The chief event in the life of Joah Bates was his conductorship and general managership of the Handel Commemoration to celebrate the centenary of the composer's birth. The date was wrong by one year (it should have been held in 1785), but, as Rockstro says, 'the act of homage was nobly supported.' Moreover, the event was a most important one in the history of English Musical Festivals, it being the first celebration of the kind on so large and magnificent a scale. Burney's 'Account'* furnishes a most valuable and indispensable history of this mighty music-making. He thus gives the origin of this great Festival, which received its inception at Bates's own house:

In a conversation between lord viscount Fitzwilliam, sir Watkins Williams Wynn, and Joah Bates, esquire, commissioner of the Victualling-Office, the beginning of last year, 1783, at the house of the latter, after remarking that the number of eminent musical performers of all kinds, both vocal and instrumental, with which London abounded, was far greater than in any other city of Europe, it was lamented that there was no public periodical occasion for collecting and consolidating them into one band; by which means a performance might be exhibited on so grand and magnificent a scale as no other part of the world could equal. The birth and death of HANDEL naturally occurred to three such enthusiastic admirers of that great master, and it was immediately recollected that the next (now the present) year, would be a proper time for the introduction of such a custom: as it formed a complete century since his birth, and an exact quarter of a century since his decease.

The Governors of the Musical Fund and the Directors of the Concert of Antient Music promised their practical co-operation in carrying out the proposal. The patronage of the King was secured and application made to the Bishop of Rochester (also Dean of Westminster) for the use of Westminster Abbey. He, 'finding that the scheme was honoured with the patronage of his majesty, readily consented,' only stipulating that some of the proceeds should be given to the Westminster Infirmary, as the Festival 'would interfere with the annual benefit' (sic), by inference held in the Abbey, for that excellent institution. Accordingly the first day's profits were to be equally divided between the Infirmary and the Royal Society of Musicians, the latter organization to receive the entire profits arising from all the subsequent performances. Mr. James Wyatt, the architect, was requested, according to Burney, 'to furnish plans for the necessary decorations of the Abbey; drawings of which, having been shown to his Majesty, were approved.' The general idea was to produce the effect of a royal musical chapel, with the orchestra terminating one end, and the accommodations for the Royal Family, the other.' The illustration which we give on page 17—very slightly reduced from the original sketch by Edward F. Burney, contributed to his father's 'Account' of the Commemoration—shows that the orchestra was built up against the great West window and door of the Abbey. We also give the plan of a section of the orchestra showing the disposition of some of Bates's principal performers:

'All [preliminary] difficulties,' records Burney, 'real and imaginary, were happily obviated by Mr. Commissioner Bates, the conductor of this great enterprise; for this gentleman, who had so long made the various works of so great and fertile a genius his particular study, selected the pieces, collected, collated, and corrected the books; and with a diligence and zeal, which nothing but enthusiasm could inspire, after the idea was suggested, totally devoted every moment of his leisure to its advancement and completion.' For this instance of enthusiasm for Handel, if for nothing else, should the name of Joah Bates be honoured and held in remembrance.

The five performances took place as follows in the year 1784:

DATE.	PLACE.	PROGRAMME.
May 26.	Westminster Abbey	Miscellaneous.
" 27.	The Pantheon	Ditto (mostly secular).
" 29.	Westminster Abbey	'The Messiah.'
June 3.	"	Miscellaneous.
" 10.	"	'The Messiah.'

The last two were extra performances 'By Command' of 'His Majesty' (June 3) and 'Her Majesty' (June 5), both of whom honoured the Festival with their presence on nearly all the days. Burney gives an amusing account of the eagerness evinced by the audience to obtain admittance into the Abbey at the first performance:

Early in the morning, the weather being very favourable, persons of all ranks quitted their carriages with impatience and apprehension, lest they should not obtain seats, and presented themselves at the several doors of Westminster Abbey, which were advertised to be opened at Nine o'clock; but the doorkeepers not having taken their posts, and the Orchestra not being wholly finished, or, perhaps, the rest of the Abbey quite ready for the reception of the audience, till near Ten o'clock; such a croud of ladies and gentlemen were assembled together as became very formidable and terrific to each other, particularly the female part of the expectants; for some of these being in full dress, and every instant more and more incommoded and alarmed, by the violence of those who pressed forward, in order to get near the door, screamed; others fainted; and all were dismayed and apprehensive of fatal consequences: as many of the most violent, among the gentlemen, threatened to break open the doors; a measure, which if adopted, would, probably, have cost many of the most feeble and helpless their lives; as they must, infallibly, have been thrown down, and trampled on, by the robust and impatient part of the croud.

The band and chorus at the Abbey totalled 506 performers (exclusive of the organist). The orchestra was thus constituted :

From the above figures it will be observed, that there were only eight more chorus singers than instrumentalists. Burney gives the following interesting information concerning two instruments in the band :

In order to render the band as powerful and complete as possible, it was determined to employ every species of instrument that was capable of producing grand effects in a great orchestra, and spacious building. Among these, the Sacbut, or Double Trumpet, was sought ; but so many years had elapsed since it had been used in this kingdom, that, neither the instrument, nor a performer upon it, could easily be found. It was, however, discovered, after much useless enquiry, not only here, but by letter, on the continent, that in his Majesty's military band there were six musicians who played the three several species of the sacbut ; tenor, base, and double base.

The 'Sacbut, or Double Trumpet' above referred to is, of course, the trombone. The next quotation, referring to the double bassoon, is no less interesting :

The Double Bassoon, which was so conspicuous in the Orchestra and powerful in its effect, is likewise a tube of sixteen feet. It was made with the approbation of Mr. Handel, by Stainsby, the Flute-maker, for the coronation of his late majesty, George the Second. The late ingenious Mr. Lampe, author of the justly admired Music of the Dragon of Wantley, was the person intended to perform on it ; but, for want of a proper reed, or for some other cause, at present unknown, no use was made of it, at that time ; nor, indeed, though it has been often attempted, was it ever introduced into any band in England, till now, by the ingenuity and perseverance of Mr. Ashley, of the Guards.

Parke, the oboist, in his 'Musical Memoirs,' wrote very satirically concerning this double bassoon, to which he refers as having been 'newly-invented.' He says :

This instrument, which rested on a stand, had a sort of flue affixed to the top of it, similar (with the exception of smoke) to that of a Richmond steam-boat. I am ignorant, however, whether it produced any tone, or whether it was placed in the orchestra to terminate the prospect. The name of this double bass and gigantic instrument, which was only fit to be grasped by the monster Polypheusus, did not transpire, and the double bassoon, which had never been heard, was never again seen after these performances were ended !

Joah Bates 'conducted' the performance from the keyboard of a harpsichord, its keys being connected with the organ placed at the back of the orchestra. Concerning the organ Burney says :

The excellent Organ, erected at the west end of the Abbey, for the commemoration performances only, is the workmanship of the ingenious Mr. Samuel Green, of Islington. It was fabricated for the cathedral of Canterbury, but before its departure for the place of its destination, it was permitted to be opened in the capital on this memorable occasion. The keys of communication with the harpsichord, at which Mr. Bates, the conductor, was seated, extended nineteen feet from the body of the organ, and twenty feet seven inches below the perpendicular of the set of keys by which it is usually played. Similar keys were first contrived in this country for Handel himself, at his Oratorios ; but to convey them to so great a distance from the instrument, without rendering the touch impracticably heavy, required uncommon ingenuity and mechanical resources.

The late Mr. A. J. Hipkins—a most reliable authority on such matters—was of opinion that the keyboard at which Bates presided (see the illustration on page 17) served two purposes—playing on the harpsichord and on the organ, 'inasmuch as the organised harpsichord or claviorganum was frequently made use of during the 18th century and, indeed, long before.' He refers to a very fine claviorganum, made by Crang in 1745, which consisted of a harpsichord, and beneath it an apparatus of bellows and organ pipes, which were coupled in several registers to the harpsichord keyboard, so that at will both parts of the instrument might be used, or either. Now if a harpsichord could have an attachment of this kind, it is possible that the Abbey organ, or a portion of it, could by means of tracker communication be brought on to the harpsichord keyboard, and the measurements given by Burney of such a communication, of 19 feet from the body of the organ and 20 feet 7 inches below the perpendicular, seem to favour this view of the case.

Bates seems to have done remarkably well in the generalship of his forces. He did not escape the jibes of rhymesters, e.g., the following extract from Andrew Macdonald's 'Monitory Madrigals to Musical Amateurs' (1791) :

Vice-Presidents of Westminster's grand choir,
Your order in the bills I much admire ;
Splendid at top appears the Duke of Leeds,
And downward, dwindling still, the list proceeds,
Till at the tail, ridiculous to relate,
We pop upon the name of Joah Bates !

But how ? why ? wherefore ? boots not to enquire—
In Hall of Tot'nham Street, this doughty squire
Now despot reigns of fiddlers, pipers, singers.
And soon at Westminster, o'er scores of Handel,
He means the organ-keys to dance and dandle,
Proving his volubility of fingers.

At the close of the performances George III., who was very fond of music, showed his appreciation of Bates's conducting skill by presenting him with his own gold-mounted stick and a ring containing a miniature portrait of Handel. At the same time the King offered Bates a Baronetcy, which honour was, however, declined.*

Parke tells a good story of Bates in connection with the Handel Commemoration. At a rehearsal Bates received a letter from Reinhold, the principal bass soloist, stating that he was so hoarse that he could not attend. This communication 'reached the ears of old Bellamy, one of the chorus singers, whose ambition prompted him to make an offer of his services to Mr. Bates in the following words :

"Mr. Bates,—Sir, as Mr. Reinhold can't sing, if you please I will stand in his shoes." To which Mr. Bates replied: "Mr. Bellamy, I will not trouble you, as Mr. Reinhold's shoes won't fit you."

It may not be without interest to give the entire balance sheet of this first Commemoration Handel Festival, whereby the munificent sums of £6,000 and £1,000 accrued to the funds of the Royal Society of Musicians (The Society of Decayed Musicians) and the Westminster Hospital respectively.

Subsequent Handel Festivals were held at Westminster Abbey in 1785, 1786, 1787, 1790, and 1791. On the last of these occasions Haydn was present. He occupied a seat near the King's box, and at the Hallelujah Chorus, when all, with the King, rose to their feet, the old 'Papa' wept like a child and exclaimed in overwhelming emotion 'He is the Master of us all!'

Two interesting anecdotes connected with these Handel Festivals at Westminster Abbey must be recorded. The first is related by the late Dr. E. J. Hopkins, to whom Sir George Smart told the incident. The late Temple organist says :

The late Sir George Smart, at the time of the Handel Festival in Westminster Abbey in 1784, was a youthful chorister of the Chapel Royal of eight years of age; and it fell to his lot to turn over the leaves of the scores of the music for Joah Bates, who, besides officiating as conductor, presided at the organ. In the songs Bates frequently supplied chords of two or three notes from the figures on a soft-toned unison-stop. The boy looked first at the book, then at the conductor's fingers, and seemed somewhat puzzled, which being perceived by Bates, he said, 'My little fellow, you seem rather curious to discover my authority for the chords I have just been playing'; to which observation young Smart cautiously replied, 'Well, I don't see the notes in the score'; whereupon Mr. Bates added, 'Very true; but Handel himself used constantly to supply the harmonies in precisely the same way I have just been doing, as I have myself frequently witnessed.'

Reference has been made to the presence of Haydn at the Festival of 1791. Two other musicians of distinction as boys also found a place in the Abbey on that occasion—Bridgetower, the violinist, and Hummel, both aged twelve. Bridgetower—whose name was written by Beethoven, Brischdower—once had the honour of playing the 'Kreutzer' Sonata with the composer thereof. He and Hummel, both clad in scarlet coats, sat one each side of Joah Bates at the Abbey performance and pulled out the stops of the organ for him.

A serious calamity befell Bates on March 2, 1791, when the Albion Mills, which he had projected, on the South side of Blackfriars Bridge, were destroyed by fire. He was so sanguine of the success of the mills that he had invested the whole of his own savings and his wife's fortune in the venture. This misfortune so preyed upon his mind 'as at length to produce a complaint on his chest, which finally proved fatal and brought him to the grave.' He died at his house in John Street, Gray's Inn, on June 8, 1799, aged fifty-nine. His burial place is at present unknown.

The official appointments held by Bates subsequent to those already mentioned were successively a Commissioner of Customs and a Director of Greenwich Hospital. He was a member of the Madrigal Society, and a Vice-President of both Middlesex and Westminster Hospitals. Fétis—who calls him Jean Bates—wrongly attributes several compositions to him instead of to William Bates! Eitner ('Quellen-Lexikon') in correcting Fétis as to the compositions, repeats the error of the Christian name by calling him (Bates) 'John'!

Bates is spoken of as 'a domestic individual; he was amiable in his manners, pleasing in his conversation, and of considerable scholastic attainments.' Another account refers to his 'commanding manner, station in society, and acknowledged judgment.' In regard to his conducting achievements, 'he suffered no rival near his throne, no leader disputed with him the time of a composition, no singer contested with him the right of choice: he was absolute, but his manners were as courteous as his determination was fixed.' His wife, who was a very beautiful woman, is said to have 'added as much harmony to his life as melody to his music.' She died, age unknown, in London, on December 11, 1814.

The portrait of Mr. and Mrs. Joah Bates, which forms one of our special supplements, is from the original painting of the pair in the possession of Mr. Alfred Littleton. It is painted by Francis Cotes, R.A. (1725 (?)—1770), one of the artists who memorialized King George III. for the establishment of the Royal Academy of Arts, of which he became one of the first Academicians. Cotes (not Coates, as the name is sometimes given) was eminent for his portraits in crayons, in which branch of the art he surpassed all his predecessors. He also painted in oils with considerable ability, one of the best specimens of his genius in this direction being the aforesaid special supplement picture which contains the pleasing features of Mr. and Mrs. Joah Bates.

MEDELSSOHN AND HIS ENGLISH PUBLISHER.

SOME UNPUBLISHED LETTERS.

Mendelssohn, of all composers, is the letter-writer par excellence. The number of letters he wrote during his short life is quite extraordinary. To perfect diction—even when expressing himself in a foreign language—he added caligraphic beauty: thus his communications are replete with that perfect refinement and finish which characterize his compositions. The perusal of nearly seventy letters addressed to the late Mr. Edward Buxton, formerly proprietor of the business of Messrs. Ewer and Co., has furnished proof that the composer of 'Elijah' invested even business letters with a charm seldom found in such prosaic communications. Readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES may have an opportunity of forming their own judgment on this matter in the following extracts from the correspondence above referred to: in reading them it should be borne in mind that all the letters are in English, and that the quotations are given verbatim et literatim.

The first letter, which must be given in extenso, is addressed 'Edward Buxton Esquire, care of Messrs J. J. Ewer and Co. 1, Bowchurchyard, London':

Leipzig, 25 Febr., 1840.

Sir,—Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel told me that you expressed the wish, during your stay here, of publishing some of my works in your country. I felt very much honoured by this communication and obliged for your kind intentions, and as I think of publishing towards the end of next month a new grand Trio for the Pianoforte with accompts. of Violin and Violoncello, which I should like to lay before the English public, I beg to ask whether you would have the copyright of it? I would be very much obliged if you would give me a speedy answer and tell me if the price of 10 guineas would be convenient to you, and if you like to hear from time to time from me when I have new compositions for the Piano.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLODY.

The above letter does not agree with the statement made in the first edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (vol. iv., p. 630*b*) that Benedict suggested Buxton's name as a publisher to Mendelssohn. The Trio referred to is that for Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello in D minor (Op. 49). A month later Mendelssohn sends a copy of the Trio, saying that he is glad that Buxton will publish it, and that, according to the publisher's request, he has arranged the violin part for the flute, but only the slow movement and scherzo, 'perhaps under the title "Andante et Rondo pour Piano, Flute, et Basse (tiré de l'œuvre 49)" &c., &c., as I am almost sure that these two movements, even separately, will be played by amateurs with pleasure in that shape, while the first and last movements are more difficult, and less fit for a flute arrangement.' He leaves the decision with Buxton, but this flute arrangement is 'not to interfere with the original form,' and adds that Madame Dulcken (Ferdinand David's sister) wrote to him from London that she wanted to perform the Trio. This she did at a Quartet Concert given at the Hanover Square Rooms on March 25, 1841, her co-artists being Messrs. Henry Blagrove and Charles Lucas. The new work—called by the Musical World 'the star of the evening'—then received its first performance in England.

It would seem as if the publisher was not dissatisfied with his ten-guinea investment, as in two letters written by Mendelssohn in February and May, 1841, he says that he has not been able to write a new Trio but that 'whenever it will be completed I shall be happy to send it to you'; and (in the May letter) that he is 'going to publish a new book of 6 "Lieder ohne Worte" [Op. 53] during next month,' for the English copyright of which he asks 15 guineas. In a letter (dated June 11, 1841) accompanying the MS. of the 'Songs without words' Mendelssohn also sends a song 'which,' he tells Mr. Buxton, 'you may publish if you like and pay for it whatever you like.' Most generous composer! And what was the song? 'The Garland,' a setting of Moore's poem beginning 'By Celina's arbour all the night'!

A letter, dated Berlin, 8 Sept., 1841, is important by reason of its opera reference. Mendelssohn says: 'It has been since long one of my greatest wishes to write an Opera, but many attempts of getting a poem, as I fancy it ought to be, have failed, and yet I cannot give up the idea.' He adds that he is about to publish the '17 Variations Sérieuses' for pianoforte, 'which I should like very much to make known to the English public: this popular pianoforte composition he offers to Mr. Buxton for the modest sum of eight guineas.

'Antigone' is the subject of a letter, dated 'Denmark Hill, 8 July, 1842,' in which he cannot send Buxton the score of the work as Moscheles has possession of it. He says that the choruses are to be tried at Moscheles's house 'tomorrow evening at nine o'clock,' and adds: 'if you are a singer yourself perhaps could I ask you to take your part in them (as there will be nothing to listen to, I am afraid), but yet you will be enabled to form an idea of the work, its style, length, etc., etc.' Later in the month he fixes the price for the English copyright—£30, and says: 'Mr. Anderson [then Master of the Musick to the Queen] spoke to me about a performance at the Palace, and Mr. Chorley about one in public; perhaps you may have an opportunity of taking the advice of these gentlemen; and at any rate I beg you will let Klingemann look over the translation if you have it done, and if you want to publish the thing at all.' Later on he expresses great delight with the 'masterly' style of the translation by Bartholomew—the translator par excellence, and says: 'I hope you duly received my parcel with those grand letters to the Queen and Prince Albert, and the not less important ones to Messrs. Klingemann and Moscheles.' He fixes the price of the English without any alteration. I would fix the price of the Sonata at 12 guineas, and that of the Songs at 10 guineas,' adding, 'if that is agreeable to you.' As these half-dozen four-part songs included 'The Woods,' 'O hills! O vales!', 'The Nightingale,' and 'The Hunting Song,' no doubt the publisher considered that the price of ten guineas was 'perfectly agreeable'! In a subsequent letter he offers no objection to the title 'Vocal Quartets' nor to 'im Freien zu singen' being translated 'To be sung without accompaniment.' In December, 1843, he sends Buxton the 'MS. of three pieces for two performers on the piano—a Scherzo, Notturmo, and March [the Wedding March] from my music to Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.' He asks '15 guineas as the price, if you wish to have the copyright of the whole for England' [arrangement and full-score]: the price of the whole arrangement (consisting of nine other pieces) 'would be the same again as those 3.' In the next letter to Buxton, he says:

I can only repeat that I shall always be glad to offer you what manuscripts I have for publication, and I thank you very sincerely for what you say on that subject.

MENDELSSOHN'S 'ANTIGONE' AT COVENT GARDEN IN 1845.

copyright of 'Antigone' at twenty guineas, but does not think that the work should be first performed by the Philharmonic Society, adding, 'upon the whole I think that some parts of my music might be performed with good effect at concerts, after the whole as a whole has become known to the public.'

An extract from the letter of April 30, 1843, having reference to the 'Festgesang'—which includes the familiar strain associated with 'Hark! the herald angels sing,' a strain which Mendelssohn says 'will never do to sacred words'!—was printed in THE MUSICAL TIMES of December, 1897 (p. 810), to which the reader is referred. On June 29 of that year (1843) he sends the MS. of his Second Sonata for Pianoforte and Violoncello (in D, Op. 58), and a book of four-part songs. He wishes to see the English translations of the latter before they are engraved, and 'the title and dedication are to be translated quite literally,

In January, 1844, Mendelssohn sends the pianoforte arrangement of the 'Walpurgis Night,' saying, 'I hope the price of £12 will be convenient to you for the work.' He adds that the English words will go to the music without any alterations, and in a postscript to a subsequent letter he says: 'Pray send the enclosed to Mr. Gauntlett, the organ player, whose direction I do not know. He lived somewhere near Blackfriars Bridge, at the same house with his brother, the Lawyer.

Although the next letter in the correspondence was published in The Times ten years ago, it is so important, as bearing upon the relations between Mendelssohn and Schumann, that it must find a place here. This communication speaks for itself:

Berlin, 27 Jan., 44.

Dear Sir,—My friend Dr. Schumann wishes for an opportunity to publish his new work, 'Paradise and the Peri,' in your country, and has desired me to write you my impression of his work, while I think he intends communicating himself to you his ideas about its publication.

I must accordingly tell you that I have read and heard this new work of Dr. Schumann with the greatest pleasure, that it has afforded me a treat which made me easily foretell the unanimous applause it has gained at the two performances at Leipsic and the performance at Dresden (which took place last month), and that I think it a very important and noble work, full of many eminent beauties. As for expression and poetical feeling, it ranks very high; the choruses are as effective and as well written as the solo parts are melodious and winning. In short, it is a worthy musical translation of that beautiful inspiration of your great poet Moore; and I think the feeling of being indebted to that poet for the charm that pervades the whole music has induced the composer to wish you, countrymen to become acquainted with his work. He intends visiting England next year, when I am sure he and his music will be received as they so highly deserve.

I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,
FELIX MENDELSSOHN-BARTHOLDY.

The proposed visit of Schumann to England was never carried out. His 'Paradise and the Peri' was not performed in this country till twelve years after the date of the foregoing letter—at the Philharmonic Concert of June 23, 1856, conducted by Sterndale Bennett, when Madame Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt sang the principal soprano music and Queen Victoria was present. The work, however, had been twice previously performed in Dublin, on February 10 and March 8, 1854, under the direction of Mr. William Glover.

ANTIGONE IN CUSTODY.
(From 'Punch,' January 18, 1845.)

On February 1, 1844, Mendelssohn sends the completion of his Midsummer Night's Dream music—of which he is afraid that 'it will be a little difficult' to make a pianoforte arrangement for one performer—and a new book of 'Songs without Words,' price 15 guineas, 'which,' he says, 'I hope will be convenient to you.' This book (Op. 62) contained the Funeral March and the Spring Song, the latter composed on June 1, 1842, at Denmark Hill during his visit to the Beneckes. A pleasant reference to England is made in a communication dated 'Berlin, 5 March, 1844':

Since yesterday I am certain that I shall go to England and need not tell you how great a pleasure I anticipate from a stay in your country! I intend to arrive towards the end of April and to bring several new things, and to stay several months, and to be very happy in old England!

In a subsequent letter he states his intention of bringing with him 'the Beethoven pieces which Artaria is going to publish.' He goes on to say: 'My friend (Prof. Fischhoff) writes me also that one of those pieces, a Chorus of Monks, has created so much sensation at Vienna that they were obliged to have it three times repeated. I hope for your (and every musician's sake) that the impression will be the same all over the world.' The 'Prof. Fischhoff' here referred to was the great authority on Beethoven; the pieces were the 'Ruins of Athens' music. Mendelssohn not only brought the pieces with him but had them performed, under his direction, at the Philharmonic concert of July 8, 1844, on which occasion his 'Walpurgis Night' was also performed for the first time in this country. The 'Chorus of Monks' mentioned in the above extract is given in the Philharmonic programme as 'Chorus of Dervises' (sic). Concerning the English translation Mendelssohn had previously written to Buxton as follows:—

[London], June 29, 1844.

In looking over Mr. Bartholomew's translation of the 'Ruins of Athens' (which I like very much), I find only one piece which I think must be altered—even for the Philharmonic performance. I mean the last piece which I here subjoin. The statue of Shakespeare must really not be brought in; I think not on the stage, I am sure not on the Philharmonic bill. But then the whole of the preceding verses must be altered, and I beg you will have it done. Pray let it be a mere invocation to Apollo (the 1st verse might stand) to give a favourable sign, and leave it in dark which sign is meant. Any words of invocation, of sacred solemnity, and at the end of an accomplished vow will do. I only show the rest of the words tomorrow at the Philharmonic meeting, and will have the room in the programme kept open until I hear from you.

On November 20, 1844, he writes: 'I am going to publish the sacred solo for a soprano ["Hear my prayer"] composed for Mr. Bartholomew . . . and have made some important alterations, particularly in the accompaniment here and there.' Four days later he writes an interesting letter on the subject of his 'Antigone':

I am very glad to hear that the Antigone is to be performed at Covent Garden, although the mere sound of 'Antigone at Covent Garden' has something startling in itself!

It is utterly impossible for me to come over, although I sincerely and truly wish I could come! But the music is safe in Macfarren's hands. Pray have very good solo-voices to sing the Quartet, and a very powerful Chorus, and let them sing the Choral Recitatives with great energy and not in time [doubly underlined], but quite as a common Recitative, following each other and thus keeping together. It sounds as if impossible, but is very easy thus.

'Antigone,' with Mendelssohn's music, was produced in England at Covent Garden Theatre on January 2, 1845; G. A. Macfarren conducted the performance, and his brother John painted the only scene. The representation seems to have afforded Mendelssohn much amusement. Writing to his sister Fanny at Rome, on March 25, 1845, he says:

See if you cannot find Punch for Jan. 18. It contains an account of Antigone at Covent Garden, with illustrations, especially a view of the chorus which has made me laugh for three days. The Chorus-master, with his plaid trousers shewing underneath, is a masterpiece, and so is the whole thing, and most amusing. I hear wonderful things of the performance, particularly of the chorus. Only fancy, that during the Bacchus chorus there is a regular ballet with all the ballet-girls.

In a letter to Buxton on the same subject he says: 'But pray did the dancers come on and hop during the chorus to Bacchus? How absurd that must have been if I understand you right.'

The remaining letters of this composer-publisher correspondence must be reserved till next month: in the meantime we give a facsimile of the Punch sketch which made Mendelssohn 'laugh for three days,' and another drawing from the same source.

TO MR. WILLIAM LAWES,

Who had then newly set a song of mine, in the year 1635.

Verse makes heroic virtue live,
But you can life to verses give.
As when in open air we blow,
The breath (though strain'd) sounds flat and low,
But if a trumpet take the blast,
It lifts it high, and makes it last;
So in your airs our numbers drest,
Make a shrill sally from the breast
Of nymphs, who singing what is penn'd,
Our passions to themselves commend;
While love, victorious with thy art,
Governs at once their voice and heart.

You by the help of tune and time
Can make that song which was but rhyme,
Noy pleading, no man doubts the cause,
Or questions verses set by Lawes.

As a church-window, thick with paint,
Lets in a light but dim and faint;
So others with division hide
The light of sense, the poet's pride;
But you alone may truly boast
That not a syllable is lost:
The writer's and the setter's skill
At once the ravish'd ears do fill.

Let those which only warble long,
And gargle in their throats a song,
Content themselves with U, Re, Mi:
Let words and sense be set by thee.

EDMUND WALLER.

The prize of fifty guineas offered by Mrs. Lewis Hill for a pianoforte quintett has been awarded to Mr. Hamilton Harty, to whom congratulations are due. The successful competitor has hitherto won his spurs as a remarkably skilful accompanist, but in regard to composition he is an unknown man; therefore it will be very interesting if this quintet composition will have been the means of 'discovering' him. We understand that nearly forty compositions were sent in for the competition. The adjudicators were Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Dr. F. H. Cowen, and Mr. Benno Schönberger.

The death of Mr. Arthur Giffard Whiteside Johnstone, musical critic of The Manchester Guardian, is recorded with much regret. The sad event took place, after a week's illness, at his residence, Victoria Park, Manchester, on December 16. Born in 1861, Mr. Arthur Johnstone was educated at Radley School and at Oxford University (Keble and Balliol Colleges), where he took his Arts degree. At one time he thought of becoming a solo pianist and entered the Cologne Conservatoire and studied elsewhere in Germany with that intent, but the lack of digital facility caused him to abandon the career of a professional musician. During a wide experience of foreign travel, including Russia, he became an excellent linguist. On more than one occasion, when abroad, and the funds were low, he paid his way by public exhibitions of his conjuring skill, in which from his boyhood he was very adept. He subsequently entered the scholastic profession and for several years did good work as a master at the Edinburgh Academy, writing about Nietzsche as a relief to his routine duties. Music, however, became the dominant interest of his life, and in 1896 he was appointed musical critic of The Manchester Guardian, in which widely read journal his carefully written criticisms—often severe and searching, but charged with the sincerity of the highest ideals—had great influence and attracted much attention. Mr. Johnstone was for the past two years the special correspondent in Manchester of THE MUSICAL TIMES, his last contribution appearing on page 812 of our December issue. Much sympathy will be felt for Mrs. Johnstone, to whom he was married only last June.

Professor Niecks contributed some wise and interesting 'General Remarks on Beethoven's Sonatas' at the first of two pianoforte recitals of these masterpieces given at the University Music Class Room on December 1, by Mr. Frederic Lamond, the second recital taking place a week later. We give the first paragraph of the Reid Professor's well expressed and thoughtful criticism on Beethoven's genius:

Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonatas are a world, nay, are a universe comprising many worlds, each of which has its peculiar conformation, chemical constitution, and spiritual character. Of all masters Beethoven is the grandest in form, sublimest in thought, and most passionate in feeling. There never lived another composer who, like him, has understood how to compel tumultuous emotions and heaven-scaling thoughts to submit to the restraining and ordering hand of the musical architect. His edifices, fair and strong, triumphantly defy time and fashion, and fill the beholder with joy, wonder, and awe. Virility, earnestness, sincerity, and elevation of aim speak from every line. And while these qualities evoke our veneration, others engage our affection. His high aims did not prevent his art from keeping in the closest touch with man and nature, and his manliness bore within itself the tenderest and most enthusiastic lovingness. Nor can we overlook his humour, profound and full-blooded, the offspring of love and pity, not of aversion and contempt.

Professor Prout was presented by a number of his former pupils with his portrait, painted by Mr. E. Bert Walker, on November 26, at the offices of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 19, Berners Street. Mr. Edward Chadfield handed the picture to the Professor on behalf of the subscribers. The portrait is to be taken charge of by the Incorporated Society of Musicians during the recipient's lifetime, and after his death, at the desire of the donors, it will be offered to the Trustees of the National Portrait Gallery.

Mr. Herbert Thompson, a former member of St. John's College, Cambridge, writes in reference to the illustrated article in the College which appeared in our last issue:

As an old Johnian it was very pleasant to read your account of the College, in which, after thirty years, I still take a warm, filial interest. I have always felt that from a picturesque point of view it took a high place among the Cambridge Colleges, and I think this is borne out by the excellent photographs you have reproduced. In my time (1874-1877) Dr. G. M. Garrett was of course the leading light of the College in musical matters, and I do not think any musical Johnian will forget his conduct of the music in the Chapel services. He was devoted to his work; and I doubt if he missed half-a-dozen services during his long tenure of the organistship. His accompaniment of the Psalms was the finest I have ever heard, the freest in treatment, yet without a shade of exaggeration or obtrusiveness. I wonder if Dr. Mann, who came to King's at this time, recollects going to a service at St. John's, and his generous admiration of Garrett's accompanying? To watch him play was a delightful experience. His hands slid from manual to manual with an easy certainty I have never known surpassed, and all the while he might be talking in the humorously sarcastic vein that made him a terror to the stupid pupil, while the careless choirboy I have seen wither under his very glance. I believe he imbibed much of the spirit of his master S. S. Wesley, not only in his organ-playing, but in his musicianship and his personal characteristics, though these in no case approached eccentricities. His admiration for Spohr, and the obvious relish with which he would play Bach's 'Forty-eight' were such traits, as well as his quick temper. Then he conducted the College Musical Society, of which Archdeacon Bevan was Secretary in my time, while I filled the humble but necessary office of Librarian. One of our chief efforts was Gluck's 'Orpheus,' in the May term of 1876, which then, I suppose, was not published with an English version of the text, so one had to be extemporized for the occasion by the ready hand of another musical Johnian to whom I must devote a line, if you can give me room for it. This was Richard Pendlebury, who was President of the Musical Society, and an exceptionally brilliant amateur. He was a Senior Wrangler, and 'kept' in delightful rooms over the Combination Room, where, as I was always given to understand, Sterndale Bennett, who had 'entered' at St. John's, had been located. Pendlebury was a capital pianist and a good all-round musician, but increasing deafness turned him into a hermit, and in later years he became a mere wreck of his former self. He did a work which will perpetuate his name at Cambridge by founding the lending library of full scores in the Fitzwilliam Museum, on which he spent a large sum annually, and left it a really fine collection, and, I should think, of great use to the musicians of the University.

I must hark back to Garrett for one more reminiscence that occurs to me. It was in 1882, when Hans Richter was introducing Wagner's later works at the memorable German season at Drury Lane. I persuaded Garrett to accompany me to witness 'Die Meistersinger' for the first time, and it was interesting to note the impression it made upon a musician of more than middle age, brought up in the traditions of the Anglican school, and by no means predisposed to music-drama. His prejudices were against it, but in spite of them he was overcome by the power and vitality of the music. On coming away he said the only thing that disappointed him was the Preislied, observing very justly that as this was the culminating point of the drama one's expectations were not easily satisfied. But when I saw him the next morning the first thing he said was, 'That Preislied has been running through my head all the night!' I remember, too, his pleasure when he saw Richter conduct without gloves! And I often have wondered if he realized the likeness his sharply-cut profile bore to Wagner's!

One hundred years have elapsed since Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony received its first performance. This important event took place towards the end of January, 1805, in a semi-private manner, at one of the concerts given at his own house by Herr von Würth, a wealthy banker of Vienna. The correspondent at the Austrian capital of the Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung, after an extraordinary eulogy of the Symphony in C (No. 1)—'a glorious art-creation' . . . 'an extraordinary wealth of lovely ideas treated in the most splendid and graceful style, with coherence, order, and clearness reigning throughout'—goes on to describe the new work (the 'Eroica') 'as virtually a daring, wild fantasia, of inordinate length, and extreme difficulty of execution. There is no lack of striking and beautiful passages in which the force and talent of the author is obvious; but, on the other hand, the work seems to lose itself in utter confusion . . . The writer is one of Beethoven's warmest admirers, but in the present work he finds very much that is odd and harsh, enormously increasing the difficulty of comprehending the music, and obscuring its unity (Einheit) almost entirely.' He then goes on to praise a symphony of Eberl's, in the same key as the 'Eroica,' which was evidently much more to his taste.

The first actual public performance of the 'Eroica' was that given on Sunday evening, April 7, 1805, at one of Clement's series of concerts in the An-der-Wien Theatre. It was announced as 'A new grand Symphony in Dis' (D sharp), the Viennese nomenclature at that time for E flat. On that occasion Beethoven 'was so good as to conduct'; but at a later performance the composer—at the syncopated passage in the working-out of the Allegro—managed to throw out the orchestra so completely that they had to begin again! The first performance of the Symphony in England was (most probably) that given at one of the 'Vocal Concerts' (so-called) on February 14, 1806, at the Hanover Square Rooms. It was announced thus—

Act II. New Grand Sinfonie MS. for a Full Band . . . Beethoven.

The Prince of Wales (afterwards George IV.) and the Duke of Cambridge not only honoured the concert with their presence, but 'during the Second Act their Royal Highnesses sat on a seat in the room near the orchestra, and heartily joined in the applause, particularly to a New Grand Symphony, by Beethoven.' The musical critics do not seem to have shared the enthusiasm of the royal listeners in their appreciation of the 'Eroica.' Eighteen years after—although the Symphony had in the meantime been several times performed—the critic of the Harmonicon thus delivered himself upon the merits of the work. He said: 'The heroic symphony of Beethoven abounds in traits of genius, and the funeral march, which forms one of the movements, is full of fine dignified feeling: but three-quarters of an hour is too long time for the attention to be fixed on a single piece of music; and in spite of its merit, the termination of it is wished for some minutes before it arrives.' Who would now, in this centenary year, wish to shorten the 'Eroica' by a single semiquaver?

The financial report of the recent Leeds Musical Festival shows that the net profits amounted to only £384 5s. od., the lowest on record. In order that the medical charities of the city may not suffer from this serious fall in the profits, the Committee have taken a sufficient amount from the Reserve Fund to make up a sum of £1,000, to be distributed among the hospitals, &c., of Leeds.

Mr. Richard Peyton, of Birmingham, has given the sum of £10,000 for the foundation of a Chair of Music. The letter of Mr. Peyton, addressed to Mr. Chamberlain, containing his munificent offer, may be placed on record.

Westfield, Nov. 28, 1904.

Dear Mr. Chamberlain,—I address myself to you, as Chancellor of the University of Birmingham, in order to make a proposal which, should it be approved by the authorities of the University, may, I hope, be to the advantage of the University and for the advancement of musical art.

The proposal I have to make arises from the fact that there is at the present time a special opportunity of offering an appointment to a Chair of Music in the University to one of the most eminent of English musicians, whether of the past or the present time; and the offer which I have the honour and pleasure to make is to contribute a sum of £10,000 (ten thousand pounds) for the endowment of such a Chair, the only condition being that it should in the first instance be offered to and accepted by Sir Edward Elgar, Mus. Doc., LL.D. Should that gentleman be willing to accept the position, his name would, I feel sure, at once command universal respect and confidence, and the study of music under his guidance and leadership would in the future ensure a high appreciation elsewhere of the value to be attached to such musical degrees as would be conferred by the Birmingham University.

The city of Birmingham has a certain musical reputation, derived in a great degree from its triennial musical Festivals, which commenced in the year 1768, of which 41 have now been held, and to which the world of music is indebted for the production of considerable numbers of new and important works by composers of many different nationalities, who have been induced by reason of the reputation of the Festivals and the excellence of the performances to compose expressly for Birmingham. Birmingham may also be considered musical by reason of the large numbers of persons who annually, whether as performers or audience, attend the concerts of the Festival, choral, and various other large and important musical societies; and there should be ample scope for the advantages to be derived from a University education, were such obtainable, not only to local students of the art, but also to those whom the reputation of its musical professor would attract from elsewhere.

I have always taken a deep interest in the musical life of the city, and hope that, should my proposal be accepted, the results would enhance the reputation which Birmingham already enjoys, and that in the not distant future it would become one of the most important centres of musical art.

Yours sincerely,

RICHARD PEYTON.

After Mr. Peyton's offer had been accepted by the Council of the University of Birmingham, Sir John Holder generously offered to contribute the sum of £1,000 towards a fund for providing the necessary instruction, which will be supplemental to the Richard Peyton Chair of Music. Sir Edward Elgar has accepted the Professorship. Nothing has yet been settled as to the practical working of the scheme, but it may be assured that the Professor will use every endeavour to make Birmingham an important centre of music, and that he will carry out the trust committed to his charge in a manner worthy of Mr. Peyton's noble benefaction.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie, an honorary freeman of the Musicians' Company, has enabled the Company to found two scholarships which will entitle the holders thereof to free tuition for three years at the Guildhall School of Music. An imperative and commendable condition of the Andrew Carnegie Music Scholarships is that candidates should show special aptitude in sight-reading. Particulars of the Scholarships will be found in our advertisement columns.

The 300th performance of Meyerbeer's 'Les Huguenots' was given at the Royal Opera, Berlin, on November 20, where it was first heard on May 20, 1842. In connection with this recent performance the Börsen-Courier recalls the difficulties against which the opera had at first to contend. At Vienna the name was changed to 'Die Welfen u. die Ghibellinen,' and at Munich, in 1838, the scene of action was located in England, with the title 'Die Anglikaner und Puritaner.' King Friedrich Wilhelm III. was informed that the work would create discord between Catholics and Protestants, hence at Berlin only a private performance of the fourth act was given in the salon of the Princess Augusta of Prussia, with Ungher-Sabatier as Valentine, Mantius as Raoul, and Franz Liszt at the pianoforte. 'Les Huguenots' was originally produced in Paris, without any objection raised by the censorship, under its proper title, on February 21, 1836. The first performance of the opera in England took place at Covent Garden Theatre on June 20 (not April, as stated in 'Grove'), 1842, the representation being given by a German Opera Company which included Staudigl.

Mr. Stuart Wortley, M.P., at a recent distribution of certificates to 'Associated Board' examinees at Sheffield, offered some very good advice to the aspiring composer. He said: 'Let him tell the world, through his music, what he knows and feels of nature, joy, tragedy, and love. Let him dare to be himself, and not be content with formulating the aspirations of others. Let him be sincere, for without sincerity, art cannot exist.' True, true, all perfectly true!

Mr. J. Edward Street, Hon. Secretary of The Mendelssohn Scholarships Foundation, writes:

At the Chamber Concert of The Royal College of Music Patron's Fund, given on December 6, it is worthy of observation that two out of the eight works selected for performance were composed by the late and present "Mendelssohn Scholars"—viz., Three Fantasies for Strings, by Percy Hilder Miles, whose tenure of the Scholarship came to an end in September, 1902, and Concert Piece for Pianoforte and Wind Instruments, by George Dyson, the present Scholar.

It is a great pleasure to the Committee thus to note the success of those who have come under their charge.

The name of Charles Jennens, the compiler of the words of Handel's 'Messiah,' has always been omitted from the title-pages of that work, but in England there has never been any difficulty in tracing the source of the words of that 'sacred oratorio.' Not so, however, in Paris in the year 1784, as the Earl of Mount-Edgumbe records that he heard Madame Mara sing 'I know that my Redeemer liveth,' which was announced in the bills as being 'musique de Handel, paroles de Milton'!

A London newspaper, in giving a report of a 'Hiawatha' concert, says that 'of course "On, away; Awake, Beloved," is one of the gems of the work.' And this is one of the gems of the notice.

This, from a provincial newspaper, is a criticism of a well-known tenor:

His rich voice is beautifully balanced, being as strong on the top notes as in the lower regions.

The recognition accorded to English music on the Continent during the past few years is steadily on the increase, and is perhaps most notably exemplified with regard to the works of Sir Edward Elgar, whose 'Dream of Gerontius' was received some year or two since in several German towns with enthusiasm. Sir Edward recently accepted an invitation to Mainz to hear the production of 'The Apostles' (which was then given for the second time in Germany), and had further the opportunity of listening to the same work at Rotterdam, and to his overture 'In the South' at Cologne. With regard to the performance at Rotterdam Sir Edward has stated that no one had more thoroughly realized his intentions than Mr. Anton Verhey, and that he had never heard a finer interpretation of the part of Judas than that given by H. Van Oort. The Rotterdamsch Nieuwsblad, speaking of this performance, says that :

Edward Elgar is the man of whom his countrymen and others outside England expect that he will free the British national music from the foreign yoke under which it has for two centuries laboured.

Since Elgar's compositions have been known, this is considerably altered even in our country. For, after hearing his compositions, there is but one conclusion to be drawn—that he is a composer of distinct genius and individuality.

Mr. Anton Verhey undertook the enormous task of introducing into our country 'Die Apostel.' All honour to him who will follow his lead.

The Allgemeine Musik Zeitung remarks with regard to the performance of 'In the South' at Cologne :

What an exuberant fantasy speaks out of this score, what warmth of invention, what a healthy happiness in wholehearted, life-enjoying 'fabulating' tones . . . Apart from the quite uncertain programme embodied in the title, we have here to do with a richly contrasted, warm-blooded, and superbly-sounding piece of music which, with all its episodic work, enchains the attention to the end, whether it be by means of extremely ingenious and rich thematic workmanship, striking harmonic changes, brilliant sound-effects, or its tremendous 'swing.' It is significant of the perverted taste of a minute fraction of the public that this work, which is constructed of plastic themes, and extremely clear in spite of all harmonic boldness and richness, was greeted with isolated hisses, which however had the result that the applause of the majority grew warmer and longer.

In the Journal de St. Pétersbourg of November 25 (December 8), 1904, there is a long notice of works performed at the Siliti concerts, among which are the Orchestral 'Variations' of Sir Edward Elgar. The writer, R. Aloys Mooser, considers that they prove that the art of music is not dead in England. These 'Variations,' for him, denote mastery and powerful originality. And later on he says :

He [Elgar] has not only altered his theme rhythmically and objectively, but he has transformed its very essence, continually evolving from it fresh ideas. That phrase which serves as prelude, he breaks up, dismembers it with infinite variety so as to infuse fresh life into it, and to make it express the most opposite sentiments. At the start it assumes the form of a hesitating question; in the first variation it is presented again, and, though the outline is retained, it acquires a breadth which it did not at first possess.

He considers Dorabella (Var. 10) 'the most exquisite number of the series.' And he concludes his notice by declaring that the work proves the existence in England of a musician endowed with temperament, possessing great technical skill, and one whose imagination excels in creating genre pictures.

JOHN GLEN.

The death of Mr. John Glen—which we much regret to record—at Edinburgh, on November 29, 1904, has removed an interesting figure from the musical life of Scotland. Born at Edinburgh on June 13, 1833, he was educated at Dr. Graham's School in Queen Street, a famous seminary in its day, and at the High School. He then entered the business founded in 1825 by his father, Thomas Glen, who invented, among other instruments, a wooden Ophicleide, of which a large number were made and known as Serpenticleides. In course of time the Glens became noted for their Bagpipes, of which they are the recognised best makers. The subject of this notice frequently acted as judge in Pipe competitions in Scotland, and in 1891 he discharged this duty at the Crystal Palace.

THE LATE MR. JOHN GLEN.

(Photograph by Mr. R. Graham Glen, Leeds.)

Mr. Glen possessed a valuable collection of ancient musical instruments which he frequently lent to various exhibitions. Being a practical man he always kept them in good order, and therefore could show them to the best advantage. His collection included a Spinnet made by Christian Shean, Edinburgh, 1780, who settled there in 1761, as the following advertisement of that year shows :

15th July, CHRISTIAN SHEAN, Harpsichord and Spinnet Maker, lately arrived from London, and now settling here in Edinburgh, makes and sells all sorts of Harpsichords and Spinets, etc., etc.

Mr. Shean is to be found in Bull's Close opposite to the City Guard, 2d turnpike, 3d door upstairs.

In 1794, Shean styles himself 'Piano-Forte Maker.' Other Edinburgh makers of keyboard instruments were John Smith, Richard Livingstone, William Luid, James Logan, and Richard Horsburgh. Mr. Glen also possessed a Psaltery, a modified form of the Viola d'Amore. In this connection the following advertisement, from an Edinburgh newspaper, is interesting and amusing :

On Saturday, the 22d February, 1750, will be performed at Mary's Chapel, Niddry's Wynd, Signor Carusi's concert of vocal and instrumental Music, with several Pieces on the Salterio, an instrument upon which none in Britain can play but himself.

Bremner, an Edinburgh musicseller, advertised in 1762, 'A few of that ancient instrument called the Psalter. This instrument is played with a bow, and though of a very soft and simple nature, yet there is no bow instrument known here equal to it for delicacy and sweetness.'

But Mr. Glen's chief claim to fame rests upon the splendid work he did in investigating the sources of early Scottish music. The collection of his unique and valuable library of books on this subject occupied him for fifty years of his busy life, and the study of these precious tomes was the delight of his leisure hours. He long hesitated to give to the world the result of his researches regarding the origin and history of Scottish melodies, being—like not a few of his countrymen—extremely cautious. A man of strong individuality, and very tenacious of his opinions, he was most uncompromising with that class of writers who take things for granted, and who never dig down to the original source and put to the test the correctness of previous statements. He would think twice before he would commit himself to a statement; thus he had the reputation of being a thorough worker, and whatever he stated in the way of fact or date could always be thoroughly relied upon.

The title of his first book reads :

The Glen Collection of Scottish Dance Music. Strathspeys, Reels, and Jigs, selected from the earliest printed sources, or from the Composers' works.

Arranged, with New Accompaniments for the Piano-forte, by JOHN GLEN.

Containing an Introduction on Scottish Dance Music, Sketches of Musicians and Musicsellers, an Analytical Table to 1784, and a Chronological List of Works.

Edinburgh : Published at 2, North Bank Street, 1891.

This book, the first of a series of three volumes, placed their author in the foremost rank of Scottish musical critics. Not the least prominent feature of the work is a series of twenty biographical sketches of early Scottish musicians and musicsellers, concerning whom nothing had previously been known, or known only through brief and misleading notices. In preparing the narrative for these sketches, Mr. Glen spent many years of research among old newspaper files, Scottish Directories (of which he had a large collection, dating back to their first appearance), catalogues, and other sources, with the result that he was enabled to correct many inaccuracies of date and to clear up much that had theretofore been obscure. Following the biographical portion is an analytical table, the fruit of long labour and patient investigation, and an analysis of all available collections of Scottish Dance Music published North of the Tweed up to the year 1784, whereby he was able to trace the collection in which any given tune made its first appearance. This table contains references to works the only copies of which that are known to exist adorned his own library. The volume also includes a list of title-pages of collections of Scottish Dance Music published in Scotland between the years 1757 and 1792. The collection of airs embraces 144 examples—not all by any means the best known or most popular, but all characteristic of the work of their respective composers. This first volume covers the history of the subject to the year 1792. A second volume, which appeared in 1895, consists of 148 tunes and brings the work down to the year 1800. This also contains biographies of composers, sixteen in number, much of the space being devoted to William Marshall, of Keithmore, and the Gow family. After setting forth in detail Marshall's contributions to the national music of Scotland—in all 257 melodies—Mr. Glen observes that 'the whole formed a collection which for variety and beauty are unsurpassed by any other Scottish composer.'

The magnum opus of Mr. Glen was, however, his latest work, entitled :

EARLY SCOTTISH MELODIES: including examples from MSS. and early printed works, along with a number of comparative tunes, notes on former annotators, English and other claims, and Biographical notices, etc.

Written and arranged by JOHN GLEN.
Edinburgh : J. & R. Glen, North Bank Street. 1900.

This book, dedicated to Sir Alexander Mackenzie, bears on its title-page a quotation quite typical of the attitude of this redoubtable investigator :

Facts are chiefs that winna ding,
And downa be disputed.—BURNS.

Like a true Scot, John Glen was very jealous for the fame of his country and countrymen, and in his case it was for their achievements in the realm of National Song. In his 'Early Scottish Melodies' he somewhat scathingly destroys the claims set up by writers who had not thoroughly grasped and mastered the subject. Stenhouse and William Chappell were his chief bogies. The highly controversial character of the work is indicated by the titles of the seven chapters : 1. 'Scottish Melodies'; 2. 'Annotators on Scottish Melodies' (including William Tytler, Joseph Ritson, George Farquhar Graham, and John Muir Wood); 3. 'Manuscripts and early printed works.' In Chapters 4 and 5—headed 'William Chappell' and 'English claims' respectively—he gives the origin and history of twenty-six airs, including such popular favourites as 'Ye banks and braes,' 'John Anderson my Jo,' 'The broom of Cowdenknows,' 'Bonnie Dundee,' 'My Nanny O,' 'Maggie Lauder,' and 'Corn Riggs.' In Chapter 6, 'The Scots Musical Museum,' he discusses and annotates no fewer than 600 airs, showing throughout a marvellous knowledge of his subject. Chapter 7 consists of a series of notices of early Scottish musicians and music-engravers. Prefixed to the volume is a chronological bibliography of manuscript and printed works, which is invaluable for reference.

The works of John Glen form a complete repertory of material on the subject of which he was so great and reliable an authority. Of 'style' in writing he was blissfully unconscious; but his complete mastery of a theme so dear to his heart, his close—sometimes painfully close—attention to detail, and the directness and cogency of his reasoning are throughout unmistakable.

It is most satisfactory to learn that Mr. Glen's very valuable musical library is not to be dispersed, for, by his request, it is to be handed over to one of the public libraries in Edinburgh. In this connection we understand that one of his sons is compiling a complete record of all his father's notes; this to be deposited with the books. The remains of Mr. Glen were interred at Warriston Cemetery, Edinburgh, amid many manifestations of regret and respect.

WAGNER AND HIS 'RING' PERIOD.

Of all the great musicians, Wagner is the one whose life and art-work have furnished the most material for description and discussion. One has only to peruse the comprehensive indexes of the translation of his Prose Works by Mr. W. Ashton Ellis to see the many subjects in which he took interest, and the many distinguished men with whom he came into contact. It seems impossible to keep a biography of the master within reasonable limits. Mr. Ashton Ellis's new volume* only deals with two years of Wagner's life. But, as the author truly remarks in his preface, 'it is not every year in the life even of a Wagner that offers so gigantic a subject as the poem, or half the composition, of "Der Ring des Nibelungen";' he also reminds his readers of the 'mass of fresh biographical material which has appeared since the publication of his previous volume.' We fully admit the interest of all Mr. Ellis has to say, and cannot fail to notice his earnest endeavour to draw a complete picture of the man. Some, no doubt, will not find this new volume too long. From the point of view of the general public, however, condensation here and there would perhaps have been an advantage. Lord Chesterfield apologised to his son for having written a long letter, on the ground that he had not time to write a short one. Mr. Ellis cannot make a similar excuse.

There are many persons who are satisfied to enjoy the works of great masters without troubling about the way in which they were conceived, developed and completed; to others it is a subject peculiarly fascinating. The sketch-books of Beethoven, for instance, offer quite exceptional opportunities for study of this kind, and Mr. Ellis, by comparing the different versions of the 'Ring,' enables us to follow the master's trains of thought, also changes of thought which account for certain inconsistencies in the published version of the poem.

Most interesting, for instance, is the comparison between the original and published version of the Mime-Siegfried scene before the appearance of the Wanderer. In his third volume Mr. Ellis arrived at the conclusion that between the libretto for an operatic 'Siegfried's Tod,' written in 1848, and the text of 'Götterdämmerung,'—for all practical purposes the same as the 'Siegfried's Tod' first privately issued together with the other sections of the "Ring" in 1853?—there was an intermediate version; and, indeed, before his volume was issued he had received actual proof of its existence. In this new volume he enters into detail concerning the manuscript, which turns out to be not only a fair copy of the Dresden 'Siegfried's Tod,' i.e., of the libretto of 1848 mentioned above, but entirely in the handwriting of Wagner himself. Mr. Ellis gives good reasons for believing that it was written in 1849 before Wagner fled from Dresden. We cannot enter into detail, but one example must be given. The libretto of 1848 ended with Brünnhilde, restored to office, leading Siegfried to Walhall, and we hear of the eternal power of the gods. In the 1849 version, in ten lines written in the margin of the manuscript, reference however is made to the ending power of the gods. Mr. Ellis hopes that still another Siegfried manuscript may turn up some day, viz., the one sent by Wagner in 1850 to Wigand, the publisher, through his friend Uhlig.

Our author always seemed pleased in his earlier volumes when he could say anything unpleasant about Mendelssohn or Meyerbeer. In this volume Liszt is treated in a similar manner, though of course he fully recognizes the many great kindnesses shown by Liszt to Wagner, for he could not indeed do otherwise. Just one little example will show the kind of thing we mean: it is a sample, not an isolated case. Louis Köhler in 1853, after reading the 'Ring' poem, wrote a letter to Liszt praising the beauty and power of the poem. Liszt wrote to Wagner, saying that he is enclosing that letter, adding, 'Perhaps you will send him a couple of lines?' Within a few days Wagner, in a long letter to Köhler, discusses a brochure by the latter, entitled 'Melody of speech,' but without any allusion to the young man's panegyric. 'Perhaps,' added Mr. Ellis, 'Liszt had forgotten to slip it into his envelope after all; if so, more's the pity!' But is it not possible that Köhler's notice, in spite of its praise, did not please Wagner? for in it the writer says 'The diction is already music, and therefore impossible to "set to music".'

A graphic description is given of Liszt's visit to Wagner at Zurich in 1853. The singing of 'the entire duo of Elsa and Lohengrin' by Wagner and Liszt must have been an extraordinary performance! Probably the audience consisted of one person, namely Minna Wagner's wife, who may have been too much engaged in household matters to pay much attention to it.

By-the-way, there are two references to Minna in the volume: the one shows the kindly feeling of Wagner towards his wife, the other her sympathetic interest in her husband's art-work. In 1853 Wagner and Liszt were in Paris, and the former wrote to his friend Sulzer begging a temporary loan to enable Minna to join him at Paris and 'live a few days on the fat of the land where she once had hungered so.' The other concerns the visit she paid to Germany in 1854, when she went to Dresden to try and obtain an amnesty for her husband.

In his Supplemental Notes, Mr. Ellis gives a translation of the whole of Wagner's letter to Köhler, and—although it has no reference to the point which we are touching upon—one short passage, re criticism, is so remarkably interesting that we cannot refrain from quoting it:

The contents (Inhalt) of an art-work are a matter for the individual, no subject for criticism; here it is a question of feeling a liking or dislike, and that, again, is every individual's affair. Technique, on the other hand, is the collective property of the artists of all ages; one inherits it from the other, each adding to it and forming it as well as he can and must.

There is a very long chapter on Liszt's 'Holländer' essay, and our author proves up to the hilt the composite character of this essay, which is published as Liszt's. Lina Ramann had a hand in it, but the Princess Wittgenstein was, to quote Mr. Ellis, the 'predominant partner.'

The Appendix to the volume contains valuable supplemental notes, among which we find a translation of Adolf Stahr's letter to Liszt on the 'Ring' poem, in which he (Stahr), by declaring that even if Wagner succeeded in overcoming all the immeasurable difficulties of its representation 'the work would make an utter fiasco,' proved himself a bad prophet; a schedule of the comments inserted by Schopenhauer in his private copy of the 'Ring' poem; also an account of Wagner's pianoforte works. In the last-named we read that Tappert speaks of a manuscript Fantasia in F sharp minor as far more interesting and characteristic than other works of an earlier period. Mr. Ellis does not appear to know the work, but he could have learnt about it from Generalmusikdirektor Mottl, who possesses, or at any rate once possessed, a manuscript copy, or maybe even the autograph itself. The whole volume offers a complete illustration of the author's thoroughness and zeal; moreover the admirable get-up of the book deserves commendation.

Church and Organ Music.

WESLEY'S 'WILDERNESS.'

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—The method of singing Wesley's recitative at the Abbey follows the large score published by subscription, and I suppose therefore the first edition. I know that other editions differ, and I have always regretted it, as the D sharp is a much better passage.

I think if your correspondent had wider experience he would find that at many cathedrals it has been sung as we sing it, and shall continue to sing it, notwithstanding the protest of your correspondent! I hope he will not mind.

Yours very truly,

J. FREDERICK BRIDGE.

We sent a copy of Sir Frederick's letter to the Rev. F. G. Wesley, son of the composer, who writes as follows:

Hamsteels Vicarage, Durham.

December 19, 1904.

DEAR SIR,

I noticed the letter in THE MUSICAL TIMES for this month, in which the practice of singing the word 'man' in the tenor recitative of Dr. S. S. Wesley's Anthem 'The Wilderness,' to the note D sharp, is commented upon.

In the first published folio edition (circa 1840) of separate anthems, of which 'The Wilderness' is No. 2, the note on 'man' is C sharp. In the folio volume (Vol. I.) of twelve anthems (1853) the note is D sharp. In a folio edition subsequently published the composer reverts to C sharp. If I can trust my memory, the D sharp was always sung at Winchester in my father's time, and it therefore cannot be a misprint in the volume 'Twelve Anthems.'

In the orchestral score made for the performance at the Birmingham Festival of 1852, my father has written the words of the Recit. under the 1st Violin part, but not the notes for the voice. On the back of the page, which was blank, a copyist has inserted the words and notes of the Recit., with the C sharp from the first folio edition. There seems to be no doubt that the composer at one time, at least from 1853, for some years preferred the D sharp.

The principal singers at Birmingham in 1852 sang from the first folio edition with C sharp printed, but the tenor may, by direction of the composer, who conducted, or of his own accord, have sung D sharp. In 1853 that note was printed.

I am, Yours faithfully,

F. G. WESLEY.

It is quite certain that if documentary evidence counts for anything, the weight of such evidence is greatly in favour of the C sharp. In the composer's autograph of the anthem (1834) the recitative appears thus:

TENOR RECIT.

Then shall the lame man leap as an Choir.

Hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing.

Here is the C sharp and, as Mr. Wesley says, this note appears in the first folio printed edition. It is perfectly true that in the 1853 edition the note is D sharp: but evidently enough, in a set of lithographed voice parts—evidently transcribed from that edition and 'Published for the Author, Winchester'—the note is C sharp! We have before us a proof copy of the Novello folio edition, bearing the postmark, 'Gloster, May 14, 71,' and containing corrections in Wesley's own hand: this copy also has the C sharp. Moreover, a contemporary transcript (in a copyist's hand) of the orchestral score contains the C sharp.

Therefore, we find that no fewer than five copies—including the composer's autograph—covering a period of nearly thirty years, give the note C sharp against one that contains the D sharp. From this it appears that Wesley originally wrote C sharp, then changed the note to D sharp, and that he subsequently reverted to his original intention. For our own part we prefer C sharp, because the composer evidently intended and preferred it to be thus sung, and we should suggest to those who like their 'Wesley correct' to adopt this form.

A Scotch minister possessing a cultured musical ear once preached in a church where the singing was not of the highest excellence. At the close of the service he remarked to one of the elders that he did not see how such a performance could be pleasing to the Almighty. 'Oh!' replied the elder, somewhat nettled, 'we do not sing to please God, but to frighten the devil.' 'Well, my brother,' calmly replied the minister, 'I can assure you that you are in every way likely to thoroughly succeed.'

The Royal College of Organists gave an 'At Home' on December 10, at Kensington Gore, when the President (Sir Frederick Bridge) and Lady Bridge received the invited guests. An enjoyable selection of music was performed, which included some organ solos excellently interpreted by Dr. Peace, Mozart's Sonata (No. 15) for two violins, violoncello, and organ, violin solos by Mr. Henry Such, Mendelssohn's motet 'Laudate pueri,' and Brahms's 'Ave Maria' (sung by some lady students of the Royal College of Music), and the first movement of Rheinberger's Trio for violin, violoncello, and organ. The programme, in which Dr. Davan Wetton took part, was under the able direction of Dr. F. J. Sawyer.

Bach's Christmas Oratorio has been performed during the past month at St. Anne's Church, Soho, under the able direction of that true lover of Bach, Mr. E. H. Thorne, organist of the church. The oratorio was first performed in England on June 13, 1861, by the Bach Society. On Christmas Eve of that year selections from the work were given at a most unlikely place—the Canterbury Music Hall, in the Westminster Bridge Road!

Brahms's Requiem was sung, with full orchestral accompaniment, at St. Paul's Cathedral, on Tuesday evening, December 6, under the reverent conductorship of Sir George Martin.

Mr. Alfred Hollins has, we are glad to hear, returned to Edinburgh safe and sound from his 'delightful and successful trip' to Australasia.

Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians. Edited by J. A. Fuller Maitland, M.A., F.S.A.

[Macmillan and Co., Ltd.]

It has been said of Bayle's famous 'Dictionnaire' that anyone consulting it is almost certain not to find the particular name for which he is looking, but that in his search he will come across so much of interest and delight that bed-time will find him still turning over its pages, his original purpose quite forgotten. Those of us who remember the original issue of Grove's Dictionary will call to mind the delight which the successive instalments, not too regularly issued, gave. The editor had been successful in gathering round him a group of able and well-informed fellow-workers: the result was a work abounding in interest. It was not until the Dictionary was fairly launched that the capital error of its plan became apparent: this was the strange want or proportion in its distribution. The technical part was admirable; the biographical broke down completely, and one was as little certain of finding any particular biography as one was in the pages of Bayle. It appears to have been a point of honour with the compilers to consult no previous authorities even in forming a list of the names to be included. They seem to have been selected entirely by chance—for instance, when the article on Handel (who was fortunately not overlooked!) came to be written it was discovered that his prominent rival Buononcini had been omitted, with the result that he had to be relegated to a footnote in small print. Contributors appear to have pleased themselves, so that we have a long series of articles on singers by the late Mr. Julian Marshall, many of whom have no interest for the present generation. This fault was most conspicuous in the earlier part of the work. It is only fair to say that, as the work proceeded, proportion was better observed.

And now, at the end of a quarter of a century, a new edition is called for, and the opportunity is offered of correcting many of these deficiencies. As we have said, it is in the biographical part that the weakness mainly existed. We are ourselves strongly impressed with the impossibility of combining a technical and a biographical dictionary. Having had occasion to consult nearly every known dictionary, from Tinctoris downwards, we will go so far as to say that it has always ended in failure. Of necessity a selection of names has to be made. To fix a standard of admission is impossible, and in many cases the notices have to be so rigidly cut down that all interest evaporates. For what do we consult such a work? Surely for the less-known names, with the chance that they have not been thought of necessary importance for inclusion, and we are sent empty away.

Of course no radical change of plan was possible, and we must now address ourselves to a consideration of the success with which the present editor has overcome the deficiencies of the original work. The new volume, which completes the letter E, consists of 800 pages, while in the original edition the same letter came to an end at page 300—indeed, the new work boasts of an addition of 300 pages. Of these 100 pages at least are consumed by the incorporation of the material originally given in the supplement. In a quarter of a century many reputations are made or increased, and many careers are brought to an end. Foremost among these appears Johannes Brahms. In the old edition five columns were allotted. The article has now been entirely rewritten by the editor, and occupies three times that space. The name of Dvůřák made its appearance for the first time in the supplement, having been written by the present editor. This is now reprinted with very little alteration. Here we think that further extension would have been welcome. Among the most prominent movements of modern musical developments has been the interest excited by Russian music. This rightly falls to Mrs. Newmarch, the acknowledged authority on the subject, with the result that we have well-informed articles on Balakirev, Balaiev, Borodin, César Cui, Dargomizsky, all names which have become familiar to the public only since the issue of the first edition. The reputation of Sir Edward Elgar is also of recent growth, and now receives due recognition. But what was the inducement to include the stars of the ballet? And if Pauline Duvernoy and Fanny Elssler are included, why not the other Fanny—Fanny Cerito?

The article on the Bach family incorporates with that by Herr Maczewski the additional matter contributed to the supplement by Dr. P. Spitta, while there is an interesting addition by Mr. F. G. Edwards on the original introduction and progress of Sebastian Bach's music in England; and in connection with the name of Bach we may mention that the catalogue of his works as published by the Bach-Gesellschaft is completed. These catalogues of the contents of collections were among the merits of the work, and must have been found of great use and convenience. The contents of three volumes only of Torchi's interesting 'L'Arte musicale in Italia' are given. Two volumes more have certainly been published. We are glad to see a notice of the labours of M. Expert, whose 'Maitres Musiciens de la Renaissance française' are of great interest and deserve to be more widely known. The writer of the notice of Robert Eitner appears to be unaware that his useful 'Quellen-Lexikon' is completed. The ten volumes were duly installed on the present writer's shelves long before the sheet containing this article could have been passed for press.

Sir George Grove's great article on Beethoven remains untouched, and here we think the editor has exercised a wise discretion, for though it is on a scale out of proportion with the rest of the work, it is of such intrinsic interest that no one would wish to see it curtailed; in fact, additions have been judiciously made by Mr. J. S. Shedlock, from materials which came into the original writer's possession after the publication of the article.

Among the non-biographical articles is an excellent introduction to Acoustics from the pen of Mr. Capstick, which is really essential to the understanding of much of the information given elsewhere about the construction of musical instruments, and we find a most interesting article on the subject of 'Automatic Appliances.' This contains a description of the Pianola and other contrivances for the mechanical production of musical compositions, as well as of the many ingenious devices for the purpose of recording extempore performance. Those who know how difficult it is to explain intelligibly any piece of mechanism, especially in the absence of diagrams, will recognize the merits of this article. It is signed T. L. S., which we take to represent Mr. T. L. Southgate, although his name does not appear in the list of contributors. In running through this list it is sad to see the havoc death has made among the original contributors, and indeed the number of deceased writers is larger than stated, for the names of the Rev. Charles Mackeson and of Mr. Russell Martineau should certainly be added.

It will be remembered that the year 1450 was given as a limit to which the rise of modern music could be carried back. This on the face of it appeared a wise decision, as it ruled off much debateable matter. In practice, however, it became impossible to keep within this limit—for instance, when treating of musical notation. The date is now frankly abandoned, and we notice from cross-references in the present volume that it is proposed to include the names of Adam de la Hale and other musicians of early date.

The original article on Antiphons is replaced by one on a much larger scale, contributed by the Rev. W. H. Frere, the great authority on early Church music. We notice that Mr. W. H. Hadow contributes a much more adequate article on Berlioz—a subject which he has treated elsewhere with much skill. The labours of Bourgault-Ducoudray now receive justice, and the name of Alfred Bruneau, whose reputation, in this country at least, belongs to a later date, is now adequately treated. The valuable additions by Mr. Barclay Squire to the article on Dr. John Bull deserve to be pointed out. One is continually being brought face to face with the difficulty of preserving due proportion—for example, the Norwegian violinist Ole Bull surely receives more than his due meed of attention, while we would gladly have welcomed further information concerning the works of that great antiquary Coussemaker, to whom all searchers in the early history of musical theory are under such obligations.

A very clear and straightforward article on Musical Copyright will be welcome to a large body of readers. It hardly becomes a layman to express an opinion on so abstruse a question, but Mr. G. S. Robertson's statements are admirably intelligible, and his law appears to be brought down to the most recent enactments. Dr. Stone's original article on the clarinet receives valuable additions from the hand of that excellent authority Mr. D. J. Blaikley; and a very learned paper on counterpoint by Dr. Walford Davies replaces that by the late Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley. Calling for special mention are the erudite and painstaking articles by Miss Stainer on Charpentier, the two Dedekinds, the two Durantas, the two Donatis, and Eccard.

It will thus be seen that under the able editorship of Mr. Fuller Maitland the utility of this work has been largely extended, and that when completed the musician will be placed in possession of a dictionary which will answer all reasonable demands. For this we must express our gratitude.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Sonata in E minor for the Pianoforte. Composed by John B. McEwen. [Novello and Co., Ltd.]

On previous occasions we have referred in terms of sincere admiration to the compositions of Mr. McEwen, especially his beautiful String Quartet in A minor and his original 'Highland Dances' for violin and pianoforte. The Sonata which lies before us shows however a decided advance upon these creations. It is an individual, dignified, and forceful work of ample dimensions, broad ideas, and spacious technique. Throughout the four movements there is a notable blending of highly-trained intellectuality and uncommon aptitude. In no previous work with which we are acquainted has Mr. McEwen shown such freedom of workmanship and such power of rising to the height of a great argument. He set himself a heavy task—one requiring courage and confidence in equal proportions. To say, as we do say, that his experiment has proved successful is high praise indeed, therefore we extend a warm welcome to this young Scotsman, who in his latest and strongest work has indeed poured new wine into that ever welcome 'old bottle,' the beautiful and matchless Sonata form.

The opening subject of the first movement announces in unmistakable fashion that our composer is in no mood for trifling. In clanging octave chords the theme sweeps down above powerfully insisting, ever-widening semiquaver arpeggios. The swinging stride and youthful strength arrest attention. 'This is 'Erles' vein, a tyrant's vein,' as Nick Bottom has it. Having gripped us, the composer does not loosen his hold, for the second subject brings with it the expected contrast of mood and matter, and is welcomed as a tender, richly harmonized and subtly syncopated strain of great charm. The movement, clear and regular as to form, is distinctly modern in regard to harmonic structure and tonal treatment; the development section is short as compared with the amplitude of the subject matter and its exposition, but a convincing Coda, dying away to ppp, brings the movement to a peaceful and poetic close, in great contrast to the brilliancy and strenuous dash of what has gone before.

The second movement—in B flat minor, Grave—suggests a funeral march, though not so called: it is of almost symphonic depth and importance. After a strangely tentative, groping introduction of improvisatory vagueness, the solemn theme starts sotto voce, con dolore. A sullen, surge-like demisemiquaver figure forms a striking feature of which much is made in the five representations of the chief subject. Four times the movement rises to climaxes of dynamic and emotional force, in which the composer's command over his resources—melodic, harmonic and structural—is strikingly displayed. The movement has no Trio; in fact there is little if anything to dispel the prevailing gloom or to bring consolation after the despairing outcries of a heart overwhelmed with grief: it is a moving tone-picture displaying unexpected powers of expression.

The Scherzo-vivace, in the unusual time of $\frac{6}{8}$ —is in some respects the most original of the four movements. It is a bright, capricious, but elaborate piece requiring agile fingers and a supple wrist. Elish sprightliness and waywardness characterize the music: its busy, bustling semiquavers are hardly allowed to rest even in the short but charmingly melodious and well-written Trio. The Finale opens in grandiose fashion, Largo ff, but soon plunges into a stormy Allegro con fuoco which, in style as well as strength, bears some resemblance to the first movement. The music is immensely spirited, and the interest is never allowed to flag; on the contrary, the leading theme rushes wildly to a resounding ff climax, and thus by way of a breathless Coda, Poco to a most effective end. Taken as a whole the Sonata is a notable effort, foreshadowing even greater creative achievements. The work may be most strongly recommended to pianists endowed with brilliant technique. Its difficulties—such as good pianists delight in—are cunningly devised by a musician who thoroughly understands the technique of writing for the pianoforte: to overcome them brings its own reward.

In the South (Allassio). Concert-Overture. By Edward Elgar. Arranged as pianoforte duet by Adolf Schmid.

Canto Popolare (from the above). For pianoforte solo. By Edward Elgar.

In Moonlight. Song, arranged from the Canto Popolare. By Edward Elgar.

[Novello and Co., Ltd.]

It is seldom that a modern orchestral work can be satisfactorily arranged for pianoforte solo, but four hands offer greater possibilities, and a good example of what may be accomplished is shown in the duet arrangement of Sir Edward Elgar's 'Allassio' Overture. The issue of the work in this and in solo form is specially to be commended, because the Overture is essentially one of those compositions which require to be intimately known to be appreciated at their full value; therefore no better preparation for the enjoyment of an orchestral performance of the Overture could be devised than playing the pianoforte arrangements, which moreover are effective pieces.

The 'Canto Popolare' is the section under this name in the above Overture, and at the hands of a sympathetic pianist the piece would give enjoyment to player and listener. It is very easy to read and presents no executive difficulties.

'In Moonlight' is an adaptation by the composer of the folk-song which forms so attractive a feature of the 'In the South' Overture. The strain is adapted to Shelley's poem 'In Moonlight,' and the result is a charming song full of grace and most expressive. It is written for a soprano or tenor voice.

Vesperale. (Op. 40, No. 2.) For the Pianoforte. By Cyril Scott.

Shadow Dance. (From Op. 39.) For Pianoforte. By Edward MacDowell.

[Elkin and Co.]

Mr. Cyril Scott is one of those creative musicians whose compositions bear the stamp of earnest endeavour and independent thought. 'Vesperale' is a simple little piece that the majority of pianists will be able to read easily at sight; but it possesses individuality, particularly in its harmonic scheme, which lends itself to sympathetic treatment.

Dr. MacDowell's 'Shadow Dance' is No. 8 of a set of twelve studies, but it is by no means scholastic in style. On the contrary, it is a delicately vivacious piece, calculated to fascinate, if played as intended by the composer!

CHURCH MUSIC.

A Short Setting of the Office for the Holy Communion, in the key of B flat. By Horatio Parker.

The Office of Holy Communion, in the key of F. By J. H. Maunders.

Let the Heavens be glad. Composed by H. M. Higgs.

Like as the hart. Composed by Hamilton Clarke.

[Novello and Co., Ltd.]

Professor Horatio Parker's composition forms No. 43 of the series of Communion Services edited by Sir George Martin, the object of which is to provide short settings of the Office that are devotional, interesting to choirs, and not difficult of execution. These objects are happily attained in the music before us. Earnest in conception and of finished workmanship, Dr. Parker's writings invariably appeal to musicians, while making their influence felt on all who possess refined tastes. The composer in setting the Sanctus and Benedictus shows originality of thought by his beginning the Gloria in Excelsis placidissimo and continuing it in subdued tones until the words 'For Thou only art holy,' which are announced forte with the tempo changed from Andante to Allegro. The effect at the opening is most impressive, and the close dramatic.

Still more simple and unpretentious is the music composed by Mr. Maunders. This includes two Offertory Sentences, Sanctus, Benedictus, and Agnus Dei, and also a Communion hymn, a setting of 'Bread of Heaven, on Thee we feed.' Although the composer has written in a restrained manner, his strains are always devotional and agreeable to the singers in every way.

A well-trained choir is required to do justice to the first of these two anthems, but cultured choristers will be interested in the music, for it demands alertness and intelligence in its interpretation. The composition, which is eminently suitable for church festivals, includes a quartet or semi-chorus which furnishes an effective contrast to the main section.

Mr. Hamilton Clarke's anthem is laid out for soprano solo and four-part chorus. The soloist opens the work in a theme which is both graceful and pleading in expression, while the impressive finale is dramatic in character.

NEW VOCAL PART-MUSIC.

Come Sleep. By Alfred G. Wathall.

Thou didst delight my eyes. By Gustav von Holst.

Sweet Content. By W. G. Alcock.

Sir Harold, the hunter. By John E. West.

Dear in Death. By C. H. Lloyd.

Under the greenwood tree. By A. W. Ogilvy.

[Novello and Co., Ltd.]

Mr. A. G. Wathall has gone to good old John Fletcher for the text of his part-song, and in so doing has culled an excellent example from this 17th century worthy. The music is as graceful and soothing as are the lines inviting sleep with its 'fair deceiving.' A sharp harmonic transition from the chord of a dominant seventh on E flat to the key of B major is a clever employment of the expressive power of harmony, and the return to the initial key (E flat) is no less effectively contrived.

Mr. Gustav von Holst is one of the many clever young men at the Royal College of Music, and his setting of the lines by Mr. Robert Bridges bears witness to the young composer's talent, for the music combines simplicity with effectiveness to a degree that sets forth with peculiar significance the diffident spirit underlying the words.

'Sweet content' will express the state of mind of the listener whenever Mr. W. G. Alcock's five-part madrigal is well sung. To accomplish this will need careful rehearsal, more especially to secure due balance of tone and expressiveness than to overcome technical difficulties, for the parts individually are easy to read. The words, by Thomas Dekker, show that even in the 16th century it was perceived that honest work is the surest road to 'Sweet content.'

Mr. John E. West's 'Sir Harold, the hunter' proclaims its character by the title thereof. Eliza Cook's lines contain a warning, or teach a wholesome lesson to bachelors, according to the point of view taken therefrom, for while in the first verse Sir Harold is full of confidence that he will live a 'hunter free,' in the third verse he declares life is 'a joyless boon' unless a certain 'Ella' will listen to his serenade. The music is delightfully jovial and merry, save when the verse relates the 'Ella' episode, when Mr. West's strains become agreeably tender and sympathetic.

'Dear in Death' is a setting of Swinburne's poem from 'A Century of Roundels,' and the tender and pathetic sentiment is reflected in Dr. C. H. Lloyd's music in a manner that increases the significance of the lines. The part-song would make an excellent study for legato choral singing and precision of attack.

Mr. A. W. Ogilvy's setting of Shakespeare's 'Under the greenwood tree' will delight well-trained choirs, for the part-writing possesses considerable independence and each part seems to go on its own way rejoicing. The finale, if crisply sung, would be particularly effective.

REVIEWS.—NEW VOCAL PART-MUSIC—continued from p. 32.

To Diana. Words by Ben Jonson. Over the Mountains. Words anonymous, 16th century. Music by Martin Shaw.
Song of the Dunes. Words by F. Kathleen Lloyd. Music by Charles H. Lloyd.

[Novello and Co., Ltd.]

The two first-named compositions are recent additions to Messrs. Novello's series of two-part songs for female or boys' voices, and they certainly add to the attractiveness of the collection. Ben Jonson's words have been set by Mr. Shaw to melodious and simple vocal parts sustained above an effective arpeggio accompaniment, which imparts gracefulness to the composition. 'Over the Mountains' makes greater demands on the executants, but the music is by no means difficult, and the quaintness of the words can scarcely fail to interest the singers, particularly ladies, for the unknown poet asserts in emphatic language the supremacy of Love.

The 'Song of the Dunes,' by Dr. Harford Lloyd, is a delightfully vivacious and dainty ditty. The lines suggest a bright, sun-lit shore, and the music dances along in sympathy with the suggested brightness of the picture.

SONGS.

Selected Songs of Scotland. Parts 1-4. Arranged for low voices, with accompaniments for pianoforte. By Charles Macpherson, Sub-organist of St. Paul's Cathedral.

[Edinburgh: R. W. Pentland.]

Some of the great masters of music—Beethoven, Haydn and Weber to wit—have exercised their genius upon accompaniments to the songs of Scotland, but unfortunately with results that have been described as 'absurd incongruities and monstrosities.' Beethoven, for instance, seems to have had the idea that the 'Scotch snap' should appear here, there and everywhere, regardless of its inappropriateness in certain airs that are distinctly unsnappy—if the word may be allowed. Mr. Charles Macpherson is not likely to make any such mistakes. A native of 'Auld Reekie,' he is on his native heath when he takes in hand the delightful melodies of his country and furnishes them with pianoforte accompaniments. If, as may be expected of a modern musician, they are tintured by present-day thought, he never unduly obtrudes his up-to-date ideas and ideals. In a word, his accompaniments are very cleverly done. They abound in all sorts of subtle, artistic touches. One might almost imagine that Mr. Macpherson himself is a proficient performer on the bagpipes, by the skirl in 'The deil's awa' wi' the exciseman,' while the 'Scotch snap' is perfectly introduced in 'Scots wha hae wi' Wallace bled.' That he had the orchestra in his mind when writing these pianoforte accompaniments is more or less evident—e.g., 'Bonnie Dundee,' where the horns seem to fill up the harmony at 'Come, fill up my cup, come, fill up my can!' Full proof of his ripe musicianship is to be found in 'Robin Adair,' where bars 3 and 4 of the melody are accompanied by the strain that constitutes bars 1 and 2, and so on. The pianoforte is frequently taken above the voice, as in 'My love she's but a lassie yet,' a song which furnishes a typical example of the skill wherewith Mr. Macpherson has so well discharged a task that must have been extremely congenial to him. As each book, containing twelve songs, costs only one shilling, these 'Selected Songs of Scotland' are sure to be sought after.

Three Spanish Love Songs. By H. V. Jervis-Read.

[Charles Woolhouse.]

The words of these songs are English translations, by Edward Fitzgerald (1806-1883), of excerpts from dramas by Calderón de la Barca (1600-1681). The first, entitled 'Ah, Happy Bird,' expresses the wish of a lover to be able to fly as a bird to his beloved one. The music is not only well and tastefully written, but it cleverly echoes the ardent desires of the lover. The song is designed for a tenor voice. The second ditty, entitled 'Cupid's Bow,' is a piquant and short lyric concerning the arrows of the god of Love, and again the music is excellent. No. 3, called 'Isabel,' is also a love song, tender and true in sentiment, and refined and poetical in expression.

Maypole Dance. For Violin and Pianoforte. By John E. West. [Novello and Co., Ltd.]

The Maypole dance is no longer seen on the village green, but its jocund spirit is still with us, and it pleasantly animates Mr. West's music. The piece will present no difficulties to players of average ability, and as the form of the old dance is carefully preserved and the composer's melodies are such as catch the ear, an adequate performance of the work would have an exhilarating effect on the ears of sympathetic listeners.

RHYTHM IN NATIONAL MUSIC.

At the meeting of the Musical Association, held under the chairmanship of Mr. F. Gilbert Webb at Messrs. Broadwood's rooms on December 13, Dr. T. H. Yorke Trotter read a paper on the above subject. The following is a summary of the lecturer's remarks.

Modern music is derived from two sources—the music of the Church and the music of the people. The one depended for its effect on elaborate contrapuntal devices; the other on its rhythmical melody. To the latter we are indebted for our rhythm and our form, so obviously founded on balance and proportion. The difference between the scientific music of the Church and the music of the people was a difference in kind, and, although modern music is a combination of both, yet a distinction still obtains. Where strong accents and varied rhythms predominate, it is evident that contrapuntal elaboration must be more or less absent, and conversely where devices of imitation and the conjunction of different melodies are largely used, rhythmical development must suffer. And thus composers and listeners alike incline to the one side or the other, according to their natural bent or musical training.

The word rhythm means 'flowing motion'; it might be more accurately described as 'balanced motion.' It has been defined as the more or less regular recurrence of cadences, but used in this sense, perhaps a better word would be 'rhythmic period,' for time and accent and period are so closely connected that for convenience sake it is often useful to comprehend them all under the word 'rhythm.'

Many ancient and modern folk-songs and dances exhibit a considerable freedom, both of accent and of rhythmic periods. In this respect Hungarian music is the most highly-developed, and the influence of this music can be noticed in the works of some of our greatest composers, such as Schubert and Beethoven. No doubt the strong sense of rhythm that is so apparent in folk-music is due to the universal habit of dancing, and it may be observed that the characteristic rhythms of the folk-songs in different countries follow the style of the most popular dances.

In Hungary the favourite dance was the Csárdás. This began with a slow movement and ended up with a quick measure. It was intensely emotional in character and lent itself to considerable rhythmic variety. Thus we find in Hungarian music many examples of three-bar rhythmic periods and unequal divisions caused by the addition or elision of a bar. Nearly one-half the folk-songs of the country show some difference from the ordinary song with phrases of four-bar duration. They afford proof that in some countries variations in rhythm are instinctively grasped at, as affording relief from monotony.

Roughly speaking it may be said that the rhythmic instinct—finding its outcome in the dance—is found more strongly developed in Hungary, Spain, and in the Slavonic countries, than in Germany, France, and Italy. The English were known in former times as a merry, dance-loving people. The old folk-music was essentially rhythmic, not exhibiting the same variety of period and accent that is found in Hungarian music, but graceful and flowing in character, free from all traces of morbidity. Variations of rhythmic periods are found, particularly in very old music. Jigs and hornpipes were often written in three-bar periods, and there are many instances of the prolongation of a phrase by the addition of a bar either in the cadence or in the middle of a section. Another device was the addition of a refrain of two or three bars to an ordinary four-bar section. Early English folk-music exhibited immense promise, and the subsequent deterioration may be ascribed to the influence of Puritanism, which put a stop to the old habits of dancing and singing. The following conclusions may be drawn from a study of folk-music:

1. That rhythm is the essential feature in this music.
2. That the feeling for musical rhythm is fostered by the love of dancing, and that the love of dancing was practically universal.
3. That the dance is the instinctive expression of emotion, and that it was the most primitive form of expression.
4. That love for rhythmic effects leads to variety not monotony of rhythm.
5. That rhythmic periods follow with more or less exactness the style of dancing in vogue; that is, that where the dance is most free in style there will the rhythm of the folk-music also be most free.
6. That this fact will furnish an explanation of the characteristic features of the national music of different countries.

The study of rhythm is one of the most important parts of a musical education and one that is much neglected. There is a certain antagonism between rhythmical and contrapuntal development, and where the student inclines naturally to the use of strong accents and variety of rhythmic periods, it is right that his education should aim at bringing out his natural gifts rather than forcing him into what is alien to his inclination and talent.

The following are a few of the examples quoted to show variations of rhythmic periods in folk-music:

Elision of a Bar in the last section.

Two Bars answered by Three in the first section:
the reverse in the second section.

'THE APOSTLES' AT MAINZ.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Thanks to the unwearied efforts of Dr. Fritz Volbach, the Mainzer Liedertafel und Damengesangverein gave, on November 30, one of the finest performances of 'The Apostles' which has yet been heard. Not only did the orchestra and chorus discharge their duties with brilliant success, but no less excellent were the soloists—Frau Tilly Cahnbley-Hinken, Frau Adrienne von Kraus-Osborne, Mr. John Coates, Herr M. Büttner, Herr Jan Hensing, and Herr Dr. Felix von Kraus. Among so many able artists it seems hardly fair to make special mention of any particular one; but the Mary Magdalene of Frau von Kraus-Osborne was superb in its conception; and it would be difficult to imagine a more artistic and stimmungsvoll rendering of the scene before the Cross (Golgotha) than that given by Frau Cahnbley-Hinken and Mr. John Coates.

It was evident from the beginning that the chorus had completely mastered their portion of the work. The voices numbered 160, and the quality of tone produced was magnificent. Clearness of enunciation and precision of attack were remarkable throughout, and the many dramatic points of the work were thoroughly realized.

At the close of the performance, amid a scene of great enthusiasm, Sir Edward Elgar was presented with a large wreath. It was gratifying to hear from Dr. Volbach, speaking at the dinner which followed, that, during the time that he had been conductor of the Society, no work had aroused greater interest than 'The Apostles.' Hearty thanks are due to Dr. Strecker and his committee for the kind hospitality accorded to the English visitors.

This notice must conclude as it began, with a tribute of praise to Dr. Volbach, who threw himself heart and soul into a worthy interpretation of this masterpiece of English music.

PRESENTATION TO MR. FRITZ SCHÖLLHAMMER, OF SHEFFIELD.

By invitation of the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress of Sheffield, some 300 guests assembled in the Town Hall on December 9 to assist at a very interesting presentation. The recipient was Mr. Fritz Schöllhammer, whose retirement from the position of conductor of the Sheffield Amateur appointed in 1869, that his name is most prominently associated. Under his enlightened and informing direction the concerts of this organization reached a high level of excellence. During his tenure of office he conducted many important works given for the first time in Sheffield, thus furnishing proof of his enterprising policy of widening the musical horizon of the city. It is also a significant fact that of the eighty-two concerts given by the Society, the programmes of forty concerts—nearly half—have consisted of works by British composers.

In the summer of the present year, Mr. Schöllhammer resigned his post as director of the Society, to which he has been succeeded by Mr. Henry J. Wood and Mr. J. A. Rodgers. His retirement was accepted with regret, and an opportunity was thereby afforded of offering the veteran conductor some tangible proof of the warm regard in which he is held by a host of friends. As a result, the Lord Mayor was enabled to present Mr. Schöllhammer with an illuminated address, setting forth his splendid record of work, at the same time handing him a substantial cheque. The speeches on such occasions are invariably laudatory, but the words spoken were charged with true sincerity, and the cordial, even affectionate attitude of the representative audience was unmistakable. Mr. Schöllhammer was greatly touched and gratified. With his delightful, old-world courtesy he did not fail to express his gratitude to his fellow-workers in the past, with an especially warm appreciation of his colleague, Mr. J. W. Phillips, and his congratulations and good wishes to those who succeed him.

PATRON'S FUND CONCERT.

The second concert under the auspices of the Patron's Fund, founded by Mr. S. Ernest Palmer, took place on December 6 at Æolian Hall, and was devoted to chamber music. Sixty-three compositions had been sent in, from which sixteen were selected for performance, seven emanating from pupils of the Royal College, eight from the Royal Academy, and one by Mr. John B. McEwen, professor at the last-named Institution. From this it is manifest that either the scheme is imperfectly known in the provinces, or that the rising talent of the country is at the above schools. There was so small an audience at Æolian Hall that it may be questioned if the present method of concert-giving attains the prime object of the Fund, i.e., securing public recognition of our talented young composers and executants. Certainly chamber concerts of new music interpreted by little-known performers are not likely to attract the public, while the presentation on this occasion of sixteen fresh works resulted in the majority of the critics only noticing a few of the compositions. The most important work in design was a Pianoforte Quartet in E minor, by Mr. W. J. Hurlstone. This opens with a robust theme, which is vigorously and tersely developed until the movement ends with a stormy Coda. The Andante cantabile possesses charm of a tranquil kind, and the third number, Vivace non troppo, has the light-heartedness of an Irish jig, and Irish idiom is still more apparent in a central section. The Finale is also full of verve, and the work, if making no pretensions to greatness, is decidedly pleasing. Next in order of merit were four Preludes from a set of nine, for the Pianoforte, by Mr. Paul Corder, played by Mr. York Bowen, which proved remarkably well-written and effective little pieces, meriting publication. Of three Fantasies for Strings, by Mr. Percy Mills, the best was the third, in G minor, an expressive movement of elegiac character. There were some effective passages, and one particularly expressive theme of Irish idiom, in a 'Concert Piece' for Viola and Pianoforte, by Mr. Arnold E. Trevor Bax, but vagueness of form marred the composition. A 'Concert Piece,' in C minor, for Pianoforte and Wind Instruments, well and brightly written by Mr. George Dyson, was well played. Three songs, settings by Mr. Frank Bridge of 'Night lies on the silent highways,' by Heine, and Shelley's 'Dead Violet' and a 'Dirge,' presented a crescendo of misery that even Niobe would have found depressing, but they were excellently rendered by Mr. F. Aubrey Millward. Two other songs by Mr. F. C. S. Carey, severally named 'When you are old and grey' and 'I will not let thee go,' showed great Musical Society, after thirty-five years of honourable service, was thus made the occasion of a tribute of respect and affection worthy of any man's acceptance.

Mr. Schöllhammer's record is a proud one. On the completion of his musical studies at Stuttgart, forty-two years ago, he came to Sheffield, and at once plunged into the musical activities of the town. For fourteen years he conducted the Sheffield Harmonic Society, and took part in other educational work. But it is as conductor of the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society, to which post he was freedom and command of musical expression and were admirably sung by Miss Beatrice Dunn. More matured than the preceding works was the incidental music by Mr. McEwen to Mr. Hall Caine's poem, 'Graith my Chree.' Mr. McEwen has written for pianoforte, strings and drums, and in a manner that increases the eerie character of the story. The text was dramatically recited by Mrs. Tobias Matthey.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

GLUCK'S 'ALCESTE.'

The operatic performances by the students of the Royal College of Music are always of exceptional interest; but that on December 2 at His Majesty's Theatre was an event in the history of music, for it comprised the first performance in England of Gluck's 'Alceste.' Considering that this work contains the sum total of the composer's reforms, and that the preface to the work is frequently referred to and quoted as embodying the principles of dramatic music, it seems strange that 'Alceste' had not previously been heard in this country, particularly as the master's 'Orfeo' is—thanks to the fine impersonation of Signorina Giulia Ravogli—familiar to Londoners. The reason, however, of the neglect of 'Alceste' is not far to seek. The original libretto by Calsabigi is not only weak, but it has the fatal fault of harping continuously on one phase of emotion, grief. In the first half of the opera Alcestis is in despair at the foretold death of her husband, Admetus, and in the second half the husband is in despair at her sacrificing herself to preserve his life. The descent, in the last act, of Apollo to cut the gordian knot was felt to be so childish that in the Paris version Hercules was introduced, who fights with Death and restores Alcestis to her husband, Apollo subsequently arriving on his cloud to bless the faithful couple. This ending is adopted by Mr. Claude Aveling in his excellent English version prepared for the Royal College performance; but the whole conception of the last act is such a descent from the dignity of Greek tragedy that it excites a smile, especially when Hercules in Hades rushes frantically about slaying imaginary spirits of Death with an enormous 'property' club!

Musically, the opera shows greatest advance in the recitatives. The form of these is remarkably free, and the vocal inflections ring true. The strongest music is in the Temple scene, which closes with the famous air, 'Divinités du Styx'; but although the music shows advance in truth of dramatic expression, it is not so inspired as in 'Orfeo.' The part of Alcestis requires an exceptionally gifted and matured artist to do it full justice. This being so, it was surprising how its requirements were realized and fairly met by Miss Nannie Tout, who showed a dramatic intuition and a vocal skill that should carry her far in the artistic world. Mr. Ben Ivor Davies sang well and acted intelligently as Admetus, Mr. James Hebden Foster appeared as Hercules, and the other characters were capably sustained. The stage grouping and dancing were admirable and most pleasing, and the orchestra played splendidly under Sir Charles V. Stanford's direction.

VOLBACH'S 'RAPHAEL' TONE-PICTURES.

(FIRST PERFORMANCE IN ENGLAND.)

The students of the Royal College of Music, on December 13, had the satisfaction of performing the above work for the first time in England. The event was invested with particular interest from the fact that the composer came specially from Mainz in order to conduct his music.

'Raphael' consists of three 'tone-pictures,' suggested by three Madonnas of the immortal painter—the Foligno, the Granduca, and the San Sisto. Herr Volbach has written his work for 'chorus, orchestra, and organ,' and, judging from the enthusiasm displayed at the Royal College concert, this trio of tone-pictures in music should have considerable success in England. The second of the set, for female voices only, made the greatest impression upon a first hearing, although all are very melodious, and, moreover, 'singable.' Herr Volbach is not an ultra-modern tone-poet, but a composer who delights in good, solid harmony and counterpoint, and that of the best. The students of the Royal College showed their thorough appreciation of Herr Volbach's music by the fine performance they gave of the work, and the composer was recalled to the orchestra again and again, his cordial reception being the more pleasant to record in view of the fact that he has done much for the advancement of English music in Germany.

The remaining features of the concert were Beethoven's 'Prometheus' Overture, Paderewski's 'Polish' Fantasia for pianoforte and strings (soloist, Isidore Epstein), and Brahms's Serenade in D for orchestra (Op. 11). With the exception of the Volbach pieces, Sir Charles V. Stanford conducted the concert.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

HERR FRITZ STEINBACH, CONDUCTOR.

The concert given by the new London Symphony Orchestra at the Queen's Hall on December 15 served to add to the already high reputation this extraordinarily fine body of performers had attained. The engagement of Herr Fritz Steinbach as conductor gave especial distinction to the occasion. A very fine performance of the 'Leonora' Overture (No. 2) was secured. But the greatest interest of the concert was the deeply impressive interpretation of Brahms's Fourth Symphony that was given. Here Herr Steinbach was in his element, and he found the orchestra splendidly equal to his demands. We cannot recall a previous performance of this great and, so far as the last movement is concerned, singular work, in which its beauty and majesty were so luminously and thrillingly manifested. Herr Steinbach's method of conducting is decidedly strenuous, too much so, we venture to suggest, but at least the virtue of this fault enabled him to develop superb climaxes.

The performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto by the new violin professor of the Royal Academy of Music, Herr Zimmerman, was another interesting item of the programme. It was soon evident that Herr Zimmerman is a performer of the first rank. The reading was broad and artistic and revealed great technical skill. The pace was perhaps more deliberate than usual, but the interpretation was so full of point it always held the attention. The Royal Academy of Music is to be congratulated on having added so able an artist to its professorial staff. The Brandenburg Concerto (No. 3) for three violins, three violas, three violoncellos, and bass, composed by Bach, was the only other piece performed. It was played by all the strings.

A GIGANTIC COLONIAL ENTERPRISE.

BALLARAT MUSIC COMPETITIONS.

It seems strange that in far-off Australia musical competitions have so taken the fancy of the public that they have developed, in Ballarat at least, into unprecedented proportions. A local institution, called the South Street Society, is the nucleus of the organizing body. The competitions were held in October, and were spread over twenty-six days. The prizes amounted to £1,400, and the entries included about six thousand individuals. Competitors, choirs, bands, soloists of all kinds came from Queensland, New Zealand, Tasmania, as well as from nearer parts. The tests for the choral classes were of the best kind. Thus in the chief choral section the pieces chosen were the chorus 'Put off, O Jerusalem,' from Parry's 'Judith,' Elgar's part-song, 'Weary wind of the West,' and Waddington's 'Lilian.' The Melbourne Philharmonic Society, under Mr. A. J. Pallett, came first. The male-voice choirs sang Walford Davies's 'Hymn before action' and Smart's 'Homeward Watch.'

It is gratifying to note that the desire to excel in musical execution is so strong in that remote corner of the world.

Mr. J. S. Shedlock delivered an interesting lecture at the London Institution on December 15 on the subject of 'Bird Music.' The musical illustrations included the songs 'When Daisies pied' (Dr. Arne); 'Sweet Bird' (Handel); 'The Imprisoned Songster' (Weber); 'The White Dove' (Orlando Morgan); 'Spring' (Henschel); and (instrumental solos) 'The Nightingale' (Elizabeth Rogers's Book); 'Cuckoo Capriccio' (Kerl); 'Cuckoo Rondeau' (Daquin); and 'Thema all' Imitatio Gallina Cucca' (Bach).

London Concerts.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

The performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge, on December 1, at the Albert Hall, was the best that has hitherto been given by the Royal Choral Society. Familiarity with the music doubtless contributed in a large measure to this result, for it is only when reference to the printed music is little needed that the whole attention of the performers can be concentrated on expression and upon the beat of the conductor. In addition to the gain to the music by the realization of its romantic and picturesque spirit, enjoyment was increased by the refined and pure quality of the vocal tone, and also by the clearness and unanimity of articulation, the last merit being specially praiseworthy in so exceptionally large a choir. The solos were dramatically sung by Madame De Vere, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Andrew Black.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

Mr. Arthur Pagge is to be warmly commended for the enterprising manner in which he is conducting the London Choral Society, and particularly for setting before Londoners on December 5, at Queen's Hall, Dr. Walford Davies's 'Everyman.' We gave a detailed description of this cantata in THE MUSICAL TIMES for October last, and in the issue for November expressed our high opinion of the work. All that was said then was not only confirmed on re-hearing the composition, but re-echoed by our contemporaries. It is therefore only necessary now to comment on the performance, which, albeit not faultless, was praiseworthy. It preserved the impressive dignity of the work, and showed that the choir is making progress in command of expression, an important point on which, in great measure, its support by the public will rest. Miss Gleeson-White and Miss Muriel Foster retained their original parts, but Everyman was personated by Mr. Kennerley Rumford, and the other male solos were sung by Mr. Gregory Hast and Mr. Iago. 'Everyman' was preceded by a miscellaneous selection.

SIR A. C. MACKENZIE'S 'ASTARTE' PRELUDE.

Distinction was given to Mr. Arthur Newstead's orchestral concert at the Queen's Hall, on December 12, by the first performance in London of Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Astarte' Prelude, the first of three movements, the other two being respectively called 'Pastorale' and 'The Flight of the Spirits,' written in 1898 for Sir Henry Irving's intended revival of Byron's 'Manfred' at the Lyceum Theatre. The Prelude is headed with the quotation—

'And I would hear yet once before I perish,
The voice which was my music—speak to me.'

As will be surmised from this and the character of the hero, the Prelude is permeated by a yearning, strenuous spirit, but the music is the reverse of pessimistical or lugubrious, being instinct with manly passion contrasted with genuine tenderness. The work made a most favourable impression and should not be allowed to suffer neglect. Another novelty was the first production of a Concert Overture in D, by Mr. A. Von Ahn Carse, of which great skill is shown in the development section, and particularly in the scoring, which is picturesque, bright, and well balanced. This work was conducted by Mr. Carse, but the remainder of the concert was directed by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, who secured for Mr. Newstead sympathetic support from the London Symphony Orchestra in three pianoforte concertos, Saint-Saëns's, in G minor (No. 2), Beethoven's, in E flat, and Liszt's, in E flat (No. 1), the solo parts of which were played with earnestness and fluency by the concert-giver.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

A prominent feature of the orchestral concert given by the pupils of the Royal Academy of Music on December 6 at Queen's Hall was the production of an original Theme and Variations for Orchestra by Mr. Hubert Bath (Goring Thomas Scholar). The Theme itself is melodious and has a winsome way with it that is decidedly attractive, and the variations show ingenuity, invention, and sense of contrast. Miss Gladys Clark's violin, and Miss Ursula Newton's pianoforte playing were excellent and full of promise, and the singing by Miss Ida Kahn, Miss Ethel H. Hantke, and Mr. David Brazell bore witness to good training. Mention is also due of Mr. James Lockyer for his neat viola playing, and of Miss Hilda Peppercorn who is manifestly making good progress as a pianist. Sir Alexander Mackenzie, who conducted with alertness and skill, secured a praiseworthy rendering from the students' orchestra of Smetana's Symphonic Poem 'Aus Böhmens Hain und Flur.'

The following awards have recently been made:—The Sainton-Dolby Prize (contraltos) to Esther Jane Hill (Cheddleton); the Rutson Memorial Prize (sopranos) to Caroline Hatchard (Portsmouth); the Hine Prize (composition) to Marjorie Slaughter (London); the Westmorland Scholarship (male vocalists) to Emile d'Oisy (Tunbridge Wells); the Potter Exhibition (female pianists) to Margaret Bennett Stoke-on-Trent; the Bonamy Dobree Prize (violincellists) to Gwendoline Griffiths (London).

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

On December 10 the feature of the concert was the performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto by Miss Maud MacCarthy, a young lady whose record abroad and at home has earned for her a high and honourable artistic reputation. Her rendering of the Concerto on this occasion, if it did not completely fulfil the expectation of a broad and impressive interpretation, was distinguished by an attractive beauty of tone, purity of intonation, refinement and perfect fluency of execution. Mr. Wood secured an especially fine performance of Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, and the rendering of Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel' served to show how admirably the new orchestra is responding to the will of the conductor.

Criticism concerning the testimonial concert to Mr. Robert Newman, given by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood at Queen's Hall, is unnecessary, as the programme was devoted entirely to familiar excerpts from Wagner's operas and music dramas, all of which were very finely played.

The Gentlemen and Children of His Majesty's Chapels Royal, St. James's, gave their annual concert on December 9, at Messrs. Broadwood's rooms, Conduit Street. Nine boys in their brilliant red and gold laced coats gave brightness and picturesqueness to the platform, and, as on previous occasions, madrigals, glees, rounds, and part-songs were rendered, under Mr. Walter Alcock's direction, with purity of tone and fascinating finish. Amongst the most successful performances were Mr. Alcock's madrigal 'Sweet content,'—which begat in the listeners that which the title suggested—Dr. Eaton Fanning's patriotic part-song 'We love our island story,' the effective 'Dawn of song,' by Mr. E. C. Bairstow, and Sir Alexander Mackenzie's beautiful trio for female voices, entitled 'Distant bells.' The selection also included solos by Masters C. A. Viner and W. J. Wright, and Messrs. James Gawthrop, Brereton, and Harold Wilde. Mr. Walter G. Alcock conducted.

The North London Orchestral Society gave their thirty-second concert at the Portman Rooms on December 9, under the direction of Mr. Lennox Clayton. The programme included Haydn's Symphony in E flat (No. 1, B. & H.), Grieg's Overture 'Im Herbst,' and Brahms's 'Tragic' Overture. Dr. Richard Strauss's Concerto for Horn was to have been performed, but owing to the indisposition of Mr. Borsdorf, the soloist, it had to be withdrawn, and Mr. John Saunders played instead violin solos by Dvorák and Elgar with great success. Miss Carmen Hill sang 'Knowest thou the land,' from 'Mignon,' and two of Elgar's 'Sea Pictures' with her customary charm.

Miss Ethel Newcomb, a young pianist and pupil of M. Leschetitzky, at her orchestral concert on December 19 at Queen's Hall, played in concertos by Schumann, Chopin, and Saint-Saëns with an expressiveness, brilliancy, and artistic intelligence that proclaimed her to be a talented and accomplished artist. Miss Newcomb had secured Dr. Richard Strauss as conductor, and a feature of the evening was a splendid performance by the London Symphony Orchestra of his symphonic poem 'Tod und Verklärung.'

The Streatham Hill Choral Society gave the first concert of their sixth season at Streatham Hall on December 13, when Sir Frederick Bridge's 'Cradle of Christ' was conducted by the composer, who, in a brief speech, congratulated the Society on its success and commended the members for the admirable way in which they had executed his work. The remainder of the programme included 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin' (R. Walthew) and the first and second parts of Haydn's 'Creation,' under the able conductorship of Mr. Edwin J. Quance, the Society's conductor.

A few lines of congratulation are due to the Strolling Players' Amateur Orchestral Society which, founded in 1882, gave its 100th concert on December 15, when Mr. William Shakespeare was assisted in conducting by Mr. Norfolk Megone, who directed performances of the Society from its foundation until 1901. The occasion was graced by the presence of Miss Fanny Davies, who played the solo part of Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat. The vocalists were Miss Carmen Hill and Mr. George Ridgwell.

The South West Choral Society gave their first concert of the season at Battersea Town Hall on November 23, when the programme consisted of Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast.' The choir sang with spirit and precision, and the solo vocalists were Miss Isabel Spenser, Miss Kitty Searle, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. Meurig James. Mr. A. Bond conducted.

Mrs. Miriam Mauchlen recently gave an attractive vocal recital at Bechstein Hall, when she sang with much acceptance and native verve—so to speak—an interesting selection of Scotch songs, the interpretation of which she has made a specialty. Mrs. Mauchlen was assisted by Mr. Denham Price, and Mr. Henry R. Bird accompanied faultlessly.

The Students' Orchestral Concert at the Guildhall School of Music, given on December 14, included Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite, and Wuerst's 'Russian Suite.' An interesting feature of the programme was Weber's Pianoforte Concerto (No. 2) in E flat, the solo part in which was played by Miss Alice M. Dyer, a pupil of Mr. Willem Coenen. The Principal, Dr. W. H. Cummings, conducted.

Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' was performed with much success at the Crystal Palace, on December 6, by Mr. J. W. Lewis's choir and orchestra. The chief honours of the evening fell to the choir, their singing being marked by much intelligence and excellent choral technique.

The Royal Society of Musicians gave a performance of 'Elijah' at Queen's Hall on November 29, under the able conductorship of Mr. Arthur Fagge, with much success. It was the 166th anniversary concert of the Society.

The Bermondsey Settlement Choral and Orchestral Union, under the direction of Mr. John E. Borland, gave a programme entirely of Sir Charles Stanford's compositions (including 'The Revenge') on December 17.

VARIOUS CONCERTS AND RECITALS.

At St. James's Hall M. Victor Maurel, the famous French operatic baritone, for whom Verdi wrote the parts of Iago in 'Otello,' and the title rôle of 'Falstaff,' gave a vocal recital on December 10, and fascinated his audience by the subtlety and dramatic force of his singing.—At Bechstein Hall, on December 17, Mr. Frederic Lamond gave a singularly intellectual interpretation of Chopin's music; and Miss Ethel Wood showed great advance as a vocalist at her recital on December 12.—At Steinway Hall Mdllie. Hedvig de Wierzbicka, a Polish pianist, made her first appearance in England on December 20.—Mention is certainly due of Miss Grace Sunderland and Mr. Frank Thistleton's concert of old chamber music at Messrs. Broadwood's on December 16, when the programme included a Sonata in D for trumpet, string quartet and clavier, by Henry Purcell, of which no record of its previous performance is known to exist.—Mrs. Tobias Matthay, at one of her enjoyable dramatic recitals (Steinway Hall, December 17), again recited 'The Witch's Song' to Mr. Frederick Corder's excellent and appropriate music.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

New York, December 11, 1904.

The Philharmonic Concerts are flourishing in New York as they did last year under the impetus in artistic interest created by the plan of importing conductors. Thus far Herr Kogel, of Frankfort-on-the-Main, and Edouard Colonne, of Paris, have stood at the head of the band and directed brilliant performances. The plan is not conducive to the production of new works however. We are not likely to have a single novelty in the season's list, though M. Colonne did bring forward the Second Symphony by Saint-Saëns, which had not been heard here for a score of years. More industrious in this respect are Mr. Gericke and Mr. Thomas with their orchestras in Boston and Chicago. Mr. Gericke has added Dukas's 'L'Apprenti Sorcier,' Suk's Symphony in E, Hugo Wolf's 'Penthesilea,' and Saint-Saëns's First Symphony to his repertory in the course of the first seven concerts. His new concert-master, Mr. Willy Hess, has made a decidedly favourable impression both in Boston and New York. The Chicago Orchestra, under Mr. Thomas, is now newly housed. The new hall, built by popular subscription, is to be dedicated on December 14. It is probably due to the preparations making for the change that Mr. Thomas has put fewer new works to his credit than usual. I note Elgar's Overture 'In the South,' and Goldmark's Overture 'In Italy'—two works of like source. The Elgar Overture was introduced to the Metropolis by Walter Damrosch with his Symphony Orchestra. He, too, was first in the field with Mahler's Fourth Symphony, a work singularly naive in thought, complicated and strenuous expression, which seeks to give musical depiction to a sort of Celestial Cockaigne, the key coming at the end in the shape of a setting for solo voice and orchestra of an old Bavarian folk-song, 'Der Himmel hängt von Geigen.' I should have preferred to hear the song as a preface or table of contents rather than as an index at the end of the volume. The Russian Symphony Society is working hard on its mission, which would probably be more successful if the performances were better. It brought forward all the music of Rimsky-Korsakow's ballet, 'Mlada,' at its first concert. The first concert of the Oratorio Society (Dr. Frank Damrosch, director) gave us Brahms's 'A German Requiem,' and Bach's cantata, 'Sleepers, wake!'

Boston and Washington have welcomed Mr. Coleridge-Taylor warmly. The concerts of the Coleridge-Taylor Society in Washington, composed of black people, were turned into ovations for him, and were quite generally reckoned among the most successful and dignified musical occasions for years in the national capital. Of our other visitors of international fame, such as Ysaye, Josef Hofmann, Madame Melba, de Pachmann, Rudolf Friml, and so on, there is nothing new to report, except that they are criss-crossing the States and Canada, and utilizing to the full the time before the coming of M. Paderewski, who is due at San Francisco from Australasia to-morrow.

Mr. G. W. Chadwick gave a concert of his own compositions at the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, on November 21. The programme included a Sinfonietta (performed for the first time), the Suite in A (Symphonic Sketches), and the Symphony in F (No. 3). These works were played by sixty players from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Chadwick.

H. E. KREHBIEL.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, December 15, 1904.

About a year ago the young Viennese composers formed themselves into a Society or Association for the purpose of aiding one another as much as possible in getting their works performed, and especially of advancing the cause of modern and the latest composed music. It is characteristic that such a Society should be established here in Vienna, where, from a musical point of view, two eventful centuries have produced a strong tradition, and a contemptible conservatism. This Composers' Society brought forward at its first concert a 'Dionysian Phantasia' for orchestra, by Hansegger, three songs, with orchestral accompaniment, by Bischoff, and Richard Strauss's 'Sinfonia domestica,' and in so doing strongly attracted the attention of the public. Richard Strauss's work, performed under the direction of the Court Opera conductor, Mahler, created a very strong impression.

Mahler has recently conducted his Third Symphony at the 'Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde.' Like all his five symphonies, this one is laid out on very broad lines. It occupies nearly two hours in performance, the first movement being the longest; the second of menuet, and the third of rondo character, are the easiest to grasp at a first hearing. A poem by Nietzsche, 'O Mensch, gib acht, was spricht die tiefe Mitternacht,' and an old sacred folk-song are woven into the music, and for these themes women and boys' voices are employed. The work ends with a solemn and impressive Adagio. The performance, which was admirable, aroused great enthusiasm.

At one of the Philharmonic concerts the programme was ultra modern,—Liszt's 'Orpheus' and Bruckner's brilliant First Symphony—while at another, ultra classical works by Mozart, Schubert, and Beethoven were given; the former was conducted by Felix Mottl, the other by Dr. Muck, and both with their usual success.

At the Concertverein, Löwe performed Liszt's 'Mazeppa' and Brahms's First Symphony; he also created a deep impression with Haydn's 'Oxford' Symphony, which was played through as it were in one breath, only brief pauses being made between each movement. As in modern compositions we are so accustomed to long movements, this method is specially to be recommended in the case of classical works. Worthy honour has been paid to the memory of Dvorák. The 'Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde' performed his 'Requiem'; the Bohemian Quartet gave a concert devoted to the composer's works; the Tonkünstlerverein did likewise, but with special attention to rarely-heard compositions, such as the String Quartet in A, the Serenade for Wind Instruments, and some of the lesser-known vocal duets.

The violinist Henri Marteau at his concert played, in addition to the Mendelssohn Concerto, two new works of the kind: the one by Dubois, the present director of the Paris Conservatoire, the other by Sinding. The former is clear in form, there is distinction in the music, and the concluding movement is brilliant; the latter work displays originality both as regards rhythm and harmony.

The pianist Friedmann at his concert played three concertos—Brahms in D minor, Tschaikevsky in B flat minor, and Liszt in E flat. As complaints are made all over the world about the monotony of virtuoso programmes, artists like Dohnanyi deserve special mention. At his concerts he introduced such unacknowledged works as Beethoven's Polonaise in C and the F sharp major Sonata, and also played four Rhapsodies of his own composition. The same may be said of Fräulein von Gasteiger, who, at her concert, gave the three great sonatas of Schubert—in C minor, A major, and B flat, composed in the year 1828. Frau Wanda Landowska, of Paris, brought with her two instruments—a modern pianoforte, and a fine harpsichord, built after the 18th century model. On the latter she played old music, and with marked success. The Joachim Quartet has been here, and given three very choice concerts. The one devoted to Brahms (Quartets in A minor and B flat major, and the String Quintet in G) created the most enthusiasm. The flautist Ary van Leeuwen, of the Court Opera, together with several of his colleagues, has founded a Society for the performance of wind chamber music. The programme of the first concert was particularly interesting: it included a sonata for flute by Frederick the Great, and the Quintet for Pianoforte and Wind by Rubinstein.

MUSIC IN OTTAWA.

MR. CHARLES A. E. HARRISS'S CHORIC IDYL, 'PAN.'

A fitting farewell to the ex-Governor-General of Canada and Lady Minto took the form of a grand State Concert at the Russell Theatre, Ottawa, on November 14, when the occasion was appropriately signalized by the production of Mr. Charles A. E. Harriss's choric idyl 'Pan.' The libretto, which is described as 'one of the most poetical ever offered to a composer,' is by Miss Josephine Preston Peabody, and the local Press are unanimous in the opinion that alike in the choral and orchestral numbers Mr. Harriss has displayed poetical and dramatic inspiration and scholarly musicianship. No pains had been spared to give the work a worthy hearing, the orchestra being composed of members of the leading New York and Cincinnati orchestras, and the chorus of 250 voices was chiefly that of Mr. Keyner, of Montreal. The solo vocalists were Miss Millicent Brennan (who sang with much charm and feeling), Mr. Clarence B. Shirley, and Mr. Fred. Martin. The composer, who conducted, and whose work was received at the close with much enthusiasm, also contributed a Fantasia on Canadian airs, dedicated to Lady Laurier. The production of the Idyl was a worthy tribute to the Governor-General and Lady Minto, who have, during their office, shown great sympathy with the advancement of good music in the Dominion.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Belfast City Choral Society, of which Mr. W. H. Derrick-Large is the conductor, gave their first concert of the season on December 9. Hiller's 'Song of Victory' and Faning's part-song 'Liberty' occupied the chorus and orchestra. Songs were sung by Miss S. M. Lewis, Miss F. Richardson, Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. Meuring James.

Two Chamber Concerts at the Queen's College, Belfast, directed by Dr. Lawrence Walker, Lecturer of Music in that College, were given on December 9 and 10. Dr. Brodsky and his admirable associates, Messrs. Briggs, Speelman, and Fuchs, played a number of quartets, including Dittersdorff's, Tschaikevsky (Op. 22), Schubert (Op. 161), and, with Dr. Walker, Brahms's (Op. 26). We have in Belfast a very considerable number, mostly ladies, who diligently study chamber music, and invaluable lessons are given to such students by this very distinguished band of artists.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On November 24 the Festival Choral Society gave a remarkably fine performance of Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius,' with Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies as principals. The chorus especially distinguished themselves, and Dr. Sinclair conducted with even more than his wonted skill. On December 15 the City Choral Society performed Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' Trilogy. The choral singing was of the highest order throughout, the dramatic points being vividly realized. The soloists were Miss Helen Jaxon, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Andrew Black. The orchestral work was beautifully done, and Mr. F. W. Beard conducted with marked ability.

At the second Halford Concert the programme comprised Beethoven's 'Egmont' Overture and Second Symphony, Tschaikevsky's Serenade for Strings, Arensky's Third Suite (Op. 33), and the 'Tannhäuser' Overture. By invitation Mr. Dan Godfrey, of Bournemouth, conducted part of the concert, and was cordially received. Mr. Halford conducted a magnificent performance of the Serenade for Strings. At the third concert, on December 6, there were two novelties. The first was an Overture, 'In Memoriam,' by Mr. Halford himself. The work is not a dirge, but a kind of musical portrait of a departed friend, and certain themes associated with him are introduced. It is an exceedingly well-written composition, and it should be heard again. The second novelty was the 'Welsh Rhapsody' of Edward German, which, admirably performed under the direction of the composer, met with unqualified success. Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony completed the scheme. Mrs. Henry J. Wood was the vocalist, accompanied by Mr. Henry J. Wood. The fourth concert was notable by reason of the appearance of Dr. Richard Strauss as conductor, on December 20, the programme being devoted to his compositions. These included the tone-poems 'Don Juan,' 'Tod und Verklärung,' and 'Ein Heldenleben'; the performance of each, directed by the composer, brought out all their special points, and our local orchestra achieved triumph after triumph. Strauss's Violin Concerto (Op. 8), with Mr. Max Mossel as soloist, made a great impression. Dr. Strauss had a reception of the most enthusiastic description, and the performance of every number evoked the heartiest applause.

The Amateur Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. Granville Bantock, gave a Berlioz concert to the members of the Midland Institute on December 12. The 'Symphonie Fantastique' was then heard for the first time in Birmingham, and the performance, if not great, was highly creditable to the Society. Other pieces were the 'Carnaval Romain' Overture, the Trio for two Flutes and Harp, from 'L'Enfance du Christ,' and the song 'Vilanelle' ('Nuits d'Été'), sung by Miss Estelle Lermitt.

Bare mention must suffice of the Saturday evening concerts. On November 26 the Choral Union gave Facer's music to the dramatized version of 'Ben Hur'; on December 10 the Choral and Orchestral Association very creditably performed Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' Mr. Joseph H. Adams conducting; and the next Saturday the Midland Musical Society (conductor, Mr. A. J. Cotton) performed Haydn's 'Creation,' Parts I. and II., and Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion,' while a new Society, the Summerfield Choral Society (conductor, Mr. T. Johnson), gave their first concert, performing Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' in creditable style. The same night the School of Music at the Midland Institute held their terminal choral concert.

Mr. Max Mossel has continued his drawing-room concerts with their customary success; and we have had visits from the Glasgow Select Choir and Florizel von Reuter, while Madame Marie Fromm, at her chamber concert on December 8, introduced to an English audience Herr Richard Sahla, a Leipzig violinist.

The Choir of Music, so munificently founded at the University of Birmingham by Mr. Richard Peyton, is referred to in another column.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

There was a large attendance at the Young Men's Christian Association Hall on November 28, when the nineteenth annual concert of the Totterdown Baptist Choir was held, under the direction of Mr. H. J. Pollard. Some glees were admirably rendered, among the compositions being 'A Shepherd in a glade,' by Mr. Cyril B. Rootham, which obtained THE MUSICAL TIMES prize last year. The merits of the piece were recognized in a hearty manner, and the success of the first public rendering of the part-song afforded gratification to the composer's father, Mr. D. W. Rootham (conductor of the Bristol Madrigal Society), who was present. Songs by Miss Louie Strange, Miss Ada Bennett, and Mr. F. M. Pyle added to the enjoyment of the evening. Mr. Ivor Fox accompanied.

The Bristol North Choral Society gave a concert at the Victoria Rooms on December 3, when Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and a miscellaneous selection were rendered by a choir and band of 300. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Evelyn Gerrish, and Mr. William Fell. Mr. C. W. Stear was at the organ, Mr. F. S. Gardner led the orchestra, and Mr. James Bending (organist of St. Paul's Church) conducted.

The first of a series of four symphony concerts organized by Mr. Max Heymann was given at the Victoria Rooms on December 6. With several Bristol players, the Bath Pump-room band effectively rendered some familiar works, the chief attraction being Beethoven's Violin Concerto, the soloist being the eminent artist Herr Fritz Kreisler.

Bristol Æolian Male Choir gave their annual concert on December 7, at the Young Men's Christian Association Hall, St. James's Square. Under the direction of Mr. G. Simpson a number of glees were artistically interpreted, and songs were contributed by Miss Amy Perry and Miss Clara Aldersley.

The St. John's Choral Society gave a performance of Haydn's Mass in B flat at the church of St. John the Evangelist on December 7, accompanied by a band of 40 performers, Mr. Harold Bernard being the leader. Mr. W. A. Lamb (the organist of St. Thomas's Church) played the gallery organ, and Mr. A. E. Oaten (organist of St. Katherine's Church) played the chancel organ. Mr. A. E. Hill directed the performance, which was of a highly creditable nature. The vocalists, to whom the quartets in the Mass were entrusted, were Miss Edith Sinnett, Mrs. Bernard, Miss Mabel Cole, Mr. E. Redwood, Mr. C. Venn, and Mr. Stanley Hill.

At the Knightstone Pavilion, Weston-super-Mare, on December 8, the Philharmonic Society gave a good performance of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul.' The choir numbered 200 voices, and an efficient orchestra, comprising several Bristol players, and led by Mr. F. S. Gardner, co-operated. The principal vocalists were Miss Leonora Sparkes, Mrs. F. Passmore (Exeter), Mr. Dean Trotter (of Exeter Cathedral), and Mr. Charles Tree. The performance was conducted by Mr. Edward Cook.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Dublin Orchestral Society gave their first concert for the season on November 23, at which the chief feature was Beethoven's 'Pastoral' Symphony, performed for the first time by the Society. The programme also included Saint-Saëns's Violoncello Concerto (the solo beautifully played by Mr. Clyde Twelveteeres), Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' Overture, and the 'Traum-Pantomime' from Humperdinck's 'Hänsel und Gretel.'

The 'Orpheus' Choral Society gave their first concert on December 6, when Dr. Culwick conducted his admirable choir. The programme included the madrigals 'O sleep, fond fancy' (Benet) and 'O that the learned poets' (Orlando Gibbons), two Irish airs arranged as part-songs by Stanford and Jozé, and a new part-song, 'Christmas Bells,' composed by Dr. Culwick. The soloists were Mrs. Riddall and Mrs. A. McC. Stewart (Alex. Elsner); and Mr. Joshua Watson played some violin solos.

On December 16, at the Rotunda, Messrs. Varian's Feis Ceoil Prize Choir, under the baton of Mr. Robert O'Dwyer, gave a performance of Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and part of Haydn's 'Creation.' The chorus and band together numbered 140. The solos were sung by local artists. Messrs. Varian are brush-makers, and the choir is composed entirely of their employés.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Professor Niecks earned the gratitude of music-lovers by giving them the opportunity, at the first and second concerts of his University series on December 1 and 8, of hearing Frederick Lamond in ten of Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonatas, ranging from Op. 2 to Op. 111. The gifted Scottish pianist has qualities, intellectual and physical, which eminently fit him for such a gigantic task, and his performance gave the greatest delight to an enthusiastic audience, composed largely of musicians.

Mr. Gustav Nielsen's second chamber concert on December 8 was of equal interest to the one that preceded it. Its chief features were Grieg's Sonata for Pianoforte and Violin (Op. 43) and Reinecke's Pianoforte Trio (Op. 32), in which Mr. Nielsen had the able assistance of Messrs. Winram and Hochstein. Miss Maie Thorn was a very successful vocalist.

Mr. Kirkhope's choir performed in the Central Hall on December 14 Barnby's 'The Lord is King,' Gounod's 'Gallia,' and Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens.' The singing of this fine choir was not only quite up to its best standard, but it was characterized by excellence of tone, expression, and intelligence. The soloists were Miss Pillans, Mrs. Christie, and Mr. John Burnett.

On November 21 the Amateur Orchestral Society opened its thirty-third season. The programme was well selected and excellently performed under the conductorship of Mr. T. H. Collinson, the chief items being Haydn's Fourth Symphony of the Salomon set, the 'Preciosa' and 'William Tell' Overtures, and the 'Festmarch' of Richard Strauss. Miss Ethel Richards gave much pleasure in her songs.

Mr. Denhof's second concert introduced Signor Sarasate and Dr. Liehhammer, and it may well be believed that the conjunction of three such artists resulted in a performance of great artistic value.

The orchestral concerts of Messrs. Paterson and Sons, which commenced on November 28, demonstrated the fact that in tone, flexibility of execution, and in intelligent and artistic obedience to the conductor's wishes the Scottish Orchestra of this season is quite equal to the best of its predecessors. Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and Elgar's Overture 'In the South' made the greatest demands upon the resources of the players and received superb readings. Dr. Cowen had quite an ovation from the audience on making his reappearance at the conductor's desk. Herr Fritz Kreisler played magnificently in D'Erlanger's Violin Concerto.

At the second concert, on December 5, the Choral Union, conducted by Mr. Collinson, was in happy conjunction with the orchestra, the works performed being Parry's 'Voces Clamantium' and Haydn's 'Creation.' The general opinion seemed to be that the Society in its long history had never appeared to greater advantage than on this occasion.

The third concert brought the 'Haffner Serenade' of Mozart (in which Mr. Henri Verbruggen gave a masterly rendering of the solo violin part), the C minor Pianoforte Concerto of Beethoven (soloist, M. Pugno), and two charming dances by Dr. Cowen.

A concert of Richard Strauss's music was given by our local soprano, Miss May Gibb, on December 17, in the Music Hall, and with rare enterprise she had secured the co-operation of Dr. Strauss himself, in conjunction with Messrs. Johann Kruse and Ossian Fohström. The programme consisted of twelve songs and two sonatas—one for pianoforte and violin and one for pianoforte and violoncello.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Herr Kreisler made a distinguished appearance at the third classical concert on November 29, playing several solos and bringing to a first hearing in Glasgow F. d'Erlanger's Violin Concerto in D minor. The Choral Union's performance of 'Elijah' on December 6 was quite up to the standard they set in their recent production of 'The Apostles.' In Mendelssohn's music the members were quite at home, and an inspiring performance was the result. The solo music was sung by Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Ada Crossley, Messrs. Webster Millar and Charles Tree, and the Scottish Orchestra, with Mr. Thomas Berry's experienced aid at the organ, played the accompaniments. Mr. Bradley, as usual, conducted.

The appearance of the eminent French pianist, M. Raoul Pugno, proved a great attraction at the fifth classical concert on December 13. The chief item on the programme was Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor, of which M. Pugno gave a beautiful, albeit less strenuous, and therefore more welcome reading than we are accustomed to hear. Mozart's Serenade in D ('Haffner') proved an interesting novelty, and a selection from Dr. Cowen's Suite 'In Fairyland' was well received.

Under Mr. W. J. Clapperton's direction, Clydebank Choral Union sang Macfarlane's seldom-heard 'May Day' on November 30, and under the same conductor the Vale of Leven Choral Union essayed Gade's 'Erl King's Daughter' on December 8. Dumbarton Choral Union, conducted by Mr. Edwin Owston, performed, on December 14, Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul.' This recently-formed choir continues to show praiseworthy enthusiasm, although one would like to suggest that their energies should be occasionally expended on choral works other than the better-known masterpieces.

Associated with the Scottish Orchestra the Pollokshields Philharmonic Society, under Mr. John Cullen, performed Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' and Gounod's 'Out of darkness' on December 15. The choir sang with good tone and with no lack of intelligence, and any little shortcomings may be accounted for by the insufficiency of rehearsals with the band. As Lucifer Mr. Charles Tree was excellent both dramatically and vocally, and the other soloists—Miss Evangeline Florence, Miss Mabel Braine, and Mr. Gregory Hast—performed their parts acceptably.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On December 8 the Stroud Choral and Orchestral Societies, under the skilful and energetic guidance of Mr. J. Edis Tidnam, gave a most successful concert, when the Subscription Rooms were crowded. Though the Societies have only recently come into existence their progress has been most marked. For the first concert Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was selected, the soloists being Miss Perceval Allen and Mr. Furness Williams. Miss Edith Leech (a pupil of Mr. Tidnam) creditably singing the second soprano part in the duet. The choruses were sung with spirit, and the work of the orchestra was good. The second part of the programme included Fanning's part-song, 'The Miller's Wooing.' The Societies are evidently firmly established in the district, and the season has opened well.

Last year the Tewkesbury Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. George Watson) had to abandon their annual concert, but the series was resumed on December 13, when a capital performance of Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron' and Gade's 'Spring Message' was given. The results showed that Mr. Watson is an excellent choir-trainer, and the solos were well sung by Mr. A. Sly, of Gloucester, Mr. Eynon Morgan, of Gloucester Cathedral choir, and Mr. Graham Smart, lay clerk at Westminster Abbey. Miss A. Watson and Mr. A. W. Vine, organist of Tewkesbury Abbey, and Mr. H. Dutton were at the pianoforte and harmonium respectively.

Mr. A. H. Gibbons, in addition to his duties as organist of the beautiful parish church of Cirencester and conductor of the Cirencester Choral Society, was responsible for a good rendering of Spohr's 'The Last Judgment' at the church on December 13. His capital choir was augmented for the occasion, and in addition to the organ there was a small band. The soloists were Masters Snelling and Marchant, of the London College for Choristers, and Messrs. H. and G. Stubbs, of St. Paul's Cathedral.

One of the best concerts in the long history of the Gloucester Choral Society was given in the Shire Hall on December 9, when everything was highly satisfactory except the attendance, which is the more to be regretted considering the extent to which the Society is drawn upon for the Three Choirs Festivals, and the free recitals of sacred music given fortnightly in the nave of the Cathedral. The performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' by chorus, band and soloists, left little to be desired, and Mr. A. Herbert Brewer is to be congratulated upon the result. Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Jessie King, Mr. W. Hyde, and Mr. Dalton Baker were an admirable quartet. Mr. W. H. Reed led an efficient band, which also played Glinka's 'Komarinskaja.' The small part of the Forester in the 'Legend' was effectively sung by Mr. Fred. White, one of the honorary secretaries.

Mr. Samuel Aitken, who acted as adjudicator in a recent choir competition promoted by the Sunday School Union, delivered an address on Music at the Prize Distribution in the Shire Hall, on December 12, when he dwelt upon the part played by music in religious services, and strongly advocated the adoption of mixed choirs on musical grounds. He also referred to simple compositions, written by Mr. C. Lee-Williams, as accompaniments to well-known hymns and verses, the words being given as a recitation. Three of these were given (Miss Hadwen reciting and Mr. Aitken accompanying), and were greatly appreciated by a large audience.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the Orchestral Society on November 26 Berlioz's 'King Lear' Overture was played with splendid animation; Brahms's Symphony in D was rendered in a manner above reproach, and César Franck's Symphonic Poem 'Redemption' was performed for the first time in Liverpool. Mr. Granville Bantock conducted, and Dr. Lierhammer was the vocalist. The same Society gave another concert on December 10, when Rubinstein's 'Don Quixote' was performed 'for the first time in Liverpool.' Mr. Frederic Austin was the vocalist.

The Fourth Concert of the Philharmonic Society was the first of two special concerts, Dr. Cowen's forces playing Tchaikovsky's Symphony in E minor, and Elgar's Overture

'In the South.' Signor Busoni achieved signal success in his playing of Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat at the fifth concert of the premier Society on December 6, when Mr. Edward German's 'Rhapsody on March Themes' was performed.

In the Hardman Street Rooms on December 15 the Goossens Choir, an admirable male-voice organization, gave a concert, when the singers again revealed that roundness of intonation and precision always noticeable in those trained by Mr. Goossens.

Mr. Fred H. Burstall repeated his comprehensive lecture in the Picton Hall, on December 15, on 'Oratorios, Ancient and Modern,' when Miss Annie Nelson sang illustrative solos very tastefully.

A visit on December 1 from the Glasgow Select Choir, directed by Mr. J. Millar-Craig, filled the Philharmonic Hall. Mr. Anderson Nicol's tenor voice was heard to much advantage. The Mount Pleasant Choral Society, aided by Miss Violet Whitelaw, Miss Kerr, Mr. J. C. Greenlees, and Mr. Alec Kerr gave a successful concert on December 16. Mr. Schiever's concert, specially arranged for Beethoven's birthday anniversary (December 17), and consisting entirely of that master's music, is, like all Mr. Schiever's concerts, worthy of more than passing notice. Mr. Frederic Austin sang the song-cycle 'An die ferne Geliebte,' and the songs 'The Soldier,' 'Faithful Johnnie,' and 'Bonnie Laddie.' The Schiever Quartet played Op. 18 (No. 5) in A, Op. 95 in F minor, and Op. 13 in B flat.

I learn that the Southport Musical Festival Association has been reconstituted on a permanent basis, the Hon. Secretaries of the new body being Messrs. E. H. Andrews and T. Morris, junr. The recent performance of the 'Dream of Gerontius,' dealt with in THE MUSICAL TIMES, was as great a success financially as it was artistically.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

We are in the midst of our Musical Carnival; and, for the moment, the growing developments of suburban life do not seem to have much discounting effect upon the patronage of it. There are no new ventures to announce, unless the erection of district theatres and halls, increasing the facilities for the performance of opera and of musical comedies at cheap rates, be regarded as such. M. Busoni was at the Hallé concerts on November 24, playing Henselt's Concerto with wonderful masterfulness, and Cowen's 'Indienne' Rhapsody was in the programme. At the following concert, Brahms's Alto Rhapsody (soloist, Miss Muriel Foster) was introduced into the midst of much interesting older-world music, which included Bach's unaccompanied motet, 'Sing unto the Lord,' for double chorus. The talented choir found their way bravely and safely to the end, with only a slight drop in the pitch. At the concert on December 8 Mr. Edward Isaacs, a young Manchester artist, entered upon what it is hoped will be a successful career as a pianoforte virtuoso. Mr. Isaacs is a pupil of Lady Hallé's sister, Miss Olga Neruda, and he has studied for some years at our Royal Manchester College of Music. He played Beethoven's First Concerto with much technical success, and had an extremely encouraging reception. At the next concert, on December 15, another promising Lancashire-born young student made his diploma appearance, though he had been heard just previously in the Metropolis. Mr. Arthur Catterall has studied exclusively at the Manchester College—at first under Mr. Willy Hess, but later and chiefly under Dr. Brodsky, the Principal. It was a Tchaikovsky night, and young Catterall played the sad-fated composer's brilliant Violin Concerto in D. He was eminently successful. His technique is good, his style is sympathetic, his impulses are sane, and his musical appreciation seems genuine. Owing to the indisposition of Signor Risi-gari, Dr. Brodsky is temporarily leading the orchestra; and it was a gracious gift for the audience when, at the close of the performance of the Concerto, master and pupil shook hands.

At the Gentlemen's Concerts Mr. Santley sang on November 28. He husbanded his powers in his earlier efforts; but upon reaching the fine dramatic vocal exercise, 'Agitato da smania funesta,' from Paer's long-forgotten 'I Fuorusciti,' he fairly startled as well as delighted the audience. The programme included Mendelssohn's 'Reformation' Symphony, and Bizet's naïve Suite, 'Jeux d'Enfants.' The composer of 'Carmen' could scarcely unbend sufficiently for his juvenile task; but Dr. Richter drew interest from each of the five movements—Trumpet and Drum, The Doll, The Top, Husband and Wife, and The Ball. The programme of the Brodsky Quartet Concert on November 30 consisted of String Quartets by Dittersdorf and Schubert (that in G major, Op. 161), and Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet in E flat. Dittersdorf showed himself more guileless even than his guide, philosopher, and friend, Haydn. The Quartet is little more than a suite for violin, with string accompaniments, and Dr. Brodsky accordingly asserted himself with delightful effect. Miss Fanny Davies joined the artists in the representative Schumann Quintet, and showed once again her instinctive gifts as a player in concerted music. Mr. Spelman is to be specially commended for his beautiful tone in connection with the important viola part.

Mr. Brand Lane works hard and successfully with his series of popular Subscription Concerts. On December 17 Mr. Lane gave his annual performance of the 'Messiah.' The soloists were Madame Albani, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Andrew Black. The choir of Mr. Lane's Philharmonic Society sang, as usual, with fine enthusiasm and effect. A performance of the oratorio was proceeding at the same time at Mr. A. J. Cross's Concerts. If the number of performances of the great Christmas Oratorio taking place in the north could be known, the figures would surprise those dwellers in the south who are unacquainted with our Lancashire choral zeal.

At the second Harrison Concert Miss Marie Hall produced a great impression by her brilliant execution in the playing of Paganini's Concerto in D. The Ladies' Concerts, held in the afternoons, fortnightly, though introducing many artists, seldom meet with a disappointment; but during the month Miss Susan Strong has failed the concerts on one occasion, and Madame Von Dulong on another. Miss Ella Spravka, Miss Gleeson-White, Mr. Von Dulong, Mr. Ernesto Consolo, and Mr. F. Bonavia—a well-known local violinist, a member of the Hallé Orchestra—sufficed, however, to invest the concerts with artistic interest.

The Vocal Society (conductor, Dr. Henry Watson) gave the second concert of their thirty-eighth season on December 14. There was no work in the programme of more extended character than Mendelssohn's 'Festgesang'; but the solo singing of some of the members of the choir betrayed the secret of the merit of the concerted singing. Our principal amateur orchestral organization, the Beethoven Society, gallantly attacked Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony at their last concert on December 6. Dr. Henry Watson, on December 2, gave a most interesting lecture at the Manchester University, of which he holds a lectureship. His subject was 'The Early English Viols.' Miss Hélène Dolmetsch, on the viol da gamba, took a prominent share in providing the musical illustrations. Mr. R. H. Wilson, the Hallé chorus-master, gave, on December 14, the last of his four lectures on 'The History of the Oratorio.' It contained an earnest appreciation of Sir Edward Elgar's work in this great province of music.

We understand that Mr. Rawdon Briggs will take the leadership of the Hallé Orchestra, of which, as well as of the Brodsky Quartet, he has for a long time been a member. The final preparations are in progress for the twentieth annual conference of The Incorporated Society of Musicians, to be held here from the 2nd to the 7th of January, inclusive. The untimely death of Mr. Arthur Johnstone, the able music critic of the Manchester Guardian, is the source of deep and widespread regret. Reference is made to this sad event on page 23.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Two of the most notable concerts of the season have been due to the energy of the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union. The first was a visit from the London Symphony Orchestra, when a fine programme, which included Beethoven's 'Leonora No. 3' Overture, Mozart's G minor Symphony, and Strauss's 'Death and Transfiguration,' was played to perfection. The second was the first performance in the district of Elgar's 'Apostles.' The choir sang with their accustomed certainty and excellent tone, and to the Hallé Orchestra were entrusted the all-important orchestral accompaniments. The soloists, all good, were Miss Agnes Nichols, Miss Muriel Foster, Messrs. Andrew Black, Robert Burnett, H. Lane Wilson, and William Green. Mr. J. M. Preston conducted with his usual thoroughness.

The Newcastle Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. George Dodds) gave a creditable performance of Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron' on December 8, and the Newcastle Amateur Vocal Society (Mr. J. Jeffries) of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' on December 15.

Vigorous renderings of Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' and 'Jephtha' were given by the Newcastle Postal Telegraph (Mr. J. Hutchinson) and Gateshead Vocal (Mr. G. Robinson) Societies respectively, but both choirs have much to achieve yet in the direction of soft singing.

The Bishop Auckland Musical Union performed Berlioz's 'Faust' on December 7, and the Middlesbrough Musical Union 'St. Paul' on December 14, both conducted by Mr. N. Kilburn.

The Stockton Choral and Orchestral Society, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Wilson, showed excellent work in performances (on December 8) of 'Summer' and 'Autumn,' from Haydn's 'Seasons,' Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' and Mozart's G minor Symphony; and on December 15 the Darlington Society, of similar constitution, gave a concert, at which glees were sung by the choir, and Handel's String Concerto in B minor and Gade's 'Novelletten' were well played by the orchestra. Mr. T. Henderson conducted.

An interesting event in the history of the Newcastle Chamber Music Society was the visit of Dr. Richard Strauss on December 16, when the programme was devoted entirely to his works. Mr. Max Mossel joined the composer in his Violin Sonata, and Messrs. Heinrich Suck and Johan Hock participated in the Pianoforte Quintet in C minor (Op. 13). Mr. John Harrison sang five of Strauss's songs very beautifully.

A number of concerts can only be tabulated:—Dunston Choral Society (first performance here of Parry's 'War and Peace,' with, unfortunately, only pianoforte accompaniment), and Newcastle Co-operative Choral Society, Gade's 'Crusaders,' both concerts conducted by Mr. W. Maddock. Durham Musical Society (conductor, Mr. W. Ellis), Handel's 'Acis and Galatea'; Spennymoor Musical Society (Rev. Canon Hughes, conductor), Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and Mendelssohn's '42nd Psalm'; Jarrow Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. Geo. Dodds), Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander' and Macfarren's 'May Day'; Tynemouth Amateur Vocal Society (conductor, Mr. M. Fairs), Bridge's 'Inchcape Rock' and Hiller's 'Song of Victory'; and Willington Choral Society (conductor, Rev. G. W. Anson Firth), Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night.'

Miss Emmie Ogden, a local young lady, gave a successful pianoforte recital on December 1, and proved herself to be a fluent and brilliant performer.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first concert of the season given by the Norwich Philharmonic Society (conductor, Dr. F. Bates) took place in St. Andrew's Hall on December 15, when M. Jean Gérardy was the great attraction, it being his first appearance in Norwich. The programme included Haydn's Violoncello Concerto in D, and solos for the violoncello by Bach, Saint-Saëns, Schubert, and Popper, delightfully played by M. Jean Gérardy. Miss Teresa Del Riego was the vocalist. The band, principally composed of local players, played Schubert's 'Rosamunde' Overture and Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first of the Nottingham Orchestral Concerts took place on December 1. The programme opened with Arthur Hervey's Overture 'Youth,'—a new work here and one which we would gladly welcome again—and Stanford's 'Irish' Symphony was also a novelty. The remainder of the programme was entirely Wagnerian. Mr. Frederic Austin sang 'Pipes of Pan' (Elgar), 'Was duftet' and 'Star of Eve,' for each of which he received quite an ovation. Mr. Allen Gill conducted and Mr. Lyell-Taylor led the orchestra. The attendance at Miss Cantelo's first chamber concert on December 8 gave evidence of the increased interest in chamber music. Dvorák's Quintet was superbly rendered by the Kruse Quartet, with Miss Cantelo at the pianoforte. A fine performance of Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 31, No. 3) was given by Miss Cantelo, and Mr. Kruse played 'Garten Melodie' (Schumann-Rudorff) and 'Hungarian Dance' (Joachim-Brahms). A very brilliant performance of Schumann's String Quartet in A major concluded this enjoyable concert.

The Leicester Philharmonic Society gave their first performance on December 8, when the programme was confined to Wagnerian selections. Madame Clementine de Vere, Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, and Mr. Harold Wilde were the soloists, and Mr. H. B. Ellis conducted. Cowen's 'Rose Maiden' was performed by the Melton Mowbray Choral Society on December 8. The soloists were Miss Christine Warner, Miss Dora Hunt, Mr. Ripley Evans, and Mr. Sidney Stoddard.

Nottingham is very proud of its Police Band, and it would be invidious not to mention the very bright and cheerful performance which these musical guardians of the peace and property gave on December 8, when their musical abilities were not found lacking in Tchaikovsky's '1812,' the 'Tannhäuser' Overture and the 'Rakoczy' March. Solos were rendered by Miss Gwladys Roberts and Mr. Charles Saunders, and among others a song by the Chief Constable, Mr. P. S. Clay. Mr. G. Essex was the accompanist.

The West Bridgford Choral Society opened their season on December 16 with a very bright performance of Sullivan's 'Martyr of Antioch.' The choruses went well, and Madame Norledge, Madame Ethel Elgar, Mr. Heather, Mr. Charles Keywood, and Mr. Harry Reynolds were responsible for the solos. Mr. J. B. Lyddon conducted.

On December 20 Mr. Harold Henry's Orchestral Society opened their thirteenth season. The programme contained 'Gipsy Suite' (German), Overture 'Der Freischütz' (Weber), and Spanish Dances (Moszkowski). Mr. Sydney T. Sadler conducted.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

We have had a good deal of music in Oxford this term. On November 3, in the Town Hall, and under the auspices of the Musical Club, the Bach Choir, supported by the Oxford Orchestra, gave an excellent rendering of Brahms's truly-beautiful 'Song of Destiny.' The other part of the programme was purely orchestral and consisted of Bach's Overture in B minor for strings and flute, Mr. Fransella playing the solo part; next came Beethoven's ever-welcome Violin Concerto in D major, Miss Maud MacCarthy being the soloist; and lastly, Mozart's great Symphony in C ('Jupiter,' co-called). It was a capital concert from first to last, and was most ably conducted throughout by Dr. H. P. Allen.

On the following day, in the Assembly Room of the Town Hall, two most enjoyable performances of ancient music were given by Miss Taphouse, assisted by the Misses Chaplin (violins), Miss Leila Bull (oboe), and Mr. R. Maitland (tenor vocalist). The harpsichord used was one manufactured by Burkat Shudi and Broadwood, dated 1781. The instrument contained five stops, one composition pedal, a Venetian swell, and two keyboards. The spinet, by Harrison, was made in 1749, while the clavichord, by Haas, of Hamburg, bears the date 1743. The concert opened with Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E (from Book II. of the '48'), delightfully played by Miss Taphouse on the clavichord. She also performed on the spinet a gigue by Dr. Arne. We should indeed like to have included the whole of this choice programme, but must content ourselves with saying that Purcell's 'Golden Sonata' was excellently rendered on the harpsichord, the two violins and violoncello lending assistance. We fervently hope Miss Taphouse will let us hear more of these beautiful old instruments and their truly lovely music on future occasions.

On November 7 Mr. Gervase Elwes, Miss Ada Thomas, and Miss Edith Clegg gave an excellent concert in the Assembly Room of the Town Hall; and on November 16, in the Sheldonian Theatre, the Professor of Music, Sir Hubert Parry, discoursed on 'National Tastes and their Influence' before a numerous audience. The lecture, which proved to be most attractive, was vocally illustrated by Miss N. Hawker and Mr. F. Johnson, of the Royal College of Music, both of whom sang excellently.

In the Town Hall, on December 1, under the conductorship of Mr. H. B. Wilsdon, the Oxford Vocal Society gave Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' and the first two scenes from Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha.' The band was not above reproach; but we must award unstinted praise to the choir, warming as they did at once to their work, and singing moreover with the best spirit of enthusiasm.

On December 6, in the Town Hall, under the auspices of the Musical Club, Mr. Leonard Borwick, Mr. Maurice Sons (violin), and Mr. Gérardy (violinello) gave an excellent chamber concert, and the Balliol Sunday Evening Concerts have been continued as usual during the term, under the able direction of Dr. Walker.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Sheffield Amateur Musical Society, with a largely increased honorary and active membership, performed Brahms's 'Requiem' in the Albert Hall on December 19. The appointment, as joint conductors, of Mr. Henry J. Wood and Mr. J. A. Rodgers, in succession to Mr. Schüllhammer (retired), has produced happy results, and the concert directed by Mr. Wood was completely successful. In the 'Requiem' the chorus won a veritable triumph, singing the work not only with precision, beauty and fulness of tone, and a sensitive expressiveness, but also with a deep artistic realization of the significance and inwardness of the music and text. At the close Mr. Wood and the chorus-master were warmly recalled. Mrs. Henry J. Wood and Mr. Frederic Austin were the soloists. The second part of the programme was mainly instrumental. Of the fine band of over sixty players, five-sixths represented local talent, and under the magical sway of Mr. Wood they covered themselves with credit.

The month of December was an exceptionally busy one. The subscription system, by which most of the local musical societies exist, and the exigencies of rehearsals, throw most of the concerts into that month and the month of March.

The Heeley Musical Union, which is doing laudable work under Mr. M. Tomlinson, gave a well-performed performance of 'St. Paul.' In the same musical suburb, the concerts of the Heeley Wesley Choral Society (with A. R. Gaul's 'Ruth' and Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion,' under Mr. R. M. Bullmore) and the Heeley Orchestral Society (in an interesting programme directed by Mr. A. Bagshaw) were well patronized and musically successful. The Brincliffe Orchestral Society mustered eighty strong in the Albert Hall on December 12 to meet Mr. Edward German, who conducted his 'Hamlet' tone-poem, 'Welsh Rhapsody,' and 'Nell Gwyn' Dances. Mr. J. H. Parkes had rehearsed his force diligently, and the amateurs played very well. The Sheffield Amateur Instrumental Society, not to be outdone in the friendly rivalry, entered the lists with Schumann's 'B flat Symphony,' Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman' Overture, and other pieces, performed under Mr. H. Dean's direction.

The launching of a new South Yorkshire Musical Society—the Wombwell and District Choral Union—was attended with complete success. Dr. Cowen's 'Rose Maiden' was capably sung under Mr. G. M. Coates, band and chorus numbering nearly 200. At Chesterfield an attempt to extend the scope of the Harmonic Society took the form of an 'Elijah' performance, with creditable results to the members and Mr. G. A. Seed, conductor. The Norton Lees Choral Society's enterprise in essaying Elgar's 'King Olaf' was justified by the gratifying choral success won by Mr. Horace Reynolds's forces. The Barnsley St. Cecilia Society gave a successful concert under Dr. Coward, with Coleridge-Taylor's 'Meg Blane' (Madame Marie Brema in the title part) as the chief attraction. The Wirksworth Choral Society sang Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George' in the Town Hall, Mr. Carl Ashover conducting a successful performance.

MUSIC IN THE SOUTH-WEST OF ENGLAND.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE THREE TOWNS.

The new series of concerts authorized by the Corporation of Plymouth was inaugurated on the first Saturday in October with gratifying success. Continuing weekly, these concerts have been largely attended. A conspicuous occasion was the first appearance for this season of the Guildhall Choir on the last Saturday in November. This choir, under the direction of the Borough organist Mr. H. Moreton, has attained a prominence in point of numbers and excellence which is acknowledged throughout the district. The work performed was the 'Hiawatha' trilogy, with Miss Euneta Truscott, Mr. Will Foster, and Mr. Charles Knowles as principals. The rich and cultured tone-quality of the chorus was excellent. The band consisted of local musicians.

Dr. Weekes's Choral and Orchestral Societies did not make an appearance in the concert-room last season, and therefore they were prepared to lead off early this winter (October 26) with a very enjoyable rendering of 'Elijah,' with Miss Caroline Hatchard, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Messrs. Albert Collings and Andrew Black in the solo parts. The chorus, by the degree of excellence attained, proved that a season's rest had not impaired their vigour. Dr. S. Weekes conducted.

Mr. Frank Winterbottom has given two of his eleventh series of Symphony Concerts at Stonehouse (November 8 and December 13), at which Mozart's C major and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony (the latter for the first time in the Three Towns) were performed.

It is gratifying to record that the local musicians of Plymouth are cultivating high-class chamber music and that their efforts are meeting with success. Miss C. H. Robinson was this season, as usual, first on the scene, and on October 6 gave her annual chamber concert in Plymouth. The chief novelty, to the majority of the audience, was Dvorák's Piano-forte Quartet (Op. 87), in which the concert-giver (at the pianoforte) was associated with Mr. Spencer Dyke, Mr. Reginald Ball, and Mr. C. G. Pike. Miss Minnie Pearce was the vocalist.

On October 27, at the first of the enjoyable concerts given by the Misses Smith, Brahms's Fourth Trio, in C minor, was given an interesting and faithful interpretation which proved the three sisters to be artists of uncommon attainments. At the second concert on December 1, the Second Quartet in A (Op. 26) was played, Mr. Reginald Ball taking the viola part. A Suite (Op. 16) of Saint-Saëns's was also included in the programme. The vocalists for the two concerts were Miss Marion Battisill and Mr. Will Foster.

VARIOUS CITIES AND TOWNS.

'Elijah' was performed by the Exeter Oratorio Society, under Dr. H. J. Edwards's direction, on November 29, the chief features of the chorus singing being refinement of tone and expression. Miss Euneta Truscott, Miss Jessie King, Mr. Dean Trotter, and Mr. S. J. Bishop were the principals.

The Philharmonic Societies of Falmouth and Truro combined their respective forces with very excellent results, not only in volume of tone, but in giving a performance of general merit. The programme of the concert given in each town—Falmouth on December 5, Truro on December 6—incorporated Dr. C. H. Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander,' in which the chorus were associated with Miss Maggie Purvis and Mr. Dan Price.

On November 23 the Torquay Musical Association (band and chorus of 130 performers, ably conducted by Mr. T. Henry Webb) performed Stanford's 'The Battle of the Baltic,' a selection from Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music, Cherubini's 'Anacreon,' and Sterndale Bennett's 'Parisina' Overtures. Madame Alice Gomez was the solo vocalist, and Mr. C. Pike played some violoncello solos. The choir sang Pearlsall's part-song 'When Allan-ale,' and the 'Forester's Song' of Schumann, for male voices with accompaniment of four horns and trombone.

Helston Choral Society performed the 'Creation' on November 29. The conductor, Mr. E. Quintrell, and his colleagues scoring a distinct success, with Madame Mary Poole, Mr. J. C. Truscott and Mr. A. E. Old as soloists.

The foregoing record indicates considerable musical activity in the locality.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

YORK.—MR. NOBLE'S 'GLORIA DOMINI.'

This time I must put the City of York in the forefront of my record, since it has distinguished itself by the production of a novelty of considerable interest and importance. This is the cantata, 'Gloria Domini,' which Mr. T. Tertius Noble, organist of York Minster, has written, and which was given on December 13 for the first time by the York Musical Society, of which he is conductor. The work is, in effect, a musical version of the festival of the dedication of Solomon's Temple, told in the stately language of the Old Testament, from which a libretto has been most judiciously compiled by the Dean of Ely. The choral writing is the strong feature of the cantata, and Mr. Noble's facility as a contrapuntist has enabled him to give a most appropriate air of sumptuousness to the psalms of praise supposed to be sung by a thankful people, by means of the melodies which he weaves round his themes. Warmth of melody and brilliance of colour characterize the music, not the least successful portion of which is the 'Solenn Prelude,' meant to suggest the procession of the Ark to its resting-place within the veil. The People's Psalm (Psalm cxxxviii., 1-5) is a particularly stately and effective chorus, and there are also two chorals, Dr. William Hayes's tune 'Hereford' and Croft's 'O God, our help in ages past' being subjected to interesting contrapuntal treatment. There is one solo part, the words of Solomon being given to a baritone soloist—in the present instance Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies. The solo music might be more vocal in its phrasing, but is dignified and solemn in effect. The orchestra is very ably handled, and the whole work gave an impression of thoughtfulness and power. It is dedicated to the Leeds Choral Union and their Secretary, Mr. H. C. Embleton, through whose generosity the free performance of 'The Apostles' in York Cathedral was given last summer. 'Gloria Domini' had the advantage of a very good all-round performance. The chorus showed their interest in the work by singing perhaps better than they have ever done before, and gave another proof of their goodwill in the shape of handsomely bound copies of the score which were formally presented to Mr. Noble and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies.

LEEDS.

Some exceedingly interesting concerts have been given at Leeds during the past month. On November 23 Dr. Walford Davies's 'Everyman' received the almost unexampled honour of a repetition within a couple of months after its first performance at the Leeds Festival. It lost nothing by repetition, but made an equally deep impression, while the chorus of the Leeds Philharmonic sang admirably, and the performance gained something, as compared with the original one, from the fact that the composer, who again conducted, showed greater control over his forces. The only principal who had taken part in the first performance was Miss Gleeson-White, the others being Mdme. Hilda Wilson, Mr. Gregory Hast, and Mr. Herbert Parker. It was followed by Stanford's 'Revenge,' conducted by the composer, and Wagner's 'Kaisermarsch,' with the English version of the choral coda that was prepared to celebrate the King's coronation. On November 26 Mr. Fricker's Municipal Orchestra introduced Haydn's beautiful 'Clock' Symphony, and played it with refinement and spirit, as they did Goldmark's brilliant 'Sakuntala' Overture. On November 30 a most interesting series of string quartets was played at the Leeds Bohemian Concert: Mozart in A (the 5th of the set dedicated to Haydn), Tschaiakovsky in F, and Brahms in C minor. Though there were some few signs of want of thorough rehearsal, the ensemble was good, especially in view of the fact that one of the quartet—Messrs. Elliott, Moxon, Hatton and Giessing—was a recent recruit.

The Headingley Choral Society is a small body to whose artistic enterprise I have already had reason to refer. On December 6 they undertook a highly interesting revival of Handel's 'Joshua,'—it was said for the first time at Leeds, and certainly the first for many years past. The abbreviated version prepared by Professor Front was used, and, within the Society's means, a most creditable performance was given under Mr. Percy Richardson's direction. The principals were Miss Swales, Miss Cover, Mr. Fred Taylor, and Mr. Ward Kemp.

On December 7 the Leeds Choral Union gave a 'Wagner programme,' consisting of the first acts of 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin,' under Mr. Alfred Benton's successful conductorship. But the interest of the occasion centred in a work by Mr. Josef Holbrooke, which had never before been heard in this country. 'Byron' (Op. 39) is in form like the 'Queen Mab,' given at the recent Leeds Festival. It is essentially an orchestral 'tone-poem,' fashioned practically in sonata form, and extended by a choral coda, based on Keats's ode 'To Byron.' The orchestral writing abounds in minute details, many of which are difficult of realization, but the choral writing is smooth and broad, consequently it was heard to the greater advantage, the orchestra of local players finding it difficult, after a single brief rehearsal, to do justice to the intricacies of the score. What the work does undeniably possess is poetry and fancy, but one would like to wait for a more favourable opportunity before attempting to determine its exact worth. It was conducted by Mr. Holbrooke, who met with a reception indicating that he is a favourite with the chorus. At the Municipal Concert on December 10 the feature of the programme consisted of Quintets by Mozart, Beethoven, and Volbach for piano-forte and wind, all three, as it happened, in the key of E flat! They were efficiently played by Messrs. Fricker, Holt, Calvert, Midgley, and Wood. On December 12 the Leeds Musical Union, under the direction of Mr. Bernard Johnson,—who is soon to leave Leeds to become organist of Bridlington Priory Church—gave one of their agreeable concerts of male-voice compositions, a set of five part-songs by Sir Edward Elgar being the most striking feature of the programme.

BRADFORD AND OTHER TOWNS.

Bradford has hardly as yet resumed its wonted activity in music. At the Subscription Concert on December 16 Berlioz's 'Faust' was given under Dr. Cowen's direction, the Hallé Orchestra and Bradford Festival Choral Society co-operating in a really brilliant performance, while Miss Helen Jaxon, Mr. Evan Williams, and Mr. Andrew Black were the principals. On December 10 the Bradford Permanent Orchestra presented an interesting programme, not too exacting for a popular audience, its most serious feature being a couple of movements from Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto, in which the soloist was a very gifted young Bradford musician, Miss M. Klepper. Mr. Allen Gill conducted.

The Keighley Musical Union showed an excellent example by choosing for their opening concert on November 29 two unduly neglected works, Schumann's 'Paradise and the Peri,' and Goring Thomas's poetic little work, 'The Sun Worshippers.' The performance, under Mr. Summerscales's direction, left something to be desired in point of finish, but credit may at least be given for excellent intentions. The principals were Miss Taggart, Miss Bradley, Mr. Wilde, and Mr. Horner. On December 14 the Keighley Orchestral Society, who are under the same zealous amateur, gave a concert at which Dvorak's 'New World' Symphony was played with much success. The pianist was Mr. Percy Grainger, the vocalist Miss Weatherley. On November 25 the Harrogate Choral Society gave a very successful performance of Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah,' under the direction of Mr. C. L. Naylor, with Madame Brema and Mr. John Coates in the chief parts.

Scarborough distinguished itself on December 6 by a most creditable performance of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius.' The chorus of the Philharmonic Society gave ample evidence of very thorough training at the hands of their conductor, Dr. Ely, and only wanted a little more beauty and volume of tone to be entirely admirable. The principals, Miss Maggie Stirling, Mr. Brearley, and Mr. Herbert Brown were all thoroughly efficient. Undoubtedly this must be pronounced the greatest thing in choral music which Scarborough has yet accomplished.

The Pudsey Choral Union, on November 21, gave a satisfactory performance of 'The Bride of Dunkerron' and 'Acis and Galatea,' under Mr. H. H. Pickard.

The energetic organist of Ripon Cathedral, Mr. C. H. Moody, gave, on December 7, what has come to be an annual performance of Brahms's 'German Requiem,' though the encouragement with which his efforts are met is not so warm that the future of these cathedral oratorio performances is as secure as it might be.

Foreign Notes.

AMSTERDAM.

It is stated that a stage performance of Wagner's 'Parsifal,' without any curtailment, will be given here in June next. Rehearsals are to commence at once, and the best German singers will be engaged. The decorations, which are to cost between three and four thousand pounds, have been ordered from Vienna. It is also said that although Frau Cosima Wagner has entered a protest, the Amsterdammers are convinced that the law is on their side.

BERLIN.

The Cecilia Society has been dissolved. It was founded more than twenty-one years ago by Alexis Höllander, who conducted the performances up to the last. One of the special aims of the Society was the production of new compositions by modern composers, or new to Berlin, and from among the long list of such works we may note Liszt's 'Christus,' Brahms's 'German Requiem,' César Franck's 'Les Béatitudes,' Dr. Cowen's 'Ruth,' Grieg's 'Olav Trygvason,' &c.—Of special interest was the first public appearance last month of the Volk-Chor, which was established last February, and already numbers two hundred members. Music is a powerful factor in modern civilization, and this new movement is of far-reaching consequence. The choir has been carefully trained by Dr. E. Lander, and the performance of Schumann's 'Paradise and the Peri' appears to have been most creditable.—Herr Weingartner has sent in his resignation as conductor of the Symphony Concerts, but a petition has been drawn up by many of the subscribers begging him to reconsider the matter.—Leoncavallo's new opera 'Der Roland von Berlin'—written at the request of the Emperor William and produced under His Majesty's direction—was first performed at the Royal Opera House on December 13.

PARIS.

A committee has been formed, with M. Camille Saint-Saëns as President and MM. Vincent d'Indy and Widor as Vice-Presidents, to promote the erection of a monument to Beethoven on the Place du Trocadéro. The design of the sculptor M. J. de Charnoy has been accepted, and the memorial is to be unveiled next May. A Beethoven festival is to be held at the same time.

PRAGUE.

Siegfried Wagner's opera 'Der Kobold,' produced at Hamburg last January, was performed here for the first time on November 27 last. The work had been well rehearsed by capellmeister Leo Blech, and admirably mounted by Director Angelo Neumann. Frau Cosima Wagner, Frl. Eva Wagner, and the composer were present, and the work was received with such enthusiasm that at the close Siegfried Wagner made a speech expressing his thanks to the director, the artists, the conductor, and the public.

ZÜRICH.

Dupont's 'La Cabrera' and Filiassi's 'Manuel Meudens,' works which won the 1st and 2nd prizes at the recent Sonzogno competition, have been performed with marked success.

GRAZ.

After the performance of Siegfried Wagner's Opera 'Der Kobold,' a banquet was given in honour of the composer, and a report of the speech which he delivered on that occasion in answer to a laudatory address runs as follows: 'It is not easy for an artist to respond to the toast. On the one hand there is the danger of his being too modest, on the other, of his becoming too boastful. I know that the honour bestowed on me for the staging of "Tannhäuser" at Bayreuth this year concerned me alone. I am equally sure that of the applause bestowed here on my "Kobold" twenty per cent. must be set down to my account, and the remaining eighty placed to the credit of my father. If my name were not Siegfried Wagner, but Smith or Brown, of this I am certain, the present distinguished company would not be here to welcome me!'

Mr. Allen K. Blackall, organist of St. Mary's Collegiate Church, Warwick, has been appointed Chorus-master of the Birmingham Festival Choral Society.

The Berks, Bucks, and Oxon. Competitive Musical Festival has reached the third year of its existence, and, in succession to the Festivals at Reading in 1903 and at Oxford in 1904, a third Festival is to be held at Aylesbury early in May, 1905. The Festival includes competitions for choirs, schools, choral societies, &c., as well as vocal quartets and solos, also for instrumental solos and concerted playing, and for composition. It has received support from all parts of the three counties, but the promoters feel that it is not yet as well known as it should be, and that there are many, whether living in one of the three counties or not, who would be glad to give it assistance and have not yet done so. The Honorary Secretaries for 1905 are Mrs. Commeline (Beaconsfield, Bucks) and Miss S. A. Blunt (Dorchester, Oxfordshire), and the acting Honorary Treasurer for the present is Mr. P. V. M. Benecke (Magdalen College, Oxford). From any of these further particulars can be obtained.

The annual conference of the Incorporated Society of Musicians will be held at Manchester from January 2 to 7. Addresses will be delivered by Sir Frederick Bridge on 'A weak point in our Musical Education'; by Mr. W. A. C. Cruickshank on 'The Progress of Music during the 19th Century'; by Mr. James Dawber on 'The advisability of still further safeguarding the entrance to the Musical Profession'; by Mr. T. Henderson on 'Some blots upon English Music'; and by Mr. S. Midgley on 'Municipalities and Music.'

Miss Adèle Haas (pupil of Mr. Willem Coenen) and Signor Parisotti gave a successful pianoforte and violin recital at the Royal Pavilion, Brighton, on December 3.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

ARMAGH.—Stendale Bennett's cantata 'The Woman of Samaria' was given in the Cathedral on December 2. The solos were sung by members of the choir, and the performance altogether was meritorious. Dr. T. Osborne Marks presided at the organ. The Philharmonic Society gave a careful rendering of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' on December 15. The principal vocalists were Miss Grime, Mr. L. Townley, and Miss Backsheen Wood. Mr. T. W. Holden presided at the pianoforte, and Dr. T. Osborne Marks conducted.

BOGNOR.—An admirable performance of Handel's 'Judas Maccabeus' was given by the Musical Society on December 14. The orchestra and chorus numbered 150 performers, and were under the conductorship of Mr. W. H. Davies. The solo vocalists were Miss Emily Shepherd, Miss Katherine Longland, Mr. James Davis, and Mr. Hargreaves Hudson.

BURSLER.—The Potteries Choral Society gave their sixth concert, assisted by the Potteries Orchestral Society, in the Town Hall on December 8. The programme included the following part-music: 'The Land of the Sun' and 'By the Lone Sea Shore' (Coleridge-Taylor), 'Homeward' (Leslie), and 'O Gladsome Light' (Sullivan). The orchestra performed Elgar's 'Chanson de Nuit' and 'Chanson de Matin,' Fantasia from 'Lohengrin,' Minuet and Trio from Mozart's G minor Symphony, and one of Brahms's 'Hungarian Dances.' The solo vocalists were Miss Jessie Grant and Mr. Adam Cope, and Mr. John Cope conducted.

CHELMSFORD.—The Musical Society gave a concert on December 13, when Handel's ode 'Alexander's Feast,' and Cowen's 'John Gilpin,' were exceedingly well performed. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Helen Trust, Miss Katharine White, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. S. F. Epston. Mr. G. Wily was leader, and Mr. F. R. Frye conducted.

CHICHESTER.—The Musical Society put forward an interesting programme on December 8, consisting of Gade's 'Christmas Eve,' Bridge's 'Cradle of Christ,' Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, and Bach's Cantata for the New Year. Sir Frederick Bridge, who directed his own work, received an enthusiastic welcome, and Dr. Read conducted the other items. The soloists were the Countess Maffei, Miss May Peters, Mr. Clifford Hunnybun, and Mr. Aubrey Millward.

GRIMSBY.—The Standard Orchestral Society gave a concert in the Town Hall on December 7. The programme included Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony, a selection from Weber's 'Oberon,' Moszkowski's Spanish Dances (Nos. 2 and 5), and the Overture to 'Semiramide.' The performance of these works, conducted by Mr. J. T. Pye, was highly meritorious.

HAWARDEN.—A concert was given in the Gymnasium on December 17 under the direction of Mr. Arthur Lyon. The chorus consisted of the County School Choir of Boys and Girls and the Mancott Male-Voice Choir. The prominent items in the programme were Stanford's 'Revenge' and 'Songs of the Sea,' and Elgar's 'Sea Pictures,' all of which were excellently performed. Mr. Arthur Lyon, who is headmaster of the County School, may be congratulated on the results of his choir training.

KETTERING.—Coleridge-Taylor's cantata 'Scenes from Hiawatha' was given with much success by the Choral Society in Victoria Hall on December 6, under the direction of Mr. H. G. Gotch. There was a full orchestra, and the solo vocalists were Miss Agnes Baines, Mr. W. R. Maxwell, and Mr. John Browning.

KIMBERLEY (CAPE COLONY).—The Musical Society concluded its fourth season on November 16 by a concert composed mainly of music by British composers. The programme included 'The Ballad of the Clamperdown' (Bridge), 'Orpheus with his lute' (German), and 'How sweet the moonlight sleeps' (Leslie). Mr. J. Frank Proudman conducted the choir and orchestra of 100 performers, who gave an excellent performance.

KING'S LYNN.—The Musical Society gave two performances on December 7. That in the afternoon consisted of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' the use of St. Nicholas's Chapel being granted for the purpose. The choir was augmented by contingents from Swaffham, Downham, Heacham, and Hunstant, making a total of about 230 voices, with an orchestra of over thirty performers. The solo vocalists were Miss Gertrude Woodall, Princess Te Ranghi Pai, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. Ivor Foster. The chief feature of the evening concert, given in the Music Hall, was Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast,' Mr. A. H. Cross conducted and Dr. A. H. Mann presided at the organ.

LINCOLN.—The Lincoln Musical Society, of which Dr. G. J. Bennett, organist of Lincoln Cathedral, is the enthusiastic conductor, opened their ninth season, on December 8, at the Corn Exchange. Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride,' which occupied the first part of the programme, was very dramatically rendered, the fine and well-balanced choir showing genuine interest in the work, while the principals, Miss Helen Jaxon, Mr. Anderson Nicol, and Mr. Frederic Austin, were in excellent form. The efficient band, led by Mr. Edward O'Brien, included players from London, Nottingham, and Sheffield. The second part of the programme included the Overture to 'William Tell' and the Introduction to Act III. of 'Die Meistersinger,' the concert being brought to a successful conclusion by a spirited rendering of the march and chorus 'Hail, bright abode,' from 'Tannhäuser.' Mr. H. S. Trevitt accompanied.

LOUTH.—The Choral Society opened their thirty-eighth season at the Town Hall on November 24 with a performance of Haydn's 'Creation.' The band and chorus numbered about 110 performers, and the solo vocalists were Miss Winifred Wynne, Mr. Furness Williams, and Mr. Harry Dearth. The choir sang with much spirit and good attack, and the orchestra, ably led by Mr. J. E. Hilton, was in every respect satisfactory. Mr. Owen M. Price conducted.

MAIDENHEAD.—The Philharmonic Society gave their first Subscription Concert in the Town Hall on December 8, when the chief features of the programme were Mendelssohn's 'As the hart pants' and Tschaiovsky's 'How blest are they.' The choir also sang the part-songs 'The Dance' and 'Lullaby' from Elgar's 'Bavarian Highlands,' and Stanford's 'Diaphenia.' Miss Emily Shepherd was the solo vocalist and Mr. A. E. Baker conducted.

MANNINGHAM.—The first of this season's concerts by the Salem Musical Union took place at the Salem Assembly Hall on December 12, when Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' and Lee Williams's Festival Hymn (written for last year's Gloucester Festival) were the chief features of the programme. The choir sang creditably, and the solo vocalists were Miss Agnes Baines, Miss Elsie Bradley, Mr. J. R. Sykes, and Mr. Harry Horner. Mr. J. Paget Priestley conducted.

MORECAMBE.—The Madrigal Society gave a fine selection of madrigals and part-songs at the Alhambra Palace on November 30. Cornelius, Berlioz, Hugo Wolf, Wilbye, W. H. Bell, Gibbons, and C. Harford Lloyd were represented by choice pieces, which were sung with much refinement. Mr. A. Davis conducted.

PAISLEY.—The choir concert was given in High Parish Church on November 29, when Barnby's 'Rebekah' was performed. The solo vocalists were Miss Bessie Boyack, Mr. J. S. Adams, and Mr. J. Fleming. Mr. R. A. Chatterton presided at the organ and also gave two solos on that instrument.

PORTSMOUTH.—Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' was given by the Philharmonic Society at the Town Hall on December 1. The large orchestra and choir did excellent work, and the solo vocalists were Miss Mabel Manson, Miss Hannah Jones, Mr. William Green, Mr. William Coleman, and Mr. Dan Price. Mr. G. S. L. Löhr assisted at the organ, and Mr. Monk Gould conducted a successful performance.

READING.—The Philharmonic Society gave a successful performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' on December 6, at the Town Hall. Great credit is due to Dr. F. J. Read, the conductor, who worked very hard to bring about so satisfactory a result. The soloists were Miss Euneta Truscott, Mr. Albert Collings, and Mr. Meurig James, all of whom acquitted themselves admirably in their respective parts. Mr. Alfred Burnett was leader of the orchestra, and Mr. W. D. Boseley rendered most useful service at the organ.

SEVENOAKS.—The St. John's Choral Society gave their tenth concert on December 14 in the Club Hall, when Handel's 'Judas Maccabeus' was performed by the choir and orchestra, consisting of 120 performers. The solo vocalists were Miss Estella Linden, Miss Bessie Grant, Mr. Vincent Hards, and Mr. Albert Garcia. Mr. W. A. Taylor conducted.

SOUTHAMPTON.—The Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Parry's Oratorio 'Judith' at the Hartley University College on December 1. The choir, comprising 114 voices, sang well and were supported by an orchestra of fifty performers. The solo vocalists were Miss Beatrice Spencer, Miss Norah Harding, Mr. Anderson Nicol, and Mr. Foxton Ferguson. The Rev. G. H. Moberly conducted.

SOUTHPORT.—An interesting programme was presented by the Southport Choral Society on November 29, when they gave their first concert of the season in the Cambridge Hall. The choir rendered their part in Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha' with great delicacy and charm, and Elgar's part-song 'O happy eyes' was also beautifully sung. The third act of 'Tannhäuser' was given with unusual smoothness and dramatic power. The orchestra was responsible for Elgar's March in D, 'Pomp and Circumstance,' and Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite. The solos were in the safe hands of Miss Lilia de Berna, Mr. Edward Arthur, and Mr. Dillon Shallard. Mr. J. C. Clarke ably conducted.

SUNDERLAND.—The first concert of the West End Musical Society was given in St. Hilda's Parish Hall on December 14, the chief feature of the programme being Gade's choral ballad 'The Erl-King's Daughter.' The choir was well balanced, and the orchestra played creditably, the whole performance reflecting credit upon the conductor, Mr. J. L. Smith. The second part included the madrigals 'It was a lover and his lass' (Morley), 'In these delightful, pleasant groves' (Purcell), and 'Down in a flow'ry vale' (Festa).

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—The annual Conversazione of the Tunbridge Wells Vocal Association was given in the Town Hall on December 12, when the first part of the programme consisted of Cowen's latest work 'John Gilpin.' A most excellent rendering of this amusing cantata was given, and met with an enthusiastic reception. The choir showed excellence of training at the hands of their conductor, Mr. W. W. Starmer.

Answers to Correspondents.

H. G.—We have pleasure in giving the following information in reply to your inquiry concerning 'whether any tune was specially composed for Charles Wesley's hymn "Hark! how all the welkin rings."' The hymn does not seem to have obtained popularity among the Methodists in the 18th century. John Wesley does not include it in the principal hymn-books issued by him, and it is not in his final hymnal issued in 1780. Moreover, the words did not get into the 'Methodist Hymn Book' till well into the 19th century, when it was included in one of the many Supplements issued from time to time to preserve the copyright. No tune is set to the hymn in any of John Wesley's tune-books; but it appears in Butts's 'Harmonica Sacra' (c. 1757) mated to the Easter Hymn, from 'Lyra Davidica'. As to the appearance of the hymn at the end of the Prayer Book, there is a story that about the year 1790 the University Printer inserted it—as a kind of Festival Hymn after the Metrical Psalms—to fill up a vacant space! But why the printer hit upon this particular hymn and where he obtained it are circumstances not known. We may add that the hymn appeared first in Wesley's 'Hymns and Sacred Poems' (1739), and in the four subsequent editions of the book. In Whitefield's 'Collection' (1753) the words 'welkin rings,' &c., were changed to the form of the hymn now in use.

SPHINX.—The Sphinxes in Schumann's Carnaval are—

No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.
S C H A	A S C H	A S C H

corresponding to the notes printed in the copy. No. 1 is to be read as S (Es), C, H, A, the musical letters in the composer's name; Nos. 2 and 3 as As, C, H, and A, S, C, H, these letters forming the name of a town (Asch) in Bohemia, the residence of a Robert von Fricken, to whose daughter, Ernestine, Schumann was actually engaged at the time (1834). In a letter to his friend Henrietta Voigt he says that he took pleasure in the 'musical' name of the fair damsel's birthplace, because the letters composing it were also the only musical letters in his own name. As Ernestine was Schumann's pupil as well as his fiancée, the conception of this pianoforte classic is of a distinctly romantic nature.

BAND SERGEANT.—As in the case of many fine old tunes the origin of 'The British Grenadiers' is more or less obscure. Mr. Frank Kidson—an excellent authority on such matters—says the melody is probably of the reign of Queen Anne, and that it has since then passed down traditionally in the regiment to which it refers. The air is not unlike certain other melodies, e.g. 'Sir Edward Nowell's delight' (printed in a Dutch book, 1634), 'All you that love good fellows,' 'The London Prentice,' &c. Mr. Kidson also refers to a melody in the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, called 'Nancie,' which certainly bears some resemblance to 'The British Grenadiers'; perhaps 'Nancie,' was the girl one of those red-coated and bearskinned warriors left behind him.

T. S.—It is always a risk to state the 'greatest' of this or that; but in regard to the use of the crescendo a fine example is to be found in the coda to the last movement of Schubert's great Symphony in C 'where,' as Sir George Grove says, 'the operation is divided into distinct steps—first 8 bars ppp; 24 bars pp; 12 bars p; 16 bars crescendo to mf; 12 bars crescendo to f; then a crescendo of 8 bars to ff; and lastly a final advance of 36 more bars to fff. As to the greatest softness, it might reasonably be assumed that any composer soft enough to write ppppp would provide ear trumpets for his auditors, even for those who were not hard of hearing.

PLYMPTON.—You had far better keep to your present occupation than think of entering the musical profession. Why should you not combine your organ playing with the 'daily round'? You might enter for the organ examination of the Associated Board, or that of the Associateship of the Royal College of Organists. It would doubtless be a great advantage to you to become assistant to a well-qualified organist and choirmaster.

G. C. R.—As you can obtain the whole of Beethoven's and Haydn's sonatas for pianoforte and violin for a few shillings in the Peters edition, you would have no difficulty in making your own selection.

R. C. S.—We regret that we cannot trace the theme of the march you send us, which, according to your account, 'used to be played about the beginning of the Volunteer movement at the time of our war with Russia at Sebastopol,' and, as you say, 'is generally used to the words "Vote, vote, vote for Mr. So and So."' Perhaps some of our readers can volunteer some information in regard to this political strain.

L. R. A. M.—(1) See Book 39 of Franklin Taylor's Progressive Studies for aids towards perfecting the staccato touch. (2) In arpeggio: the upper G after the lower note. (3) The grace note first, to be immediately followed by the complete chord in both hands.

UNBRIDGE.—Your little son of six is doubtless musically gifted, but there are instances of similar precocity. Do not unduly force him in the development of his talent: there seems to be good reason for giving him a well-regulated musical education.

H. F. G.—(1) Have you tried Franklin Taylor's 'Progressive studies for the pianoforte'? Four books of these are devoted to the development of the left hand. (2) You had better consult a medical man about the lump on the back of your hand.

VERITAS.—It was of Chopin that an enthusiastic admirer (feminine, of course), on hearing of the composer's death, remarked, with a perfectly dry eye, 'Now I can have all his music bound.'

MR. HERBERT PARKER

(BARITONE).

Vicar Choral, Lichfield Cathedral; Soloist, Leeds Musical Festival, 1904.

"DIE MEISTERSINGER."—LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—"Mr. Parker has exactly the qualities of a good Beckmesser, and his singing was full of fun which never degenerated into buffoonery."—The Times, October 10, 1904.

"MESSIAH."—HUDDERSFIELD.—"No better exponent of the bass solos could be wished for than Mr. Herbert Parker. . . . His voice was even and full of deep musical resonance, his singing was broad and finely sustained, and it was certain, definite, faultless in intonation, highly expressive, and free from exaggeration throughout. . . . We must say that we have not heard 'Why do the nations,' nor 'The trumpet shall sound,' so cleverly and effectively rendered for many years."—Huddersfield Examiner, December 17, 1904.

SONATA IN D MINOR FOR THE ORGAN

COMPOSED BY

ALFRED H. ALLEN.

Price Three Shillings.

"Organists may be recommended a Sonata in D minor by Alfred H. Allen. This is an extremely well-written work by one who evidently is an expert organist. In the Prelude the composer employs the rarely-used seven-four, alternating with three-four, tempo. His counterpoint flows naturally and without effort. There is an excellent fugal section in this movement. The Intermezzo is melodious and simple in construction, an Allegretto Scherzando in the middle affording effective contrast. The Finale worthily concludes the sonata."—Morning Post.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)

FOR

SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

ANTON DVOŘÁK.

(Op. 58.)

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY

FRED. J. W. CROWE
(Organist of Chichester Cathedral).THE ACCOMPANIMENTS ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN BY H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

NOTE.

This English version of Dvořák's "Stabat Mater" brings the beauties of the work within the reach of those who, for various reasons, prefer not to use the original Latin. The adaptation avoids the use of any passages of a controversial nature, thus making it available for use in any English place of worship; and, whilst preserving as far as possible the original rhythm, no pains have been spared to make this English version both vocal and practical.

Chichester, 1904.

F. J. W. C.

The accompaniment, while not professing to be purely an organ arrangement (which would necessitate the use of three staves) will, it is hoped, be found useful at the organ and at the same time easily playable on the piano at rehearsals.

Very few suggestions as to stops have been made, but the plain indication of the pedal part throughout the work and of the instrumentation (marked in brackets) will be a useful guide to the organist in his interpretation of this complex score.

H. E. B.

If there is one choral work of the past twenty years that can claim to have been universally and thoroughly accepted as a masterpiece by all who have any right to express an opinion, it is this most beautiful composition. Its position among the masterpieces of music is too assured to need any defence, and it may suffice to recall the fact that since it made the composer's reputation in this country, it has been heard at the Cathedral Festivals of Worcester, Hereford, Gloucester, Chester and Lincoln, at the Birmingham, Norwich, Leeds, Sheffield, and Hovingham Festivals, and, of course, in countless churches and concert-rooms, one memorable occasion being in 1891, when the composer conducted it at Cambridge, on the day when he received an honorary degree from the University. . . . The version, which is by the organist of Chichester Cathedral, Dr. Crowe, is at least a translation of the original, and not an irrelevant and absurd concoction like the unsectarian libretto, entitled "Tribulation," which one William Ball provided for Rossini's "Stabat Mater."—Yorkshire Post.

STOOD THE MOURNFUL MOTHER WEeping

(STABAT MATER DOLOROSA)

ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY

REV. J. MONSELL

MUSIC BY

F. ROLLASON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

"A second performance of Rollason's beautiful setting of the 'Stabat Mater' was given in St. Michael's Church on Wednesday evening. . . . A second hearing confirms first impressions that it is a work of genius—as Canon Atkinson said at the close—a deeply reverent, sympathetic, and expressive setting of very beautiful words."—Coventry Herald.

"A feature of the service at St. Andrew's Church last evening, and which attracted a large congregation, was the rendering by the choir of F. Rollason's 'Stabat Mater Dolorosa.' In the solemnity of such surroundings and to an audience already impressed by the sacredness of the day, the beautiful music of this work, so touchingly descriptive of events connected with the Crucifixion, appealed with much force."—Newcastle Daily Journal.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S PASSION SERVICE

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul have to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

CHURCH HYMNS

NEW EDITION

CONTAINING 658 HYMNS.

For purposes of comparison of "Church Hymns" with other compilations, a copy of the Musical Edition will be sent to any applicant at half-price, 1s. 2d., and postage 4d.

IT IS SAFE TO SAY THAT THIS HYMN-BOOK IS NOW ONE OF THE CHEAPEST ON THE MARKET.

The Guardian says: "The book in every way has been very much enriched and improved. It is worthy of the great Society which issues it, and will no doubt obtain the circulation that it deserves. The musical value of the present collection must be rated high."

The Church Times says: "Judging the collection as a whole, we consider it a fine tune-book, ably edited, and worthy of a very high place among our English hymnaries."

Dr. C. W. PEARCE, in The Organist and Choirmaster, says: "One is compelled to say, upon closing this book, that in many ways the new edition of 'Church Hymns' surpasses the other collections now in use in the Church of England."

The Musical Times says: "The copious indexes are all that could be desired, and Dr. Lloyd has discharged his editorial duties with conspicuous success. The book is a welcome contribution to the worship-song of the Church."

IN ORDER TO FACILITATE THE INTRODUCTION OF THE BOOK, CERTAIN EDITIONS WILL BE SUPPLIED AT ONE HALF THE FULL PRICE.

N.B.—THIS REDUCTION CAN BE ALLOWED TO THE CLERGY ONLY, AND FORTWENTY MONTHS FROM DATE OF THE FIRST ORDER.

A Full List of Editions, Specimen Pages of Type, and Styles of Binding may be had on application.

ABRIDGED FOR CHURCH USE BY THE REV. JAMES BADEN POWELL.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

THE present publication—an abridgment of the complete edition to about one fourth of the original work, but including most of its gems—is an attempt to make it available for Church purposes. The arrangement is planned with a view to bring out (i) the Institution of the Holy Communion, and (ii) the most important points in the Trial before Pontius Pilate, with the reflective (solo) meditations upon it, closing with the "Calvary" Chorus ("Haste, ye souls"), and the last Choral. This gives a more complete and consecutive selection than any other portions of this long oratorio.

For the sake of the Congregation, by way of giving them a response to what has been sung by the Choir, two or three Hymns may with advantage be introduced.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE
AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Is well ahead of all Mr. Gaul's previous efforts. . . . Special mention may be made of the treatment of the parable of the Prodigal Son, which occupies a conspicuous place."—Daily Star.

"The Victoria Hall, Hanley, was well filled by an audience who gave enthusiastic evidence of their approval of Mr. Gaul's music. The chorus and band numbered 350 performers. . . . A striking feature in the form of a delightfully instrumented Eastern dance in itself is sufficient to enhance Mr. Gaul's reputation."—STAFFORDSHIRE CORRESPONDENT, The Musical Times.

"Judged by the appreciative reception accorded it by the crowded audience at Grifflithstown, it bids fair to eclipse the popularity of the same composer's 'Holy City'. . . . 'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment. . . . Already we understand numerous requests have been made for an early repetition."—Pontypool Free Press.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneity, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm. This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it prove less popular than the composer's 'The Holy City,' we shall be surprised."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

GROVE'S DICTIONARY OF MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

EDITED BY

J. A. FULLER MAITLAND, M.A.

IN 5 VOLUMES, 8vo. VOLUME I., A—E, 21s. NET.

Twenty-five years having passed since the publication of the first volume of this Standard Dictionary, the Publishers felt that the time had come for bringing it thoroughly up to date. New Composers, Artists, and Subjects had to be taken into account; omissions and errors to be made good; and the whole work to be reconsidered both as to plan and execution. The revision was entrusted to Mr. Fuller Maitland, who had already edited the Appendix to the original Dictionary under Sir George Grove's supervision. The New Edition will extend to five volumes, of which the first is now ready, while the remainder will be issued at intervals of a year, so that the publication will be complete by the end of 1908.

OLD ENGLISH ORGAN MUSIC

EDITED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has for some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day.

Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance.

The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs. J. W.

THE MUSIC TO KING ARTHUR

WRITTEN BY

J. COMYNS CARR

COMPOSED BY

ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

ARRANGED FOR CONCERT PERFORMANCE BY WILFRED BENDALL.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In 1894 the late Sir Arthur Sullivan accepted a commission from Sir Henry Irving to compose incidental music to Mr. Comyns Carr's drama of "King Arthur." The work was produced at the Lyceum Theatre, on January 12, 1895, and proved a great artistic success. After the withdrawal of the drama it was suggested to the composer that it would be a pity to allow such beautiful music to remain unpublished and become forgotten, and that a selection from it might be arranged in the form of a short concert-cantata. . . . After the composer's death it was decided to revert to the original proposition regarding the music, and the present concert-arrangement is the result.

THE ORGAN WORKS

OF

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

EDITED BY

J. P. BRIDGE, MUS. DOCT. OXON., AND JAMES HIGGS, MUS. BAC., OXON.

IS THIS, the first complete English Edition of John Sebastian Bach's Organ Works (the Chorale Preludes excepted), the distribution of the parts between the hands is, in all doubtful cases, clearly indicated by the notes that are to be performed by the right hand being printed on the upper of the two manual staves, while the notes that are to be played by the left hand will be found on the lower of the two manual staves. As far as possible care has been taken not needlessly to divide a subtle part between the two hands when it can be conveniently performed by one hand continuously. The text has been partially collated with former Editions, but generally where it differs from Griespenkerl's reading (Peters) it will be found to agree with the more recent Edition of the German Bach Society. Much thought has been given to secure convenient points for turning over, a matter of considerable importance to the performer. (See the "Great" G minor and the "St. Ann's" Fugues.) Suggestions as to the rate of performance and general treatment are given without encumbering the page with too detailed directions, and it is hoped the work in its complete form will be found a boon to the earnest Organ Student.

MR. C. W. FREDERICKS

(TENOR).

Vicar-Choral of Lichfield Cathedral.

"Mr. Fredericks sang very tastefully and with faultless expression."

"Mr. Fredericks gave a very pathetic rendering of the mourning of Jephtha, 'Deeper, and deeper, still,' and he sang 'Sound an alarm' ('Judas') in a magnificent manner."—Derbyshire Advertiser, April 2, 1904."Such a large portion of the recitatives and solos fell to the lot of Mr. Fredericks, that only a soloist of such magnificently professional capabilities as Mr. Fredericks could possibly have rendered and sustained to the end without any appearance of loss of voice the music allotted to him in these oratorios. It is awkward where every item is so well done to make a special selection, but there is no doubt that his dramatic rendering of the air, 'The sorrows of death,' from the 'Hymn of Praise,' was the feature of the evening."—High Peak News, April 4, 1904.

TWELVE "MESSIAHS" THIS CHRISTMAS.

A FEW NOTICES.

"Was SUPREME in his singing of the bass solos."—Sheffield Independent, December 23, 1904."Is undoubtedly Arbroath's most popular bass. Was in excellent voice, and the audience were scarcely restrained from demanding a repetition of his numbers, 'Why do the nations' being especially warmly applauded."—Dundee Courier, December 29, 1904."The bass solos, 'Thus saith the Lord,' and 'But who may abide,' showed Mr. Browning in a very favourable light. He is a baritone of the heavier cast, and showed any amount of resource, overcoming the technical difficulties of the items referred to with perfect ease, his enunciation being particularly clear. . . . Received a high ovation for 'Why do the nations.'"—Nelson Leader, December 23, 1904."Always a favourite with the Wakefield public . . . added to his laurels. . . . His singing of 'Why do the Nations' was a masterly piece of vocalization, and the audience were so carried away that they applauded to the echo. . . . The 'Trumpet Song' proved even more acceptable."—Wakefield Express, December 31, 1904.

In Scotland, February and March. Some consecutive dates open.

Address, Marlboro' Grove, Leeds.

MR. T. HARRY BULL

(BARITONE).

Ballad Concerts, Dinners, &c.

"ERL-KING'S DAUGHTER" (Gade).—"Mr. T. Harry Bull sang and acted the part of Sir Olaf very creditably, his fine voice telling well."—Musical Times."Mr. T. Harry Bull, who has a voice of great power and flexibility, rendered 'Star of Eve' (Tannhäuser) and 'The Song of the Toreador' ('Carmen') with complete success, being enthusiastically cheered."—Alnwick Guardian.

MR. HERBERT PARKER

(BARITONE).

Vicar Choral, Lichfield Cathedral; Soloist, Leeds Musical Festival, 1904.

"DIE MEISTERSINGER."—LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—"Mr. Parker has exactly the qualities of a good Reckmesser, and his singing was full of fun which never degenerated into buffoonery."—The Times, October 10, 1904."MESSIAH."—HUDDERSFIELD.—"No better exponent of the bass solos could be wished for than Mr. Herbert Parker. . . . His voice was even and full of deep musical resonance, his singing was broad and finely sustained, and it was certain, definite, faultless in intonation, highly expressive, and free from exaggeration throughout. . . . We must say that we have not heard 'Why do the nations,' nor 'The trumpet shall sound,' so cleverly and effectively rendered for many years."—Huddersfield Examiner, December 17, 1904."FREDERICKS."—LEEDS PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—"In the title-role Mr. Herbert Parker sang with the utmost candour and simplicity of expression, refraining with true artistic instinct from treating the music with a dramatic emphasis not in keeping with its ingenuousness."—Musical World, November 26, 1904.

Address, The Cathedral, Lichfield.

MR. W. DANIEL RICHARDS

(A.R.A.M. BARITONE).

Gold Medallist, Royal Academy of Music.

CHARLES KNOWLES

(BARITONE).

Of the London, Leeds, Sheffield, Chester and Scarborough Festivals.
LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1904—"THE GOLDEN LEGEND."
Pall Mall Gazette.

Mr. Charles Knowles, in the part of Lucifer, sang very dramatically, very sincerely, and with excellent vocal technique. I praise him all the more sincerely because it is only in recent days that his name has been gradually coming towards the front.

Mr. Charles Knowles is another singer who is with great celerity coming to the front. Perhaps at present his enthusiasm for music rather overbalances the fine qualities of his voice, but he is so gradually making the two levels meet together that it will not be long before he will be classed as a thoroughly sound singer and possibly something more.

BELFAST PHILHARMONIC.—"MESSIAH."

Belfast News Letter, Dec. 17, 1904.

Mr. Charles Knowles was superb in the bass solos. It is not many years since the Leeds vocalist made his first appearance on the concert platform, but he has made great progress, and he may be said to be in quite the front rank of singers at the present time. His voice seems to have deepened in timbre and strengthened in tone since we heard him last, and from the very outset he made a splendid impression. The stern and menacing "Thus saith the Lord of Hosts," and the air "But who may abide" were interpreted with decision and forcefulness, and he was also very effective in "For, behold, darkness shall cover" and "The people that walked in darkness." Perhaps his greatest achievement, however, was his singing of "Why do the nations," in which he made the pulses throb with the great fire and vividness of his rendering. Seldom has it been our lot to hear the difficult solo so efficiently rendered.

ROCHDALE.—"CARACTACUS." Rochdale Times, Nov. 16.

The success of the evening was however undoubtedly Mr. Charles Knowles. He possesses a splendid baritone voice, and in his work on the higher register was really splendid, there being not the slightest straining apparent even in the heaviest passages. On the lower notes he was most effective, and altogether his performance must be accounted a magnificent one. A hearty round of applause greeted his rendering of "Leap to the light," which was given with the great fire and fervour, and his vocalisation of "The Lantern" roused the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm, the applause breaking forth again and again.

For terms and Press notices, address, 24, Acacia Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.; or leading Agents. Telegrams: "Singspiel, London."

MR. JOHN PROUSE

(BARITONE).

(Of Madame Melba's Concerts, New Zealand; of Mdlle. Dolores' Concerts, Australia, New Zealand, and Canada; of the Principal Musical Festivals, Australia and New Zealand; of Herr Wilhelm Backhaus' English Concerts, October and November, 1904; and of the Chief London and Provincial Concerts.)

LONDON PRESS OPINIONS.

"Mr. John Prouse has a resonant voice, his enunciation is very clear, and he created a good impression."—The Times, February 19, 1904.

"Mr. John Prouse sings with appreciation of the poetic value of his contributions, and his diction is particularly clear."—Standard, January 28, 1904.

"Mr. John Prouse has a good voice, and enunciates clearly; by his artistic treatment of Tschaiowsky's very beautiful 'Pilgrim's Song' he created a great impression."—Daily Telegraph, January 28, 1904.

"Mr. John Prouse, the new baritone, has a fine voice, easily produced, and his articulation was commendably clear."—Daily News, January 28, 1904.

"Mr. John Prouse has great musical perception and an excellent baritone voice."—Musical Times, April 1, 1904.

"In Brahms's 'Die Mainacht,' Mr. John Prouse reached the exalted mood of the music admirably."—Musical News, March 9, 1904.

"Mr. John Prouse, a baritone with a fine voice, was particularly well suited in 'Don Juan's Serenade.'"—Daily Graphic, March 2, 1904.

"Mr. John Prouse has a cultured style and melodious voice."—St. James's Gazette, March 9, 1904.

"Mr. John Prouse is endowed with a fine baritone voice and as fine musical feeling."—Referee, March 2, 1904.

THE "BACKHAUS" TOUR.

RAMSGATE.—"Mr. John Prouse met with an enthusiastic reception. He sang magnificently, and was compelled to comply with the emphatic demand for an encore."—East Kent Times, October 26, 1904.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.—"Mr. John Prouse at once became popular with his audience, the wonderful compass of his voice being splendidly brought out in Tschaiowsky's 'Pilgrim's Song' and Schumann's 'Two Grenadiers.' The audience refused to be satisfied with bowed acknowledgments, and Mr. Prouse responded by singing the simple and yet effective song 'Youth.'"—Weston Mercury, October 2, 1904.

BLACKPOOL.—"Mr. John Prouse, too, was distinctly a success with his fine cultivated renderings."—Gazette, November 8, 1904.

"An exceedingly fine baritone."—Herald, November 8, 1904.

Especially successful in ORATORIO.

Répertoire.—All the standard works.

STOURBRIDGE ("CREATION," and "TE DEUM, DVOŘÁK").—"The last-named (Mr. Henry Sunman) is perhaps the most popular baritone who has appeared before the Stourbridge public. He is an artist whose singing is always delightful in quality and whose interpretations are always sincere."—County Advertiser, December 24, 1904.

"Mr. Sunman is an old favourite with Stourbridge audiences, and rightly, for his singing is always acceptable. His solos, particularly 'Rolling in foaming billow,' were most artistically rendered, and his singing was greatly enjoyed by the audience, who were warm in their applause." In the Dvořák "Te Deum" Mr. Sunman sang his difficult music admirably."—County Express, December 31, 1904.

THE MEISTER GLEE SINGERS.

MR. WILLIAM SEXTON

MR. AGER GROVER

MR. ALFRED CUNNINGHAM

MR. FORD WALTHAM.

A few Press Opinions of their recent successful Concert Tour throughout the Dominion of Canada, comprising 150 Concerts through Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, to Winnipeg, Manitoba. Return to England March 1, 1905.

TORONTO.

"A genuine thanksgiving night audience—that is, a gathering that nearly filled the auditorium of Massey Hall—attended the concert last night of the Meister Glee Singers (Messrs. Sexton, Grover, Cunningham, and Waltham) of London, England. The organization is just a quartette of male voices, but they discourse very eloquent and beautiful music. The four voices are exquisitely balanced in the ensemble, and the harmonies are rendered in what is known as just intonation, that is to say, they are in perfect tune with regard to the particular key in which the music is written, something impossible from a pianoforte, or any instrument tuned on the equal temperament system. In regard to smoothness of tone, quality, and intonation, the quartette may be compared to the Kneisel String Quartette of Boston. . . . The first number was Kieder's glee, 'Lull Me to Sleep,' which, as rendered, was most dreamy, almost soporific in effect. The audience enthusiastically recalled the singers, who responded with an extra number. Later in the evening the quartette sang Elgar's 'Whether I Find Thee,' a very charming number, which was also beautifully sung in regard to finish and tone gradation."—The Globe, November 18, 1904.

"The Meister Glee Singers (Messrs. Sexton, Grover, Cunningham, and Waltham) received a splendid welcome in Massey Hall last evening. The voices of the quartette blended beautifully, and it may be stated, without exaggeration, that the Canadian public have never yet heard anything in quartette singing to surpass what the Meister Glee Singers."—Toronto Mail and Empire, November 12, 1904.

MONTREAL.

"Glee-singing will always find a warm spot in the hearts of English people, and when well rendered as it was last evening by the Meister Singers, the part-song is a delight to the ear."—Montreal Daily Gazette, November 22, 1904.

"The Meister Glee Singers (Messrs. Sexton, Grover, Cunningham, and Waltham) gave an entertainment of the highest merit last night, many numbers provoking such applause as to bring the artists back for extras. They were very generous in their responses, but the audience were insatiable, and all were sorry when the last number had been sung."—Montreal Daily Witness, November 22, 1904.

HALIFAX (NOVA SCOTIA).

"The Meister Glee Singers (Messrs. Sexton, Grover, Cunningham, and Waltham) appeared last night for the first concert of their Canadian tour. The audience was large, and it is safe to say that no quartette was ever heard in Halifax whose work was so finished as whose voices blended so perfectly as did those of the Meister Glee Singers. . . . Every number was encores, and it was felt that would be overworking the talented singers that second responses were not insisted upon."—Halifax Herald, September 6, 1904.

QUEBEC.

"The Meister Glee Singers (Messrs. Sexton, Grover, Cunningham, and Waltham) afforded a large and fashionable audience a rare treat to Tara Hall last evening, and it may be said, without exaggeration, that the public of this city have never had occasion to hear anything in the way of part-singing to surpass and perhaps even equal, the delightful work of these distinguished vocalists. The Meister Singers have wandered far afield, and their supremacy in the rendering of part-songs has never been challenged, and it must have been gratifying to them last evening to hear the loud acclamations from all present when the announcement was made that they would give another performance on Saturday. They have won laurels wherever heard, and were in revelation in quartette singing—in the perfect harmony of voices, the faultless precision, delicacy of shading, and above all the beauty and cleverness with which every merit possessed by music and words was brought to the surface and effectively displayed. The audience were quite enraptured, and demanded more encores than could be responded to."—Quebec Telegraph, October 15, 1904.

ST. JOHN'S (NEWFOUNDLAND).

"Our lovers of music who, for three consecutive nights, have listened to the beautiful singing of the Meister Singers (Messrs. Sexton, Grover, Cunningham, and Waltham) . . . will be delighted to know they have one more opportunity of hearing these musical artists on Saturday. It is not too much to say that such perfection of part-singing as that of the Meister Singers has never before been heard in Newfoundland."—St. John's Telegraph, September 30, 1904.

CHICHESTER CATHEDRAL.

The See of the South Saxons was originally founded at Selsea, but all traces of the cathedral are now at the bottom of the sea. This was towards the end of the 7th century. In 1075, however, the bishopric was transferred to Chichester, the Roman Regnum. Sometime after the year 491, the town, having been taken and partly destroyed by the South Saxons, was rebuilt and called Cissanceaster, after the King Cissa, whence the modern name of the city is easily evolved. But there is an interesting element—somewhat apocryphal, it must be admitted—of extreme antiquity in regard to the place. Readers of Saint Paul's Second Epistle to Timothy—written at Rome, A.D. 66 or 68—will remember that, towards the close of his letter, the Apostle sends greetings from Claudia. Now in all probability Claudia was a British princess who had married the patrician Pudens. Her father ruled the Sussex province, therefore the home of Claudia may have been, and perhaps was, at Chichester.

The quiet city is one wherein the antiquary may rejoice. There are the old city walls still nearly perfect, the dedication-stone of a Roman temple with its valuable inscription, and the numerous small but ancient parish churches. To these must be added the Hospital of St. Mary, probably founded A.D. 1158 by William the Dean. It is very interesting to visit the present building, dating from the end of the 13th century, and to learn how comfortable the six old ladies are in their cosy quarters. The hospitable building is in the form of a hall, 84 feet long, continued to a chapel 47 feet, forming one structure in length 131 feet. The side walls are only six feet high, but the roof is very lofty. On both sides of the middle passage of the hall are the pleasant little rooms, two each for the occupants, who, in addition to these apartments, receive ten shillings per week besides being provided with coals and lights. Prayers are said daily in the chapel, which has its misericordes, these being occupied by the old ladies who have here found a home at the sunset of their lives. Then there is the elaborate octagonal Town Cross, as shown above, built by Bishop Storey about the year 1500, standing at the intersection of the four main thoroughfares.

The Cathedral, the glory of Chichester, must now claim our attention. Upon the transference of the See from Selsea in 1075, Bishop Stigand found the city already provided with a minster dedicated to St. Peter, and the probability is that this sanctuary temporarily served the purpose of the mother-church. In 1108 the first cathedral was erected, but it was soon afterwards burned.

DECORATION FORMERLY ON THE CHOIR VAULT.

(From an engraving dated 1814, and kindly lent by the Rev. Prebendary Bennett.)

In 1184 the cathedral had been repaired and consecrated; but it again suffered severely by fire in the year 1186. As the earliest cathedral of the Diocese (at Selsea) is now submerged in the English Channel, and that at Chichester has been twice injured by the flames, the present beautiful sanctuary might appropriately bear the inscription: 'We went through fire and water, and Thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place.'

Chichester Cathedral, as we now know it, was consecrated September 12, 1199. The detached Bell Tower—the only one of its kind remaining among English cathedrals and built c. 1420, at once attracts attention by reason of its massive appearance. The flying buttresses of the main building form a noble and impressive feature of the structure. It is difficult to realize that the spire, 277 feet in height, was re-erected only forty years ago, so perfectly does it blend with the remainder of the edifice. On February 21, 1861, the central tower and spire fell perpendicularly, its four piers having given way. The present tower and spire is practically an imitation of the original erection. The west front is flanked by two towers. One of these, the northern tower, after being for nearly two centuries in ruins, was rebuilt by the late Mr. J. L. Pearson, R.A., and completed by his son, Mr. Frank L. Pearson, in 1901.

On entering the building the south-west tower at once arrests attention, first by reason of its great height, and then its various styles. The base and second stage are Norman, the third stage is Transitional, and the fourth, or topmost stage, Early English. The nave, which is Norman, has the distinction of being the widest in England, 91 feet, with the exception of York; moreover it has, though not throughout its entire length, five aisles, the only other English cathedral similarly favoured being Manchester. But this great width and the unusual number of aisles did not form part of the original design. From time to time chapels were built, opening in each bay into the aisles. When the walls separating the chapels were taken away is not known, but their removal has made the chapels look like aisles which, five in number, form so characteristic a feature of this cathedral.

The North Transept was formerly used for the parishioners of the Subdeanery Church. Its walls furnish a good example of Norman work typified by the small stones and wide joints. The window in the South Transept is most beautiful in its delicate tracery: not so, however, its glass, which is a terrible blemish to the beauty of the cathedral. While on the subject of glass we may refer to a window erected by Archdeacon Manning, better known as Cardinal Manning, said to have been given in memory of his wife. The totally incongruous reredos, which spoilt the Choir, has recently been replaced by re-erecting the old oak altar screen of simple yet dignified design, completely harmonizing with its surroundings. The setting up again of this screen, dedicated on January 12 last, is due to the Dean (the Very Rev. J. J. Hannah), whose wisely-directed energy and excellent taste will doubtless result in the removal of other disfigurements from the sanctuary confided to his care.

SCULPTURED PANEL: THE RAISING OF LAZARUS.

(Photograph by Mr. J. S. Wright, Chichester.)

The Early English Retro Choir, formerly apsidal in plan, contains two groups of pillars that deserve special notice. Each group, of Purbeck marble, an old print, will be found in the illustration on page 82. In regard to old brasses, only one complete example remains; it is dated 1592, and records the fact that Mr. William Bradbridge was 'thrice Maior of this Cittie' and that he 'had vi sonnes & viii daughters.' Two panels in relief, in the south aisle of the Choir, are of Saxon, or Early Norman workmanship. One of them, representing the raising of Lazarus, we reproduce on page 82. These slabs are supposed by ignorant conjecture to have come from Selsea Cathedral, as did certainly a Chapter chest, which consists of a main shaft and four attendant pillars, all of them separate, the whole forming a graceful combination suggestive of the strength and beauty which the Psalmist associates with the Sanctuary. The whole of the Nave and Choir vaulting was formerly decorated throughout; but about the year 1817—an awful period of debased taste—all this beautiful decoration, probably in a very bad condition, was smeared over with a dirty yellow wash which earned for the sacred fane the name of 'the leather-breeches cathedral.' A specimen of this, preserved through the medium of

has three locks, of which the Dean and two Canons each had a key, so that access to the treasures contained therein could only be gained by the combined key-turning of this trio of ecclesiastics. An elaborately decorated (in colour) monument in the south aisle of the Choir to Bishop Sherburne, who held the See from 1508 to 1536, was erected and placed in situ by that nonagenarian prelate during his lifetime.

Among the curiosities contained in the cathedral are painted portraits of the bishops of Selsea and Chichester and of the kings and queens of England.

These prelatie and regal delineations were done at the expense of Bishop Sherburne in the 16th century, to whom the decoration of the vaulting is also due. The portraits, more or less fanciful, of the bishops, ranging from Wilfrid of the 7th century to Sherburne himself, all bear a great family likeness. Another set of portraits, painted on oak, is of the kings and queens of England, from William the Conqueror to George I. inclusive. These delineations are invested with more variety of feature than those of the bishops: unfortunately they are not complete, having been sadly knocked about and damaged by the fall of the central tower and spire in 1861.

A visit to the Cathedral Library, with so well-informed and genial a cicerone as Prebendary Deedes, is a pleasant experience. The cathedral possesses some valuable charters. Of these the earliest is one by which Oslac 'Dux Suthsaxonum' in 780 grants to the Church of St. Paul (Selsey) lands

Royal' (1616); a huge copy of the 'Vinegar Bible,' 1717—stated to be 'the most magnificent of the Oxford Bibles'; and a 'Breeches' Bible (1595). There are several beautiful bindings. A History of Hungary by Nicolas Istvanfius (1622) is a magnificent specimen of elaborate English tooling, with the Royal Arms of James I. in the centre of each cover. An equally fine specimen of French work is the cover of Brietius' 'Parallela Geographiae' (Paris, 1648), bound apparently for Louis XIV. A presentation copy of R. Grovii 'Responsio' (London, 1680) shows what a skilful hand could do in English red morocco. One specimen of Wynkyn de Worde's press is 'The fruitful sayings of King David' (1508). Among the more valuable books of reference are the 'Decretum of Gratian and the Decretals of Popes Gregory and Boniface from Paris and Lyons'; Wilkins' 'Concilia,' Dugdale's 'Monasticon,' the latest edition; and the County Histories of Dallaway, Cartwright, and Horsfield.

Quite distinct from the Cathedral Library is the Registry, containing the very valuable muniments of the Bishop and of the Dean and Chapter. The principal contents of this collection, which is under the custody of Mr. W. B. B. Freeland, were lately included in a volume of the Historical MSS. Commission's Reports, and space prevents our giving details here. A case of antiquarian 'odds and ends' containing inter alia some past-speaking organ pipes by Renatus Harris; and an iron-bound chest with a sham keyhole at the side and a secret keyhole at the top, are other features of interest.

In the consideration of matters musical at Chichester Cathedral mention may first be made of the Precentors, of whose names—fifty-one in number—a complete list is obtainable. The first, in 1120, was Karlo, while Bogo held office in 1283; and among other odd-sounding names we find Gailhardus de Mot (1321) and Richard Aspyholgh (1485). The present holder of the office (since 1889) is the Rev. Dr. J. H. Mee, a name well-known in musical circles at Oxford. A former chorister at Chichester was William Lawes, who joined the choir too late to receive the 'one penny' which Dean Garland, in 1342, bequeathed to each of the 'pueri de choro.' The choir of the cathedral now consists of six lay-clerks and twelve boys, in addition to four probationers, and they give a very good account of themselves in the reverent and intelligent manner in which they render the service-music.

According to Mackenzie Walcott, a former Precentor and historian of Chichester Cathedral, the first mention of an organ was in the thirty-fifth year of the reign of King Henry VIII.; but nine years earlier the following disbursements were made:

Shortly after the accession of Queen Elizabeth one Cuthbert Swynbanke was paid the sum of £5 6s. 8d. 'for mending $\frac{3}{4}$ ths (trium partium) of the organs in the choir and the chapel of St. Mary,' and a little called Earnaleach (Earnley) and Tielepora. There are others with fine seals of the 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries. A well-written MS. on vellum of the 13th century consists of four treatises by St. Augustine of Hippo. A manuscript of the 13th century contains the early statutes of Peterhouse College, Cambridge. Here is the fragment of a Missal, dated 1481, which contains an illumination on a gold ground of the Crucifixion: the volume is bound in oak boards covered with pigskin. Among the rarities is a copy of 'Cærimoniale Romanum Venetiis, MDXVI. Editio princeps.' Higden's 'Polychronicon' (Treveris's Edition, 1527) and Archbishop Cranmer's copy, with his signature, of Hermann's 'Consultatio' (1st edition, 1545) find places in the special cases. later three men, 'for their help in removing the organs out of the chapel of St. Mary to the top of the church,' were paid the sum of iiij l.; but whether each man received a groat, or whether they had to divide iiij l. between them, history recordeth not. We may now pass from this fourpenny payment to the first important organ erected in the cathedral, that built by the famous Rhenatus Harris in 1677 or 1678. This instrument, of one set of keys only, contained no reeds and, of course, no pedals. Here is its specification, taken from the MS. organ-specification book of the late the choir organ and put a trumpet stop in the great. Various other organ-builders have also amplified and rebuilt the organ, among them being Knight (who added a swell organ in 1778, just one hundred years after Harris had built the instrument), England, Pilcher, Gray & Davison, and Hill & Son. From the middle of the 15th century until the year 1859, the organ stood on the Arundel screen at the entrance to the choir. The fine Harris case was broken up and sold in 1860! The organ is now placed in the North Transept, thus entirely shutting off this part

The organ as it now stands furnishes evidence of the careful restorative skill of Messrs. Hele & Co., of Plymouth, and it must be admitted that it has been applied with remarkable success. All the flue stops and the oboe have been replaced on the old light pressure of two and three-quarter inches, with results that are distinctly satisfactory and pleasing to the ear. The following is the

The rebuilding was carried out under the personal supervision of Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, the organist, who, with the assistance of Mr. John Hele, has in the thirty-fifth year of the reign of Henry VIII., when William Campyon was paid the sum of 6s. 8d. for 'playing on the organs in the Choir and 3s. 4d. for playing on the organs in the Lady Chapel.' Mr. Campyon was probably a Vicar-Choral, as in 1556 Thomas Brodhome, third Lay Vicar-Choral, received his accustomed stipends, 'namely for stalls, and also for beating the organs in the Cathedral Church, his emoluments being 23 shillings and fourpence.' The total amount paid to him for the four quarters of that year (1556) was £4 13s. 4d.: this in addition to 'the Commons of bread supplied to the Vicars-Choral by daily distribution.' There are similar payments to lay-clerks for 'beating the organs' as there are for 'pricking' music paper, writing out the prayers in English (viii^d), a journey to London 'pro musio pro ecclesia,' &c. In 1567 xxs. was given 'in regardo' (as a complimentary present) to Michael Woods, 'organista,' out of the benevolence of the Dean and Chapter, in addition to the sum of 53s. 4d. paid to that gentleman 'pro pulsatione organorum hoc anno,' the latter amount repeated in 1568 and 1569. In 1568 material was bought for a livery for the choristers.

The first most notable organist of the cathedral was Thomas Weekles, the madrigal composer, who reigned from 1578 (?) to 1623. He had previously held the organistship of Winchester College. Very little is known of the career of Mr. Weekles, but during his organistship at Chichester the Dean and Chapter decreed (in 1611) that

The organist shall remain in the choir until the last psalm be sung, and then go up to the organs, and then having done his duty return into the choir again to bear his part all along under the amercement of iij^d toties quoties. This is thought a meet matter in all double choirs, much more is it necessary in all half choirs, as ours is.

In addition to some thirty anthems and a Service in F (contained in Benjamin Cosyn's Virginal Book at Buckingham Palace), Weekles composed a varied setting of the Responses to the Commandments, an example that was followed by Matthew Locke and Thomas Attwood. But Locke, the royal composer (temp. Charles II.) incurred censure for 'changing the custome of the church, by varying that which was ever sung in one tune, and occasioning confusion in the service by its ill performance.'

The next best-known name on the roll of organists is that of John Reading, one of three musicians possessing that patronymic, but the Chichester organist was not the reputed composer of 'Adeste Fideles.' He deserves mention, however, because during his tenure of office there was born at Chichester, on January 19, 1676, John Weldon, the composer of 'Hear my crying,' and 'In Thee, O Lord.' Reading was succeeded by a former chorister, Thomas Kelway, the composer of some Services that are still in use. A little volume of his anthems (MS.) is in the Cathedral Library, though they appear to be written in a copyist's hand. He died in 1749, and is buried in the south aisle of the Nave. When his tombstone was recovered, made a list of every pipe in the organ and against each has placed the maker's name.

Some interesting information is available concerning the organists of Chichester Cathedral. The earliest known mention of a chief musician is replaced, and the inscription re-cut (about 1846), Charles Crocker, a well-known sacristan and bishop's verger of the cathedral, gave vent to his muse in the following sonnet :

Kelway ! thy memory, fresh as vernal day,
 In many a heart's most secret holiest cell,
 Where love of sacred song delights to dwell,
 Lives—and shall live while music holds her sway
 Within these hallowed walls, where day by day,
 Year after year, he plied the wondrous art
 Which bids the spirit from its prison start,
 And soar awhile to happier realms away.
 His strains full oft—still fall upon the ear
 Of those who tread yon aisle, while, at their feet,
 His name and record of his hope appear,
 Peace to his ashes—be his slumbers sweet,
 Till that glad morn when he shall wake to hear
 The angel choir in nightless Heaven's bright sphere.

Vergers of cathedrals, estimable and well-informed men as they invariably are, do not often achieve fame as poets, therefore Charles Crocker (1797-1861), author of the above sonnet, deserves more than passing mention. Born of humble parents at Chichester, he was apprenticed to a shoemaker : but his poetic gifts soon began to be favourably known, and a volume of poems and sonnets by him, published by subscription, met with much success. His sonnet 'To the British Oak' Southey declared to be one of the finest, if not the finest in the English language. Mr. Crocker, who was appointed a verger of Chichester Cathedral in 1845, wrote an excellent guide book to the stately fane with which he was honourably associated for the last fifteen years of his life.

The youngest organist seems to have been James Targett, a former chorister, who was appointed at the age of twenty-two, but he only held the office for two years, as he died, aged 24, in May, 1803. This brings us to a century of organists, ten in number; but as the first of these, Thomas Bennett, reigned forty-five years, the average length of service of those who followed him is greatly reduced, in fact, four of the ten organists only remained one year at Chichester. There is no need to give a detailed list of the organists since became a chorister at Wells Cathedral, and sang solos till he had completed his seventeenth year. He was then articled to the late Charles Williams Lavington, organist of that cathedral, and became his assistant. Mr. Crowe has always devoted much attention to the study of singing, not only in England, but in Milan, where he was a pupil of the well-known singer and teacher, Vittorio Carpi. For some years he acted as special musical correspondent of the Western Morning News, in which capacity he visited the principal Musical Festivals. He has also conducted various choral societies in Devonshire. His first organ appointment was that of Ashburton Church, a post he held for eight years. He then became organist of St. Mary Magdalene, Torquay, a church which has proved a Targett's death in 1803, but it includes some very well-known names—e.g., Dr. Armes (of Durham), Mr. E. H. Thorne (who wrote his fine anthem 'I was glad' for the re-opening service, November 14, 1867, after the fall of the spire), Dr. F. E. Gladstone, Dr. Kendrick Pyne (of Manchester), Dr. D. J. Wood (of Exeter), and Dr. F. J. Read.

Mr. Frederick Joseph William Crowe, the present organist, was born at Weston-super-Mare on December 31, 1862. At the age of seven he stepping-stone to four cathedral organistships, and with which the names of the late Dr. G. B. Arnold and Mr. C. Lee Williams are worthily associated. After remaining at Torquay for eleven years Mr. Crowe was appointed organist of Chichester Cathedral in 1902, beginning his duties on Trinity Sunday. He regards his office as one that needs personal attention and attendance, hence he is rarely absent from a service. Since his settlement at Chichester he has formed, with the cordial co-operation of the Dean and Chapter, the Cathedral Oratorio Society, an organization which has already, in a little more than two years, performed eight oratorios in the cathedral. In his cathedral work he rightly regards the voices and the words that are sung as being of paramount importance. This principle is reflected in his restrained accompaniments and the training of the choristers; Chichester may therefore be instanced as one of those tranquil spots where the best traditions associated with English cathedral music are practised and revered.

For valued help in the preparation of this article the writer's thanks are due to the Rev. Prebendary Bennett—of whom it may be said that what he does not know about the cathedral is not worth knowing; the Rev. Prebendary Deedes; Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, organist and choirmaster; and to the various photographers whose names are appended to their respective productions.

DOTTED CROTCHET.

ARTHUR NIKISCH.

A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

Rhythm in the veins : poetry in the temperament. These two things are absolutely necessary in the making of a great conductor. Musicianship is, of course, an indispensable part of the equipment. This, however, can be developed by technical training and ripened by practical experience. But he who lacks rhythmic feeling, and hath little or no poetry in his soul, is by nature unfitted to discharge the important duties appertaining to a choral or orchestral conductor. Is there a musician richly endowed with the twin gifts above referred to? The answer is : Yes, in the person of the subject of this biographical sketch.

Arthur Nikisch is from Hungary, the land of rhythmic melody. He was born on October 12, 1855, at Lébényi Szent Miklos, where his father held the appointment of head-bookkeeper to Prince Liechtenstein. Although his father was not a professional musician he was very fond of music, and moreover he was an excellent violoncello player, therefore he did not check his little son's fondness for listening to music, as he delighted to do for hours together, even when he was only three or four years old. When he had reached his sixth year he asked to have lessons in music. His first teacher was Franz Prochazka, of Butschowitz, Moravia, whither the family had removed. At the age of seven he heard an orchestration for the first time in his life. The instrument gave forth the 'William Tell' and 'Barber of Seville' Overtures, in addition to a fantasia on 'Robert the Devil.' These three pieces he wrote down, 'entirely out of his own head,' in the form of pianoforte arrangements. Thus, at this childish age, Arthur Nikisch gave proof of his remarkable memory and power of quickly grasping anything that he hears or studies. Two years later, aged eight, he appeared as a prodigy pianoforte virtuoso, his vigorous performances of Thalberg's transcriptions causing him to be greatly noticed.

As a boy aged eleven he became a student at the Vienna Conservatorium. His teachers were, for theory, Dessoff, conductor of the Court Opera and director of the Philharmonic Society, and the predecessor of Hans Richter; and for the violin, Josef Hellmesberger the elder, the most distinguished of that famous family of fiddlers. Nikisch caused quite a sensation as a pupil at the Conservatoire. Although so young he was at once placed in the most advanced of the theoretical classes, having as his fellow students youths of from eighteen to twenty-two years of age. He was only thirteen when he took the first prize for the composition of a string sextet; a similar honour befell him in violin playing, and he obtained the second prize in the pianoforte examination.

Herr Nikisch relates an interesting incident of his student days in connection with his first meeting with Wagner. In May, 1872, the master visited Vienna in order to conduct a concert, the proceeds to be devoted to the erection of the Festspielhaus at Bayreuth. The Vienna correspondent of the Musical World—who must have been a deep-dyed Davidsonian—thus wrote concerning the said concert:

The Messias is coming ! On the 12th instant Richard Wagner is going to direct in person a Wagner-concert got up to raise money for the phenomenal theatre, to be built in Baireuth, in order to perform the wonderful Nibelungen-Trilogie (they call it the 'Nie gelungen Trilogie'), the last Embryo come out of the immortal brains of the musical redeemer !

The prices of the tickets for this concert are enormous; but the present generation likes so much the grandiose humbug.

For my part, I consider it to be an absurdity against the real mission of art on earth, to produce works for a special theatre and a special cast of people.

God has created the fine arts to cultivate and ennoble humanity in general, and not to amuse the elects among the people. Therefore art must be popular and democratic, and not exclusive and aristocratical.

But perhaps the great Prophet and his legions will find a way how to make transportable their colossal theatre, in order that the public of Berlin, Vienna, Milan, Naples, Paris, London, Petersburg, ed altri siti may enjoy the heavenly revelations of Herr Richard Wagner, and be themselves converted to the new musical faith !

If not so, every poor mortal, who cannot afford to make the pilgrimage to Baireuth shall be condemned to eternal darkness.

SALVATORE SAVERIO DI BALDASSARE.

The first rehearsal for this Wagner concert took place in the small room of the Musical Association. On making his appearance in the orchestra Wagner was greeted with the customary Tusch, or flourish of trumpets. When his attention was drawn to the fact that the Conservatorium pupils occupied the auditorium, through which he had not passed, the composer-conductor advanced towards them and said : 'My young friends, we all belong to one another, so stop where you are,' thus inviting them to listen to the rehearsal. No wonder that Hellmesberger called for a cheer 'in honour of Herr Wagner,' and that the students responded thereto with all their might and main. The concert proved to be a great success, so much so that at its close Wagner addressed the audience in these words :

Years ago, when I was staying within your walls, I received a welcome which surpassed all my expectations, and afforded a proof that on the uncontested ground of this city, as elsewhere, German art had obtained the upper hand. This gratifying fact is manifested to-day in a still greater extent by the reception you have accorded to my art. In the name of that art, I thank you for the sympathy you have so liberally exhibited towards me to-day, and which is a guarantee that a great national enterprise, to which I have, for years, been devoting all my energy and strength, will not remain uncompleted. Whenever the old Greeks set about a great and important work, they supplicated Jupiter for some sign of his approbation; the eagle he caused to soar aloft, and the lightning flashes he hurled through the air were regarded by them as foreboding good. Similarly will we look upon the lightning, which so unexpectedly accompanied to-day the performance of the Feuersäuber, as a propitious omen, and hope that an undertaking which you have promoted in so gratifying a manner by your sympathy will attain to a successful conclusion. (Musical World, June 1, 1872.)

The students were so delighted with Wagner, especially his pleasantly-spoken words of encouragement at the first rehearsal of the concert, and for allowing them to attend both the rehearsals, that they decided to present him with a silver goblet entwined with laurel. A deputation was appointed to hand the gift to him at the house of his host and friend Dr. Standhartner. Strangely enough, the three students chosen to form the deputation have since become very famous conductors—Felix Mottl, Emil Paur, and Arthur Nikisch. The last-named was chosen spokesman. 'We found Wagner in the best of spirits,' recalls Herr Nikisch, 'and in a most jolly frame of mind. Although I was very nervous I managed to get through my task without any serious difficulty, and I was greatly pleased when Wagner told us how much he had enjoyed my speech and the whole function. That moment, when I came face to face with the mighty master, will never leave my memory.'

Ten days after the presentation above referred to, Nikisch met Wagner under different conditions, as conductor of that wonderful performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at Bayreuth on May 22, 1872, the master's sixtieth birthday. The occasion was the foundation-stone laying of the famous Festspielhaus, when one of the finest orchestras ever gathered together rendered full justice to the glorious 'No. 9.' At the desks of the first violins were no fewer than ten Concertmeisters, led by Wilhelmj. The Vienna Court Orchestra furnished a full score of players. As the only unofficial member of that illustrious body, Arthur Nikisch had the great distinction of being allowed to play in this splendid orchestra on that memorable occasion. He says: 'In those four rehearsals, under Wagner's inspiring direction, I learnt more and received a deeper insight into the secrets of Beethoven's nature than I could possibly have gained in a year's study under normal conditions.'

In 1873 Nikisch, aged eighteen, left the Conservatorium. Upon making his exit he obtained permission to conduct the first movement of his own D minor Symphony, and so popular had his good fellowship and friendly companionship become that his fellow students presented him with a costly baton, which he regards as one of his most precious possessions. His compositions at the Conservatorium included the above-mentioned D minor Symphony, a Sonata for Pianoforte and Violin, a String Quintet, and a Cantata entitled 'Christnacht,' for solo voices, chorus and orchestra.

On New Year's Day, 1874, he was officially appointed a violinist in the Vienna Court Orchestra. The four years that he held that post were of the greatest importance in the development of his artistic life. His experiences of conductors were varied, as he had opportunities of playing under Herbeck, Dessoff, Rubinstein, Liszt, Brahms, and Wagner. Yet while he loved his violin the dream of his life was to become a conductor. This warmly-cherished desire received its fulfilment at Christmas, 1877, when Angelo Neumann, leader of the Leipzig Theatre, asked Nikisch—who had been strongly recommended by Dessoff—whether he would be willing to become director of the choir at the Leipzig Theatre. The young man of twenty-two summers jumped at the offer, and early in January, 1878, he began to be associated with the artistic life of Leipzig, wherein he was afterwards to shine as a brilliant light. The first time that he conducted in a theatre the operetta 'Jeane, Jeanette, Jeanetton' was performed in the Old Theatre at Leipzig. Angelo Neumann at once recognized the extraordinary talent of the young man, whom he encouraged as much as possible. In the summer of that year (1878) he had to take the place of Josef Sucher, the first Kapellmeister, on which occasion he conducted 'Tannhäuser' and afterwards 'Die Walküre,' and in the following year (1879), when Sucher left Leipzig, Nikisch, at the age of twenty-four, received the appointment of first Kapellmeister at the Opera House there.

One of the visitors to Leipzig during Nikisch's tenure of office was Tchaikovsky, who heard the 'Rheingold' and the 'Meistersinger' performed under the direction of 'this wonderful master of the orchestra.' Tchaikovsky records that:

Herr Nikisch is very quiet in his demeanour and avoids all unnecessary movements of his body and thus he obtains a complete mastery over himself. He does not merely beat time, but exercises some mystic influence over his players. His self-effacement is such that you hardly realize his presence; yet one feels that, under his sway, the whole orchestra is like one instrument controlled by the hand of a great master, and that all the players so submit themselves to his magnetic influence as to be robbed of their own wills. He has wonderfully poetic eyes which must command the orchestra that is sometimes like the blast of 1,000 trumpets of Jericho, at others like a cooing dove, and then bursts forth in thunderous tones.

In the winter of 1879-80, Nikisch took the place of Reinecke as conductor of the Gewandhaus Concerts, at one of which he conducted Schumann's D minor Symphony, when Madame Schumann, who was present, expressed herself in highly appreciative terms of the masterly performance of the work.

The direction of a great musical festival at Magdeburg in 1881, when Borodin's E flat Symphony was performed, and a similar event in Leipzig two years later, greatly increased his reputation as a masterful conductor. Liszt, always quick to appreciate talent and to encourage it, had noticed Nikisch's great gifts both at the Magdeburg and Leipzig Festivals. At a supper after the latter music-making he toasted the young conductor in these words: 'I drink to the health of the chosen of the chosen.' It is not surprising that Nikisch greatly interested himself in the foundation of the Liszt-Vereins; in this connection he conducted, at Leipzig, admirable performances of the 'Faust' and 'Dante' Symphonies.

In the summer of 1889, greatly to the regret of the Leipzigers, Nikisch accepted an offer to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra. During the next four years he made his home in the New World. Two extracts from THE MUSICAL TIMES of November and December, 1889, may be quoted in respect of this American period of his life:

On Friday afternoon, the 11th ult., Herr Arthur Nikisch, the new Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the finest orchestra in the United States, made his first appearance and achieved a signal success. The importance of the Boston orchestra may be inferred from the fact that many musicians coming here from the European continent think that there are only two orchestras in Europe which equal it—the Berlin Philharmonic and the Leipzig Gewandhaus—while none surpass it. Mr. Nikisch comes from Leipzig. His programme consisted of Wagner's 'Die Meistersinger,' Vorspiel, Beethoven's 'Coriolanus' Overture, the second Entr'acte from Schubert's 'Rosamunde,' and Schumann's D minor Symphony. The Conductor demonstrated that, in addition to a marked individuality of style, a freedom from slavish adherence to tradition, and a firm command over his forces, he possessed a keen power of analysis, a subtle insight into the poetic spirit of the composition in hand, and a rare and generous warmth of temperament.

The programme of the fifth Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Arthur Nikisch, last Saturday evening, appears to have disturbed the equanimity of that respectable town. Mr. Nikisch gave them no soloist and made no concession whatever to the demands of public lack of taste, but insisted on presenting his audience with a lesson in the growth and development of the Symphony. His programme consisted simply of three Symphonies: Haydn, in G, No. 13; Mozart, in G minor; and Beethoven, No. 5.

Upon the termination of his Boston engagement, in the autumn of 1893, Nikisch became Director of the Royal Hungarian Opera House and of the Philharmonic concerts at Buda-Pesth. Here he found a congenial sphere of work and a full outlet for his artistic energies. He inaugurated his regime by giving a 'quite superb' performance of Smetana's 'Verkaufte Braut,' followed, in due course, by fine interpretations of 'Die Meistersinger' and Puccini's 'Manon,' all of which he prepared with painstaking care. It was quite natural that he should give special attention to the music of his native country, Hungary. With patriotic zeal he gave a cycle of operas composed by Franz Erkel, who had recently died (June 15, 1893). The one-act opera 'The Violin maker of Cremona,' by the Hungarian composer Jenő Hübner, was produced (November 10, 1894), the composer himself playing the violin solo which forms an important feature of the work.

Herr Nikisch made his first appearance in England at Queen's Hall, June 15, 1895, when he conducted the first of four orchestral concerts given under the auspices of Mr. Daniel Mayer.

At the third concert he gave a very remarkable performance of Tchaikovsky's Symphony in E minor (No. 5), then played for the first time in London, and at the last of the series he gave one of the best interpretations hitherto known in this country of Brahms's Symphony in D.

During his visit to London he received the greatest honour of his life—the offer to become conductor of the famous Gewandhaus Orchestra at Leipzig, in succession to Dr. Carl Reinecke. This he very gladly accepted, as it opened up to him a sphere of enjoyment and congenial work. Since his re-settlement at Leipzig he has also become conductor of the Philharmonic Concerts at Berlin, in succession to Hans von Bülow. This splendid organization of players not only give concerts in the German capital, but they have visited Paris, Brussels, St. Petersburg, Moscow, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, and Portugal, in addition to several German towns, including Hanover, Hamburg, and Bremen, adding by their excellent performances fresh laurels to themselves and their poetic-minded conductor. In the winter of 1902 Herr Nikisch was appointed Director of the Leipzig Conservatorium, also in succession to Reinecke.

It is interesting to learn from his own lips something about the class he has instituted (at the Conservatorium) for the training of orchestral conductors—we believe the only class of its kind in any teaching institution at home or abroad. He says: 'I started my class for teaching conducting soon after I became Director of the Conservatorium. Conductors, even those who hold official appointments, come to me from all parts of the world. These students—limited in number—attend all the rehearsals of the Gewandhaus concerts, following the music with scores in hand. They receive their practical lessons at the rehearsals of the Conservatorium orchestra, where I criticise their actions and their methods and give them all the help I can. The youthful students, those who have passed through the whole curriculum of the school, also benefit in this way, and a young fellow comes on to the orchestra and handles his baton as if he were a full-fledged Kapellmeister!' Is there anything corresponding to this valuable method of conducting equipment in our own Schools of Music?

One great secret of Arthur Nikisch's success as a conductor is the fact that he can play the violin like a finished artist; moreover, has he not served an apprenticeship, so to speak, in the ranks of the orchestra under competent conductors? Then he is gifted with a very remarkable memory: as, for instance, he can at any moment play on the pianoforte any given scene in a Wagner opera. His ear is sensitive to a degree, so keen indeed that he has discovered wrong notes in inner parts that have been played for years and years owing to errors in the orchestral parts. A man of striking individuality, he does not belong to any particular school. His taste is quite eclectic. In regard to the classics Beethoven stands first in his affections, while an old-world symphony becomes rejuvenescent under his magic sway and genial influence. But he by no means abjures the moderns—to wit, Liszt, Bruckner, Tschaikovsky and Richard Strauss. At present he does not seem to have extended his favours to English music, but that hoped-for attention will no doubt follow as he becomes acquainted with the good work of our own composers in the realm of orchestral music.

It is very interesting to be present at one of his orchestral rehearsals. This privilege he kindly accorded us for the purposes of this article during his last visit to London. The occasion was the preparation for the London Symphony Concert in Queen's Hall, November 17, 1904. One thing that is at once noticeable in coming into personal contact with Herr Nikisch is that he is a gentleman. This characteristic manifests itself in a very marked degree in his intercourse with his players. Not an irritating word escapes his lips. He never looks at a man who has to interpret a difficult passage, preferring not to unnerve him in any way, but to give him free play in two senses of the word. Nor does he bully his men, but treats them as colleagues. 'Excuse me, gentlemen,' is a frequent expression when some correction has to be made or some improvement suggested. 'My dear Mr. Henderson, will you kindly —?' And Drummer Henderson, in answer to the question, seems to reply through the medium of his instrument as the notes roll out, 'My dear Herr Nikisch, certainly I will, with the greatest possible pleasure!' Such encouraging punctuations as 'Splendid, splendid!' occur again and again as the players, who form this magnificent London Symphony Orchestra, respond with rare artistic earnestness to the wishes of the gifted conductor.

The Overture to Tannhäuser is one of the conductor's specialities in interpretative excellence. Fortunately, therefore, it is in the programme for the concert of which this is one of the rehearsals. A few notes on the rendering of the Overture, as rehearsed by Herr Nikisch, may not be unacceptable to our readers. Exceedingly quiet in his manner and undemonstrative in his gestures, the Gewandhaus conductor secures the whole-souled attention of his players, who sit at his feet as those under the spell of a master-mind in music. Everyone knows the wonderful strain for the violoncellos, immediately after the opening theme of the Overture has been given out by the clarinets, horns, and bassoons:

'A little too academic,' remarks the conductor, 'more feeling; a singing tone,' and then he patterns the way in which he wants it done, singing the phrase with a beautiful quality of vocal tone. Is this method of 'patterning' sufficiently used at orchestral rehearsals? While in this 'cello region we may refer to the chromatic runs at the first un poco ritenuto of the Allegro section. 'More passion,' he says, 'do not forget to place more intensity in the crescendos.' The horns claim his special attention, and delicious indeed is the tone of these poets of the orchestra as he makes them 'sing' their parts alone. Mr. Busby tells us that Herr Nikisch here and there doubles the 1st and 2nd horn parts in the 'Tannhäuser' Overture. 'One of the most effective instances,' he says, 'is as follows:—

and there are other places, in the later portion of the Venusberg music, where he doubles the 1st and 2nd horns with good effect.' He has a fine sense of the necessary working up to a climax. 'Begin mezza voce, not too much of brilliance at first; then begin to broaden; you must help us to the great crescendo,' and so on. A tremolo passage in the violins calls forth this remark: 'Play as many notes as possible, so as to make a shiver in the back.' At a full-toned passage he says: 'It is marked by the composer ff, and you must keep it up.' Such expressions as 'immense crescendo,' 'more precision,' 'energy,' all quietly and politely, but firmly spoken, are at once acted upon by his receptive colleagues of the orchestra. Humour—what a saving grace it is, sometimes even in matters that are serious—is not absent at this rehearsal. One of the clarinettists is a little in doubt as to a note in his part and appeals to the conductor. 'It does not matter what you play,' replies Herr Nikisch, amid laughter. 'Then I can play what note I like,' says the clarinettist, and the orchestra and its chief laugh again at a member of the band having scored off the conductor and even off Wagner himself. All goes as merry as a marriage-bell, and the result is not a little brought about by the friendly feeling that exists between the conductor and his well-equipped coadjutors.

A well-known member of the London Symphony Orchestra has kindly written the following 'appreciation' of Herr Nikisch specially for this biographical sketch:

I well remember the first time I played under Herr Nikisch. It was in the midst of a Festival preparation. We had been playing for about nine hours per diem for several days, and on this particular day we had been rehearsing all the morning, had given a concert in the afternoon, and were again assembled at 7 p.m. to rehearse for the Nikisch concert! Our one hope was that he would let us off lightly, and reserve all the heavy work for the following morning. When Herr Nikisch appeared and had been introduced to us, he made a graceful speech, and at once started with the Tschaikovsky Symphony No. 5, in E minor. Before we had been playing five minutes we were deeply interested, and, later, when we came to the big fortissimos we not only played like fiends, but we quite forgot we were tired. For my own part I simply boiled over with enthusiasm. I could have jumped up and shouted—as a matter of fact when we reached the end of the first movement we all did rise from our seats and actually shouted because we could not help it. The weird part of it all was, that we played this Symphony through—with scarcely a word of direction from Herr Nikisch—quite differently from our several previous performances of the same work. He simply looked at us, often scarcely moving his baton, and we played as those possessed; we made terrific crescendi, sudden commas before some great chord, though we had never done this before.

When Herr Nikisch stops us to make some remark, absolute silence prevails. He speaks in a very quiet, smooth tone of voice; he tells us where we can improve a passage, a phrase; he calls our attention to several points we have not made enough of; but rarely does he ask us to play a passage again—he trusts to our memories. Then, when he has said all that he thinks is necessary concerning the work we have played, he looks at his watch and says: 'What shall we do now? Shall we go on, or shall we have a cigarette?' Marvel of marvels, we call out to him to go on!

At a concert performance Herr Nikisch comes in, looks at us steadily for a moment or two, commences with a quick but slight movement of his baton; we are again possessed, and none of his special points are forgotten. When all goes smoothly in the music he often ceases to beat time until some slight sforzando, or some effect is wanted from a certain instrument, then he merely indicates the desired result with a very slight movement of the baton. He never makes a single unnecessary bodily movement of any kind, and that, I believe, is the reason why, when he does make any bigger beat than usual, or make any sudden change of facial expression or gesture, it produces instant effect. When we see wild gesticulation over nothing, or a baton whirling madly in the air all the time, such methods fail to excite us in the least degree; in fact, such antics become a source of irritation, and they bother us exceedingly.

One other thing: Herr Nikisch allows us to play our instruments. We feel free: if we see a rapid passage coming, we play it as we would a solo, and we all gain the 'top of it' together as one man, and he is with us in giving smiling approval—not rapping on the desk, or calling out in a harsh voice that we are hurrying or dragging, as the case may be. But we can take no licence if he is not in agreement; he can pull us up or send us along or keep us back with a flash of his eyes or the slightest motion of his baton.

When we have finished the concert, and the rehearsals, we are always worked up to such a pitch that we cheer him heartily. He comes back and says in his low, smooth voice: 'Gentlemen, it is a pleasure for me to conduct such an orchestra,' but we feel that the pleasure is all on our side, for we simply love to play under him. He gives us new readings of works that we, in our ignorance, thought we knew all about. We always feel we have learned something in grasping the high aim and noble purpose of his every interpretation, as he never performs a work but he evolves from it some beauty which we had not noticed before. Herr Nikisch charms us by his great modesty; his one aim seems to be to make that which we play more beautiful than ever before. He never thinks of personal aggrandizement, or to show with what ease he can control an enormous orchestra. No, no! He shows us how to attain to the most beautiful and the highest in art, and we endeavour to realize his ideals.

In conversation after the rehearsal Herr Nikisch speaks in enthusiastic terms of the technical attainments of the London Symphony Orchestra, the alertness of the players, the beautiful tone they produce, their receptivity and courtesy. As with his dreamy eyes he looks at you and speaks in a subdued tone of voice, one almost wonders wherein lies his power; but a personality like this recalls a sentence in Isaiah which, without irreverence, we may quote and apply to Arthur Nikisch—'In quietness and confidence shall be your strength.'

MECHANICAL MUSIC.

In these days of mechanism we cannot wonder at the constant endeavour of clever inventors to provide the world of music with machines which promise to save all the trouble and necessity of study and practice, and to bring to a hearing the masterpieces of the best composers, performed, we are told, in such perfection as is not possible to mere human skill. A doubt may arise in the minds of some of us whether, by ruthlessly sweeping aside the old-fashioned methods of acquiring knowledge, step by step, and line by line, any vast boon is offered to those who are gifted by nature with sympathies for the divine art of music.

We know that many sane men and women find health, mental and corporeal, in the exercise afforded by mountain travel, and it is questionable whether the like result would follow if, instead of plodding upwards from lowland to mountain-top, lovers of nature were provided with flying machines, or some other expeditious motor-power, which would relieve them of all their toil, and in a few minutes transport them from the point of departure to the end of the journey. Moreover it is quite certain that an intimate knowledge and love of created things in the world of nature can only be obtained by those who travel warily, with their faculties keenly alive to observe all the beauties and wonders which are so abundantly provided on every hand.

In like manner, those men and women who desire to enjoy in the fullest measure all the subtle beauties and noble triumphs of the world of music, can only do so by becoming familiar with the many details which contribute to the perfection they so greatly admire.

Solomon said 'There is now nothing under the sun,' and it is pleasant to note how frequently the history of the past supplies information which tends to support the emphatic assertion of the Preacher. The following may be cited as an example; it forms part of a letter written by Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, widow of the great Duke, and is dated 1737:

I am now in pursuit of getting the finest piece of music that ever was heard; it is a thing that will play eight tunes. Handel and all the great musicians say it is beyond anything they can do; and this may be performed by the most ignorant person; and when you are weary of those eight tunes, you may have them changed for any other that you like. This I think much better than going to an Italian opera, or an assembly. This performance has been lately put into a lottery, and all the Royal Family chose to have a great many tickets, rather than to buy it, the price being, I think, £1,000, infinitely a less sum than some bishopricks have been sold for. And a gentleman won it who I am in hopes will sell it, and if he will, I will buy it, for I cannot live to have another made, and I will carry it into the country with me.

It would be interesting to learn what kind of instrument it was which so excited the admiration of the Royal Family. Probably a barrel-organ. What became of it? Who made it? Did the Duchess succeed in purchasing the coveted toy? If not, her death in 1744 probably found her with one gratification unfulfilled. The memoirs of Handel, and of the musicians of the time, afford no indication that he or they became unduly despondent at the possible triumph of the music machine, and the anticipated partial eclipse of organists and harpsichordists did not come about. Succeeding generations have witnessed the wonderful performances of Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Dussek, Clementi, and a host of gifted successors; whilst to-day pianoforte knights and ladies are more numerous than ever. There need be no fear that machinery will ever displace the combination of brain, soul, and finger.

A description of cathedral singing in the year 1524.

The Neue Musik-Zeitung recently contained a notice of Sir Julius Benedict, in commemoration of the hundredth anniversary of his birth. Sir Julius led an active life as composer, teacher, and accompanist for half a century in London; but an extract given from a letter written by him, in his seventy-first year, to Moritz Hauptmann, furnishes proof that he (Benedict) could not look back with satisfaction upon his career in the Metropolis. He says:

In the evening of my active, but unfortunately useless life, I ask myself whether I should not have done better to have worked steadily and undisturbed by outward influences in some small German town, aiming at the highest in art, rather than to have fooled away my time in London, leaving behind me no work that is likely to meet with approval in my native country? An example such as yours—self-sacrificing, but of great importance, so rich in explaining and propagating the eternal verities of the art of music, never pandering to public taste, but always earnest and dignified, teaches one how to await the fall of the curtain with calm consciousness, with the certainty of having done one's duty.

Benedict concludes his letter with a pertinent play upon Hauptmann's name:

Ah! had I only found such a leader [Hauptmann] of heavy artillery in London, I should soon have grown weary of skirmishing with small firearms! But of what use is late repentance?

Maria Anna, called by the family 'Nannerl,' the gifted sister of Mozart, was born in the year 1751. She accompanied her brother on the great first tour in 1762, when they visited among other places Paris and London. In 1784 she married Johann Baptist, Reichsfreiherrn v. Berchthold zu Sonnenburg; after the death of the latter in 1801, she lived with her children at Salzburg, where she died in 1829. A granddaughter, Baroness Berchthold zu Sonnenburg, who recently died near Salzburg at the advanced age of ninety-two, is said to have been the last surviving relative of Mozart.

Some 'Recollections of Arthur Sullivan' form the subject of an interesting article contributed by Mr. Edward Dacey, C.B., to the January number of the Fortnightly Review. It appears that on one occasion—and only one—Sullivan tried his hand at musical criticism. The following extract from Mr. Dacey's article gives the results of this maiden effort:—

The first time I made his acquaintance was, curiously enough, in connection with musical criticism. Some thirty odd years ago I had undertaken the editorship of the Observer newspaper, which at that period stood in sore need of reorganization. In those bygone days I remember my old friend E. L. Blanchard remarking to me 'that the one faculty required for dramatic and musical criticism was a copious repertory of complimentary adjectives.' Unmindful of this advice, I thought the public might appreciate a more independent tone of musical criticism than was then in vogue. There being a vacancy in the post of musical critic of the Observer, I called on Arthur Sullivan to ascertain whether he was disposed to write the musical criticisms for the Observer. He accepted the proposal subject to the understanding that either of us remained at liberty to terminate the engagement if for any reason it should prove unsatisfactory. Shortly afterwards a new opera by an almost unknown but not impecunious composer was brought out in London, and on the following Sunday Sullivan's notice appeared in our columns. I was personally much struck with the article. The style was as clear as the handwriting—and to those who knew Sullivan's writing at this period of his life that is saying a good deal. I have forgotten, or do not trouble myself to recall, the names of the opera and its composer. All I care to remember is that the criticism was distinctly unfavourable, and formed a marked contrast to the wishy-washy eulogistic notices which appeared in most of our contemporaries, and in consequence it attracted a certain amount of attention. Within a few days of its appearance I received intimations to the effect that this style of criticism was viewed with disfavour in the quarters whence musical advertisements were issued, and that the continuance of such criticisms would involve the withdrawal of the musical advertisements. I had to consider other people's interests as well as my own, and I came at once to the conclusion that—to put the matter plainly—the game was not worth the candle. It was, as I held, no part of my duty as an editor to elevate the tone of musical criticism, and I entertained grave doubts as to whether there was a sufficient public interested in musical notices to increase our circulation to such an extent as would have compensated us for the money loss accruing from the withdrawal of operatic and concert advertisements. I had therefore no option except to discharge the somewhat unpleasant task of informing Sullivan that I had determined to discontinue his notices. Nothing could be more charming than the way in which he received my communication. He assured me that he appreciated fully the reasons of my action, and added that he had already entertained doubts as to whether it was prudent for him, as a musician himself, to criticise in print members of his own profession. We parted on the friendliest terms. The article in question was, to the best of my belief, the one and only musical criticism which Sullivan ever contributed to the Press, and I can say with even greater certainty that it was the one and only attempt ever made by me to improve the status of British music as an art.

Mr. William Stevenson Hoyte has been created a Doctor of Music by the Archbishop of Canterbury. Dr. Hoyte—to whom our congratulations are offered on this well-deserved honour—has been organist and choirmaster of All Saints' Church, Margaret Street, for thirty-seven years, his appointment being recorded in THE MUSICAL TIMES of March, 1868; he is also a professor of the organ at the Royal Academy of Music, the Royal College of Music, and the Guildhall School of Music.

Two recent developments in the field of popular musical education in connection with elementary schools, now under the charge of local councils, deserve to be recorded. First, there are the music classes in the evening schools. These schools are financed and managed by the local authority, and they enjoy a grant from the Central Board of Education. The curriculum varies according to the choice of the local authority. In some quarters music in every form is ignored, but in London, vocal music-classes are encouraged. Under the defunct School Board, unions were formed in each district and united performances of oratorios and cantatas, &c., were given on a complete scale by thousands of chorallists. These organizations are still in existence under the new authority, and bid fair to become important factors in Metropolitan choral life. Some critics are dubious as to the expediency of such classes devoting time to the study of difficult choral works, inasmuch as the members are compelled to a great extent to practise in insignificantly small groups, and it is plausibly argued that they would be better occupied in studying theory and sight-singing, and music adapted to their constitution. But on the other side it may be said that the very fact that the units cannot satisfactorily study good music is the best possible argument for their combining to study an important art work. At least they come into intimate touch with something more beautiful and elevating than ordinary sight-singing exercises.

The other development is that of violin teaching to children in the day schools. The study of violin playing in large classes has been so energetically and astutely advocated that probably not fewer than one hundred thousand children have been set going recently in this fashion. Instruments are supplied on the instalment system, and peripatetic expert teachers visit the schools at regular periods after ordinary school hours. Of course all the expense is met by the parents. In view of the fact that the violin is difficult enough to teach individually to pupils with fair natural capacity, we cannot help feeling grave doubts as to the value of the ultimate musical result of this endeavour to teach anybody and everybody collectively. The matter needs inquiring into and watching. No one will feel greater satisfaction than ourselves if the propaganda turns out to be really successful.

Perhaps no sale by auction has attracted so much attention as that of the Marquess of Anglesey. The 'effects' of this nobleman brought under the hammer have been of the most varied and luxurious nature. On January 12 Messrs. Christie disposed of an organ belonging to the Marquess, which is thus described in the catalogue:

107 A PIPE ORGAN, by George Pyke, one manual, sixty-two notes (G to A), with seven stops:

1. Open Diapason ... 8 ft. metal.
2. Stopped Diapason 8 ft. wood.
3. Flute ... 4 ft. wood.
4. Principal ... 4 ft. metal.
5. Twelfth ... 3 ft. metal.
6. Fifteenth ... 2 ft. metal.
7. Sesquialtera ... 3 ranks metal.

In Chippendale mahogany case, finely carved with garlands of flowers, scrollwork, laurel-wreath and ribands, in high relief, and with carved mouldings round the borders—12 ft. 6 in. high, 7 ft. 4 in. wide. This organ is very similar in design to 'Organ CIV.' illustrated in Thomas Chippendale's 'Director.

This instrument realized the not inconsiderable sum of 410 guineas, an amount that may set some country organists fighting for a Pyke organ in a Chippendale case!

The professorial staff of the Royal Academy of Music has recently been strengthened by the appointment of Herr Louis Zimmermann as a teacher of the violin. This excellent artist, born at Groningen, Holland, in 1873, received his first lessons from his father and afterwards studied with Poortman. In 1890 he went to Leipzig, where he had the advantage of receiving lessons from Hans Sitt, and afterwards, in Brussels, from Ysaye. He then made a tour in Holland and visited Hamburg, Frankfurt, and other German towns, his performances meeting with unvarying success. In 1896 he was appointed Hofconcertmeister and soloist of the Court Orchestra at Darmstadt, and from 1899 to 1904 he held the post of solo violinist at the celebrated Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam. Herr Zimmermann made his first public appearance before an English audience when he played the solo violin part in Richard Strauss's 'Ein Heldenleben tone-poem, on its initial performance in England under the composer's direction at Queen's Hall, December 6, 1902. On that occasion he made a distinctly favourable impression; but he had already, in the year 1898, had the honour of performing before her late Majesty Queen Victoria at Osborne. He has also played before his own sovereign, Queen Wilhelmina, at the Hague. Herr Zimmermann, it will be remembered, performed Beethoven's Concerto at a recent concert of the London Symphony Orchestra, when he was, in the opinion of connoisseurs, admitted to a place in the front rank of the violinists of to-day. A pupil of Carl Reinecke, he has produced several compositions,—among others a Quintet for Clarinet and Strings,—and this fact seems sufficient guarantee of his attainments as a musician as well as a virtuoso, and it may be assumed that he will find full scope for his teaching gifts in his class-room in Tenterden Street.

Herr Weingartner has contributed an article to the Allgemeine Musik-Zeitung entitled 'Brahms,' in which he withdraws some of the harsh sayings which he has uttered and written in the past concerning Brahms. That he has modified his opinions is a welcome change of front, for he frankly tells us that he was prejudiced to a large extent against the Hamburg master owing to the attempt of the anti-Wagner party to set up Brahms in opposition to Wagner; also to Bulow's placing his name in such close juxtaposition to that of Bach and of Beethoven. In now expressing favourable views regarding Brahms's orchestration, Herr Weingartner draws a picture of modern scores which, if somewhat exaggerated,—as indeed all satire of the kind must be, if it is to strike home—carries with it a wise word of warning to rising composers. He is referring to the charge against Brahms that his scoring is bad when he says:

Does not sound well! Why? Because it is not Tristanlike, and also has no 'Queen Mab' flavour? He scores badly!—Perhaps just because his scores differ from Wagner's or those of modern orchestral fireworks? Now let us for once look into the matter thoroughly, and see what is our so highly vaunted instrumentation which has made such a notable advance, that one can scarcely see the music for the scoring. Let us open a number of new scores. After we have impressed on our memory the title, and in many cases the programme, we find as a first common feature—after the pattern of the Nibelungen scores—a special page with a detailed list of the numerous orchestral instruments required and as many as possible to each class; secondly, corresponding to it, a huge number of staves, so that the score looks as if one had to climb up and down a ladder to be able to see all that is going on; thirdly, complicated divisions at every moment of the string quintet; fourthly, one harp glissando after another; fifthly, ever so many stopped notes in the horns and trumpets; sixthly, strong and frequently unintermittent use of toneless instruments of percussion, producing mere noise; seventhly, a marked tendency to carry up all instruments into their highest registers, where they no longer give out tone, but a shrill scraping, squeaking and whistling; and eighthly and finally, the working up of all these clangs into a wild tumult, which admits of no musical articulation because it is simply an infernal hubbub, in which it does not matter a straw what is played.

The Glinka money prizes, obtained from the interest of a fund bequeathed by the late Russian publisher M. P. Beliaeff, to be distributed yearly to Russian composers who have written the most characteristic works during the past year, have been awarded by the judges—Rimsky-Korsakoff, Liadoff, and Glazounoff—as follows: 500 roubles each to A. S. Arensky, S. M. Liapounow, and S. W. Rachmaninoff for the Pianoforte Trio in D minor (Op. 32), the E minor Pianoforte Concerto, and the C minor Pianoforte Concerto respectively; 300 and 200 roubles to Scriabine for his Pianoforte Sonatas, Nos. 3 and 4 (Op. 23 and Op. 30); and 1,000 roubles to Taneiev for his Symphony in C minor (Op. 12).

Dr. William Hayman Cummings, Principal of the Guildhall School of Music, and the Rev. Francis William Galpin, M.A., F.L.S., Vicar of Hatfield Broad Oak, Essex, have been elected to the Honorary Freedom of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, 'for services rendered by them in connection with the Company's Tercentenary Exhibition, 1904.'

Dr. J. C. Bridge, organist of Chester Cathedral, has been elected a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, a distinction worthily conferred.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie is announced to deliver three lectures (with musical illustrations) at the Royal Institution on 'The Bohemian School of Music': the dates are February 4, 11, and 18, at 3 p.m.

WILLIAMS.—On the 20th Jan., at dawn, at her old home, 'Woodbury,' Biggin-hill, Norwood, S.E., ELIZA JANE WILLIAMS, widow of the Rev. James Williams, of Chelsea and Lowestoft, in her 99th year. No flowers, by her request. Funeral Wednesday, 2.30. Friends will kindly accept this, the only intimation.

The above announcement (from The Times of January 21), recording the death of a venerable lady, is of some musical interest. Except for a very short time, Mrs. Williams had lived in the same house (a quaint, wooden structure) in which she was born in 1806—nearly one hundred years ago—and in which she drew her last breath a few days ago. As the oldest inhabitant of Norwood, she perfectly well remembered Thomas Attwood and his white donkey, as she used frequently to visit friends living in the semi-detached house which immediately adjoined that occupied by Attwood. Her memory—we are speaking of eleven years ago—was perfectly clear on this point, and she was able to remove all doubt as to the exact location of the house where Mendelssohn stayed as the guest of his friend Attwood. Mrs. Williams, who was a charming old lady, told the present writer that she was positively certain that Attwood's house stood in the road now called Beulah Hill, but which seems originally to have been called Biggin Hill. There are several interesting references to it in 'The Mendelssohn Family,' in Mendelssohn's 'Letters,' and in Sir George Grove's biography of the composer in the 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians.'

In a report of a performance of 'Acis and Galatea' which took place at — (no matter where), we learn that 'of the choruses perhaps "Wretched Lovers" and "Mourn all ye nurses" were the most noteworthy,' and that 'Mr. — was particularly successful in the passage "I rage, I weep, I burn." How sad for the nurses, and to think that the giant should 'weep' as well as rage and burn. Poor Polyphemus!

The following is from a suburban newspaper:

St. John's Carols on Sunday were joyful with a wealth of accordant melody. Sometimes the tide of harmony would roll on with a soft low modulation. And anon there would come the pealing, swelling, billowy strains of a rich, sacred, awful concord. The effect of the harmony of time and tune owed much to the new organist, Mr. —: he is a master of the science of sounds.

No wonder!

'I did not care for the timber of his voice,' wrote a critic in commenting upon the wooden interpretations of a vocalist.

One of Charles Lamb Kenney's 'Miscellaneous Nursery Rhymes' of forty years ago:

There was an old schemer, Tom Chappell,
Who with 'Cattle-Show Concerts' would grapple,
Till, with classical look,
Arthur took him to book,
And Beethovenised this publisher Chappell.

A 'LADIES' NIGHT' AT THE BRISTOL MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

BY ONE WHO WAS THERE.

The Bristol Madrigal Society owes its origin to a course of four lectures delivered in the western city in January, 1837, by Edward Taylor, subsequently Gresham Professor of Music. The subject of his discourses was 'English Vocal Harmony,' and they were delivered in the theatre of the Philosophical Institution, now known as the Masonic Hall, in Park Street. The lectures were well attended and the musical illustrations much enjoyed, and no wonder, as they included madrigals by Wilbye, Morley, Weelkes, and others. Taylor made the suggestion that a Society should be formed in Bristol for the study and practice of these old-world compositions. This was at once acted upon, and before a month had elapsed a few gentlemen who had attended the lectures met at the house of one of them, Mr. Alfred Bleeck, a surgeon and an accomplished amateur musician, who had for some time been accustomed to hold a glee party at his residence. The pros and cons of forming a Society were discussed under Mr. Bleeck's roof, with the result that these amateurs decided to form the Bristol Madrigal Society, which was founded in the month of January, 1837. The number of members was limited to thirty, and it was agreed that they should meet on alternate Wednesdays at the 'Montague Tavern' and sing such madrigals as had been selected by the committee at the previous meeting. Mr. Bleeck was naturally appointed President, an office he held for nearly thirty years, and Mr. John Davis Corfe, organist of Bristol Cathedral, was chosen as conductor.

The first meeting of the Society took place on March 1, 1837. Among the members then and there assembled was Robert Lucas de Pearsall, the composer of 'Sir Patrick Spens,' 'Great god of love,' 'I saw lovely Phyllis,' 'Lay a garland on her hearse,' not to mention 'The hardy Norseman,' and 'Oh, who will o'er the downs so free?' It may not be without interest to reprint the programme of the music sung at this initial meeting—held at the 'Montague,' on Wednesday, March 1, 1837—as recorded in Felix Farley's Bristol Journal, issued three days later:

I will arise	- - -	Creyghton.
Cynthia, thy song and chanting	- - -	Grace.
Flora gave me fairest flowers	- - -	Wilbye.
To shorten winter's sadness	- - -	Weelkes.
In pride of May	- - -	Weelkes.
I follow, lo! the footing	- - -	Morley.
O that the learned poets	- - -	O. Gibbons.
All creatures now are merry-minded	- - -	Benet.
Hosanna	- - -	O. Gibbons.
April is in my mistress' face	- - -	Morley.
So saith my fair and beautiful	- - -	Marenzio.
Down in a flowery vale	- - -	Festa.
Soon as I careless strayed	- - -	Festa.
Finale—The Waits, Fa, la, la	- - -	Saville.

Except the compositions of Pearsall, madrigals both old and new formed the staple fare of the Bristol Madrigal Society until 1850. In that year some of the members persuaded Mr. Corfe to introduce a few of Mendelssohn's part-songs, 'and so much did their beauty and freshness charm the members, that four of the songs were included in the programme of the next Ladies' Night, that of January, 1851, when they proved to be very successful. On every subsequent open night the programme has included one or more of these charming compositions, with one or two other pieces in the same style by English or foreign musicians.*

In 1865 the Society offered three prizes for the composition of these original madrigals, the winners being Henry Leslie, Henry Lahee, and W. J. Westbrook. Twenty years later the Society made its first and only appearance out of Bristol, when the members—120 strong—sang at one of the Inventions Exhibition concerts given in the Royal Albert Hall, on July 8, 1885. Those who, like the present writer, attended on that occasion will remember the great pleasure this performance afforded them, and it is not surprising that THE MUSICAL TIMES, in a notice of the concert, said 'the delight of the audience was expressed by loud applause and numerous encores.'

CONDUCTOR OF THE BRISTOL MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

(Photograph by Messrs. Abel Lewis and Son, Clifton.)

So much for the past. Let us now turn to the present condition and achievements of the Bristol Madrigal Society. In regard to its constitution Rule 1 reads:

The Society shall be called 'THE BRISTOL MADRIGAL SOCIETY,' and shall consist of Sixty Members, and such Honorary Members and Associates as the Society shall from time to time elect or admit. The Members and Associates shall meet periodically for the performance of Madrigals. Honorary Members shall be persons of distinguished musical ability who are non-resident, or those who have rendered conspicuous services to the Society; Associates shall be gentlemen whose assistance is desirable to the Society.

The financial affairs of the Society are set forth in Rule 9:

Each Member shall subscribe Two Guineas per annum, which shall become due on the first Meeting in each year; and at every ordinary Meeting throughout the year, at which he shall be present when the names are called over, he shall receive two shillings, or if he belongs to the musical profession, four shillings, or if to the Bristol Cathedral Choir, six shillings; provided that if he leave before the meeting separates he shall forfeit the amount he would thus be entitled to receive; provided also that a defaulter in payment of his subscriptions shall not be entitled to any such receipt so long as his subscription remains unpaid, but if it be paid on or before the last Meeting in March, he shall be at liberty to claim payment of all sums he would have been entitled to receive in case his subscription had not been in arrear; provided always that in case the subscription of any Member be unpaid at the first Meeting in April, he shall no longer be considered a Member, but he may be re-admitted on the vote of a majority of Members present—to be expressed by ballot.

Sixteen rehearsals are held every season at the original rendezvous, the 'Montague,' Kingsdown, a hostelry which supplied turtle-soup to the Duke of Wellington. The boys, selected from the various church choirs of the city, are rehearsed twice a week by Mr. Rootham, and the painstaking care he bestows upon them is of widespread benefit.

Brilliant indeed was the scene in the Victoria Rooms, Clifton, on the evening of January 12, the occasion of the annual Ladies' Night of the Society. The hall was crowded by an audience consisting of the élite of Bristol and Clifton. Upon entering the 'East Tribune,' where the visitors were located, it was pleasant to meet Mr. J. Edward Street and Mr. Ernest Cooper, Secretary and Librarian of the Madrigal Society, both of whom, and the present writer, journeyed from London in order to attend this interesting music-making. The Madrigalians numbered 111 voices, distributed thus:

Sopranos	-	-	-	-	40
(Including 10 extra boys from the choir of St. Mary Redcliffe Church)
Altos (men)	-	-	-	-	15
Tenors	-	-	-	-	26
Basses	-	-	-	-	30
Total	-	-	-	-	111

According to custom the singers were seated during the performance, their music-books resting on desks arranged in semicircular form. Mr. D. W. Rootham, the veteran conductor of the Society for the last forty years, received a hearty welcome as he stepped on to the orchestra to conduct the following interesting programme:

The Curfew bell	-	-	W. Macfarren
The Waits	-	-	Saville

The rendering of the above madrigals and part-songs was characterized by many excellent qualities in which refinement, smooth tone, and perfect blend were commendable features. On such an occasion one ought not perhaps to appear hypercritical, considering the fame of the Society, but it seemed to us that the soprano section was at times weak in proportion to the adult portion of the choir. There is no need to discuss the programme seriatim, but one or two interpretations call for special mention. Of these Elgar's 'Weary wind of the West' carried off one of the honours of the evening in its finished execution and poetic insight. The charming words of this expressive part-song were written by the late Rev. T. E. Brown, for many years one of the most distinguished masters of Clifton College, therefore the composition had a very special local interest. And then how delightfully those west-country Madrigalians sang Pearsall's 'Sir Patrick Spens'! as if to the manner born, and no wonder, as it is a Bristolian product. The programme annotation stated that 'Sir Patrick Spens,' which is written in ten real parts, was first performed in public in January, 1860; but it seems to have been first sung by this Society in private in April, 1839, as 'a dialogue for ten voices.' We learn privately that Pearsall made a complete set of ten parts in his own hand, many of which were used on the occasion under notice, and that the score from which Mr. Rootham conducted is in the composer's autograph.

An interesting feature of the evening's music was an excellent performance of THE MUSICAL TIMES Prize part-song, 'A Shepherd in a glade,' composed by Mr. Cyril B. Rootham, a son of the conductor. This, like 'Sir Patrick Spens,' received the honour of an encore, and the composer, from his seat among the basses, bowed his acknowledgments. The concert proved to be most successful in every way, and the half-hour's interval for tea and coffee provided a pleasant social feature in the enjoyments of the evening.

Mr. Daniel Wilberforce Rootham, the conductor, was born at Cambridge on August 15, 1837. At the age of eight he became a chorister of St. John's and Trinity Colleges, of which his father was a vicar-choral. Six years later he began to study the pianoforte, organ, and harmony under Professor Walmisley and at his request. On the death of his father (in 1852) he removed to Bristol, where his brother sang tenor in the Cathedral Choir. Shortly afterwards Mr. Rootham was elected to a vacant Lay-clerkship (bass) at the Cathedral. In 1866 he was appointed organist of St. Peter's Church, Clifton; and in 1878, on the death of Mr. Alfred Stone, he became chorus-master of the Festival Choral Society. This post he held for eighteen years, and trained the choir in no fewer than sixty-six different works. A former pupil of Signor Schira, Mr. Rootham has made the art of singing and voice production a special study. Among his many successful pupils the most distinguished is Madame Clara Butt, to whom he gave lessons for three years and a half. Finally, he was appointed hon. director of the Bristol Madrigal Society in 1865; thus during the long period of forty years he has rendered splendid service to an organization that can be heartily congratulated upon a successful record, a Society that may look forward to a future of great enjoyment in the study and practice of unaccompanied vocal music.

BATESIANA.

In the Biographical Sketch of Mr. and Mrs. Joah Bates which appeared in our January issue, mention was made of the ring presented by King George III.

to Joah Bates in recognition of his services as conductor of the first Handel Festival, held in Westminster Abbey in the year 1784. Through the kindness of Dr. J. Curling Bates, of Norwood, a lineal descendant of the celebrated Joah, we are enabled to give a facsimile (exact size) of the said ring containing a miniature portrait of Handel. It may not be without interest to give some further particulars concerning that great music-making which Joah Bates organized and conducted with so much skill and success. The Gentlemen's Magazine for May, 1784, in a notice of the first Handel Festival, said:

Joah Bates, Esq., who was the conductor of the band, and to whose efforts so much of the general character and excellence of the entertainment was owing, appeared to be so agitated and inflamed by the subject during the performance—his mind was so involved, and his powers so roused, that his instrument, though immense in its tones, could hardly give utterance to his sentiments. Driven along the torrent so powerfully, he was at times too rapid in the movement, but his judgment quickly corrected his feelings; and a band more easily directed, more distinct in its impressions, or more perfect in its harmony, we never saw. Such was the first exhibition in this national feast.

From the London Magazine of May, 1784, we gain the following 'fashionable' information:

Their Majesties seemed enraptured during the performance. The King was dressed in light blue; the Queen in gorge de pigeon colour, and her headdress decorated with a profusion of diamonds. The Princess Royal was in lilac, and confessedly the most lovely woman in the Abbey. The situation of her Royal Highness was rather singular, though we hope not ominous, being midway between the altar and a cloyster.

Astonishment has often been expressed as to how Mr. Bates could possibly have controlled so huge a body of vocal and instrumental performers while seated at the keyboard of the organ-harpsichord at which he 'conducted' the Festival. Some fresh light on this subject is furnished in an extract from an account of the first day's performance, which appeared in the Daily Advertiser of May 27, 1784. It reads:

As for Mr. Joah Bates, the Conductor, the most accomplished Dilettante in Europe; this was in Effect a sort of Apotheosis to him; he played the Organ, and at Times brandished the conducting Roll, &c., &c., &c.

The '&c., &c., &c.' is certainly somewhat enigmatical in connection with 'the conducting Roll' as 'brandished' by Mr. Joah Bates.

The father of Joah Bates, in addition to his duties of parish clerk of Halifax, was the landlord of the hostelry known as 'The Ring o' Bells,' a house which still stands and in which Joah was born. It is the head-quarters of the Halifax bell-ringers, and probably its name is derived from that circumstance.

Reference was made (on p. 14) to the opening of a new organ in the Parish Church of Halifax, Bates's native town. An interesting 'History' of that instrument is contained in a pamphlet compiled in 1878 by the then organist of the church, Dr. J. Varley Roberts, now of Magdalen College, Oxford, which also gives an account of its opening, &c. It was used for the first time on Sunday, July 13, 1766, Joah Bates presiding at the keyboard, when Psalm 28, vs. 6-9 (to Windsor tune), and Psalm 100 were sung, Purcell's Anthem 'O give thanks' forming the chief feature of the afternoon service. The real opening, however, took place on August 28 and 29, 1766, when the 'Messiah' was performed, and the sum of £309 4s. 6d. realized. A graphic account of this organ opening is contained in the following hitherto unpublished letter written by the Rev. Henry Bates (Joah's brother) to 'Mrs. Grace Bates':

Halifax, Sept. 4th, 1766.

Dear Sister,

The weight of business, which has for some time past so closely engaged me, being at last pretty nearly finished, I have now half an hour's leisure to acquaint you with the particulars of our last week's grand celebrity. You have been already informed that we totally defeated our adversary on the 10th of July, in consequence of which victory it was determined to open our Organ with the performance of the Messiah: and my Brother and myself were desired to undertake the management of it. Accordingly we engaged a band of between 90 and 100 instruments and voices; amongst whom were many performers of the first class. We had between twenty and thirty Violins, seven tenor Violins, six Violoncellos, two double Basses, four Hautbois, four Bassoons, two trumpets, two French horns, Kettle drums, and a chorus of about forty singers, besides the principal singers. This noble band, being assembled on Thursday last, the 28th of Aug., on a scaffold erected on purpose in the front of the new loft, and extending from pillar to pillar, performed the Messiah in such a manner as to give infinite satisfaction to the most polite and numerous assembly that ever appeared in Halifax upon any occasion. The best Judges declared they never heard any thing in London to equal it. The next day the performance was repeated with, if possible, still greater applause. On the second day George Armitage favoured us with his assistance, and declared he should ever think it an honour to have been a performer in so glorious a band. My Brother played a Concerto on the Organ each day between the first and second acts of the Oratorio.

The town was so full of company upon this occasion that scarce a bed was to be got in either public or private house for some time before. We had assemblies each evening; or I don't know whether I might not more properly call them genteel mobs. For tho' they consisted of the politest people in this country, yet there were such crouds of them, that one could scarcely move about. In short, thro' the whole affair one never saw a face that was not in raptures; and my Brother and myself were complimented on all hands for having treated our friends at Halifax with such an entertainment as they had no Idea of; and made the town more brilliant than it ever was before since it stood. . . .

In my list of instruments I forgot to mention the Organ, which is an exceeding fine one, and was played by my Brother thro' the whole performance. Miss Bagnold desires her best respects to you, and intends to write to you very soon. Father, Mother, and Brother are all very well, and desire their blessing, Love, &c.

I am your ever affectionate Brother

H. BATES.

The mention of 'our adversary' in the above letter refers to a spirit of hostility that had sprung up between the chapel wardens of Sowerby and the churchwardens of Halifax, wherein the former gave vent to their feelings of animosity by opposing the erection of the organ. This protest cost the Sowerbyans £437 8s. 6d., 'and (to quote from Dr. Varley Roberts's pamphlet) as significant of the bitter feeling which existed, it is recorded that 1s. 6d. was paid to Jack Maude for a "night waiting" at King's Cross to watch the movements of the Sowerby men. When the organ pipes first arrived, they were hurried into the church by night, and men set to protect them.'

The above letter—written by the Rev. Henry Bates—has been kindly lent us for the purposes of this article by Mrs. Greenhill, of Babbicombe, a granddaughter of Joah Bates, who has also placed at our disposal other letters written by her grandfather. Here is an interesting communication, addressed to 'Mrs. Bates,' which reads thus:

King's Coll., Oct. 16, 1769.

My dear Sister

Since I wrote to you last I have been a perfect Knight errant, and have met with so many adventures that I do not know how to give you any account of them. You have heard from home, to be sure, that the Sea has not been able to keep me in England; but tho' you are such a profound Geographer, and understand the use of the globes, yet I do not think you will be able to trace me, at least upon that little pocket globe which I gave you. You must therefore be content with knowing in general that I have been all over Holland, and went southward as far as Antwerp. Ld. Sandwich's principal design in going was to shew me the great Organ at Haerlem, a print of which he sent me from Holland last year, which you saw framed at my Father's house. But you cannot have an adequate idea of it from that representation, though it appears exceedingly grand; very few engravers are able to do justice to so noble a piece of architecture. It has 68 stops, 8000 pipes, the largest of which is 34 feet high, and 2 feet in diameter, 12 pair of bellows: it cost £10,000; an amazing sum for a single city to expend in an article of this nature; especially as the established religion of the place hardly admits of any use for it.

Which makes it very remarkable that this passion for Organs should run thro' the whole Province of Holland. For tho' that at Haerlem is the largest, yet there are many others nearly of the same size, which are never used in Service time except to play a humdrum sort of a hymn, about half as good as one of our Sternhold and Hopkins's Psalm tunes.

Wherever we went, we saw every thing that was curious, and in the most respectable way: for we travelled like ourselves, like people of the very first quality: our fame generally went before us; so that when we arrived at any place, we were not at the trouble of inquiring for this or that fine thing, but the principal persons of the town were waiting for us, and solicited for the honor of attending us; by this means we were not confined to public sights, like common folks, but had access to every private cabinet of curiosities. You, who pretend to have some notions of cleanliness, would have been particularly pleased with this expedition; for the neatness of the people of Holland is neither to be described nor imagined; the outsides of their houses, and even the streets are so wonderfully clean, that you might eat your dinner from off the pavement: and no wonder, as they are washed and scoured much oftener than the best parlours in our English houses. . . . Let me hear from you very soon, and send me an account of your expedition to Halifax, and how you liked the place, inhabitants, Organ, &c.

Believe me to be yrs most affectionately

J. BATES.

A sidelight on the Court of George III. is given in the subjoined letter addressed by Joah Bates to his mother:

Victualling Office 20 May 1782.

My honored Mother,

Last night Mrs. Bates and I were again sent for to the Queen's house, and entertained their Majesties for three hours. This was the more flattering as it was the Queen's real birthday; the first time we were ordered to attend this year was when the King was in great agitation of spirits on account of the violent change in Administration; so that you see whether he is in or out of humor he sends to us for entertainment. You cannot imagine how very gracious both the King and Queen are, I talk almost as familiarly to them as I do to you: . . .

I am, your dutiful son

J. BATES.

That Joah Bates had a sense of humour is shown in the following extract from a letter written at Lord Sandwich's seat in Huntingdonshire:

Hinchingbrook, Decr- 25, 1772.

My dearest Sister,

I seize the first moment, after I have received the news, to congratulate you & myself & every body about you on the arrival of my little Nephew; whom I desire you will kiss a thousand times for me, & tell him I'll lick him confoundedly, if he does not turn out the best Harpsichord player in Europe. How are his fingers shaped? . . . I desire you will tell the young rogue that I am very angry he is not called Joah.

With my best respects to Mr. Furey I remain, my dear Sister,

Your most affect. Brother

J. BATES.

Lastly, owing to a slip of the pen, the year of Mrs. Joah Bates's death was given as 1814, instead of 1811, vide p. 20, col. 1, of our January issue.

Church and Organ Music.

THE TUNE 'HANOVER.'

The stately and typically English tune 'Hanover' is nearly two hundred years old, and yet how young it seems in its naturalness and joyous strains. The tune first appeared in the important collection bearing this exceedingly long title :

A SUPPLEMENT to the NEW VERSION of Psalms by Dr. Brady and Mr. Tate ; containing

The Psalms in particular measures ; the usual Hymns, Creed, Lord's Prayer, Ten Commandments, for the Holy Sacrament, &c., with Gloria Patri's, and Tunes (Treble and Bass), proper to each of them, and all the rest of the Psalms.

The Sixth Edition, corrected ; and much enlarged : With the addition of Plain Instructions for all those who are desirous to Learn or Improve themselves in Psalmody ; near 30 new Tunes, composed by several of the Best Masters ; and a Table of Psalms suited to the Feasts and Fasts of the Church, &c. With Tables of all the Psalms of the New, Old, and Dr. Patrick's Versions, directing what Tunes are fitted for each Psalm.

The whole being a Compleat Psalmody.

Useful for Teachers and Learners of either Version.

In the SAVOY : Printed by John Nutt ; and Sold by James Holland, at the Bible and Ball, at the West-End of St. Paul's. 1708.

In the above book 'Hanover' is set forth thus :

A New Tune to the 149th Psalm of the New Version and the 104th Psalm of the Old.
A 2 VOICE.

[The notes are diamond-shape in the original.]

In this collection—wherein the tune 'St. Anne's' also appeared for the first time—no composer's names are given to the tunes, but as Dr. Croft is assumed to have had much to do with the compilation of the book, the tunes 'Hanover' and 'St. Anne's' are usually assigned to him.

The tune is named 'Hanover,' perhaps for the first time, in Gawthorne's 'Harmonia perfecta' [1730], but in Michael Broome's collection (circa 1731) it is christened 'St. George's Tune.' Within ten years of its publication the tune appeared (in Chetham's Psalmody, 1718) with its melody altered. Another variant is to be found in :

PAROCHIAL PSALMODY ; consisting of a collection of PSALM-TUNES in three and four parts, by some of the most eminent ancient and modern Composers and others.

Particularly adapted to the variety of Metres in the New Version of Psalms, and intended to supply the great Deficiency of Tunes in that Version.

To which are added

Reasons for publishing this Collection and Remarks on other publications of this Nature.

By WILLIAM RILEY, Principal Teacher of Psalmody to the Charity Schools in London, Westminster and Parts adjacent. London [1762].

N.V. HANOVER TUNE.

*Adapted to the Measure of 8 & 8.
The Author not known.*

[The original is in open score, with alto and tenor clefs.]

It will be observed that Riley states 'The Author not known.' But for many years, even as late as 'The Presbyterian Hymnal' (Edinburgh, 1877), the tune was assigned to Handel! Now as Handel did not arrive in England until 1710, two years after the 'Supplement' appeared, it is highly improbable that he wrote the tune. Moreover, as the tune appeared in at least a dozen different collections during Handel's lifetime, it may be assumed that if it had been composed by him that fact would have been made known. In the index to the 'People's Music Book,' edited by James Turle and Edward Taylor and published in 1844, it is stated that 'This tune [Hanover] has been ascertained to have been the composition of Dr. Croft by satisfactory evidence,' therefore the matter may there rest, especially as the tune is worthy of so estimable a composer of English church music as Dr. Croft.

The usual characteristics of a successful hymn-tune are stamped upon 'Hanover.' Compass (one octave, from dominant to dominant), melodic simplicity (stepwise walk of the melody, and simple skips, mostly of the common chord, including those fine instances at the end of line 3 and beginning of line 4 of words), and the dignified brightness of its irresistible 'go.' Notice also the dignified tread of the bass part as written by Dr. Croft: it might with advantage have been retained in some modern hymnals.

WESLEY'S 'WILDERNESS.'

The Rev. Charles Wesley, Rector of Grosmont, Monmouthshire, and a son of Dr. S. S. Wesley, sends us the following letter on the subject of the Recitative ('Then shall the lame man leap as an hart') in his father's anthem 'The Wilderness,' to which reference was made in our January issue, page 29:

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

Grosmont Rectory, Hereford.

DEAR SIR,—I gave my copy of the 'Twelve Anthems by S. S. Wesley' to Sir Frederick Bridge many years ago, and therefore was in ignorance that that edition contained the D sharp to the word 'man.' Nothing but seeing the edition of 1853—as I was permitted by the kindness of the Succutor of Hereford Cathedral to do the other day—would have made me believe that my father ever allowed the D sharp. I can only say that I have had the passage in my head ever since I can remember any music, and it always has come to my mind with the C sharp for both words 'lame man.'

If I am not too presumptuous, I would defend that reading on the following ground: A musician writing in Recitative aims at accentuating and emphasising the words to be recited. For that purpose the two words 'lame man' are as one word. If C sharp properly accentuates and emphasises the word 'lame,' why should the voice move to D sharp to express 'man'? I always regarded the passage as one instance of the pains my father took to adapt the music to the words. The reciting voice changing from the words 'lame man,' sung to C sharp, to the word 'leap,' sung to E sharp, does help the mind of the hearer to grasp the idea of a lame man leaping, and to my mind that effect is lost by the interposition of the D sharp to the word 'man.'

With all respect to Sir Frederick Bridge and my brother, I heartily beg that you will adhere to your resolution to support the reading C sharp for the two words 'lame man.' I remember as a child hearing some friends say to my father, 'Oh! Dr. Wesley, we heard your anthem "The Wilderness" at — Cathedral, and we only recognised it just at the end'; and I must confess that hearing his music as now sung does not always quite recall the effect produced by the performance with my father at the organ. Still, I suppose this might be said of every composer and his music.

I am, Dear Sir, Faithfully yours,

C. WESLEY.

Mr. Thomas Brandon, of Gloucester, to whom we wrote on the above subject, says:—

I am quite sure that in the Recit. the words 'lame man' were both sung to C sharp in Gloucester Cathedral. I have seen one of the tenors, and he confirms this, and has brought me an old manuscript copy and it is so there.

As Mr. Brandon was a lay-clerk at Gloucester Cathedral during Dr. Wesley's organistship, he speaks as a man with authority.

Mr. Edward M. Oakeley writes on the same interesting subject:

Apropos of the Recitative in Wesley's anthem 'The Wilderness,' in which your last number may claim to have permanently reinstated the C sharp—as at any rate Wesley's second (and final) thoughts—I find pasted into my copy of the 1853 edition, presented to my brother Sir Herbert Oakeley by the composer, two bits of Wesley autograph which may interest some of your readers.

Referring to the progression of parts in bar 16 from the end of the first movement—at the word 'singing'—Wesley writes:

'The thing is rugged, I own, and were I to set the passage now, I should write or the alto F might have a dot, making the next note (D) a quaver.'

The other extract is as follows:

'I see the treble and alto in bar 1 of page 34 [beginning of last movement] make 8ths. I perhaps might say that as the passage is partly an octave one, the first note being in unison, the counterpoint writing does not begin till 2nd bar, but I own . . .'

and here, unfortunately, the extract ends.

M. GUILMANT'S RECITALS IN AMERICA.

The programmes of the forty organ recitals recently given by M. Alexandre Guilmant, the eminent French organist, on the great organ of the St. Louis Exhibition have been published by Messrs. Towers & Co., of St. Louis. The pamphlet forms quite a valuable study of organ musical literature from the 17th century down to the present day. The following countries were represented: Italy, Germany, France, England, Denmark, Belgium, and America. One programme, devoted entirely to French music, included works by the great F. Couperin, also by his uncle, F. Couperin, Marchand, Grigny, and Clérambault, all of the 17th century. The name of Grigny, organist of Rheims Cathedral, is of special note, inasmuch as J. S. Bach, whose interest in French music was so great, copied out one of his Suites. Compositions by the following American musicians were played: Dudley Buck, Arthur W. Foote, Horatio Parker, and Harry R. Shelley. English composers were represented by John Bennett, S. S. Wesley, Henry Smart, E. T. Chipp, John Stainer, W. T. Best, and T. Tertius Noble. We give a complete list of the English pieces which M. Guilmant performed:

Fugue in G minor	...	John Bennett.
Choral Song and Fugue	...	S. S. Wesley.
Larghetto in F sharp minor	...	S. S. Wesley.
Andante in G	...	S. S. Wesley.
Choral in E flat with variations	...	Henry Smart.
Sketch in E flat minor	...	E. T. Chipp.
Preludium Pastorale	...	John Stainer.
Pastorale, 'Quem vidistis pastores'	...	W. T. Best.
Theme with variations	...	T. T. Noble.

In the annotations contributed by Mr. Ernest R. Kroeger to M. Guilmant's St. Louis Exhibition programmes, the dates of John Bennett are wrongly given as '1835-1897,' though in M. Guilmant's Trocadéro programmes they are more correctly stated, viz., '1735?-1762.' As a matter of fact this John Bennett was appointed organist of St. Dionis Backchurch, Fenchurch Street, at Easter, 1752, in succession to Dr. Burney, as we discovered in making the search in the Vestry records when writing the biographical sketch of the great historian THE MUSICAL TIMES, July, August, and September, 1904).

The version of John Bennett's fugue which M. Guilmant played is that edited by W. J. Westbrook and published by Messrs. Augener. Here is its subject :

This fine fugue appeared in a publication entitled :

In looking through the list of subscribers to this volume it is interesting to find the name of 'George Frederic Handel, Esq.'

At St. Mary Magdalene Church, Taunton, on January 20, Mr. Otto Milani and Mr. Harold A. Jeboult gave a violin and organ recital, when the programme (subjoined) was selected from the works of rarely-heard composers of the 17th and 18th centuries, including the English, French, German, and Neapolitan Schools of Music :

Con Spirito (from an Organ Concerto)

Sonata, in G (for Violin)	Dr. T. A. Arne, (1710-1778).
Fuga, in C major	Henry Purcell (1658-1695).
Siciliano	D. Buxtehude (1637-1674).
Variations (for Violin) on a Theme of Corelli	A. Scarlatti (1659-1725).
	G. Tartini (1692-1770).
Passacalle (Rondeau)...	C. Couperin (1638-1669).
Canzonetta (for Violin)	A. Lotti (1667-1740).
Concerto, No. 10	A. Corelli (1653-1713).

The retirement of Mr. Charles Vere from the organistship of Christ Church, Finchley, is announced. Mr. Vere has been organist since 1878. The church authorities and the congregation part from Mr. Vere with much regret, but they feel that after twenty-six years of loyal and much-esteemed service he has fully earned a right to repose.

BERLIOZ'S ONLY ORATORIO

'THE CHILDHOOD OF CHRIST.'*

'I hear on all sides that your oratorio is a perfect bouquet of sweet flowers of melody and a masterpiece of simplicity.' Thus wrote Heine to Berlioz in regard to 'The Childhood of Christ.' The origin of this oratorio, to adopt Heine's designation, is no less curious than interesting. In a long letter written to John Ella, Director of the Musical Union in London—to whom Part II. of the oratorio, 'The Flight into Egypt,' is dedicated—Berlioz records the germination of the work. At a card-party given one evening at a nobleman's house in Paris, Berlioz seemed so bored that a fellow guest, his friend Duc, an architect, said to him: 'Since thou doest nothing, Berlioz, why not write a piece of music in my album?' This suggestion was at once acted upon, and a short and simple andantino for the organ was the result. Berlioz then wrote some words to the music of his friend's album-leaf, and said to Duc: 'I shall put thy name at the bottom as the composer; I mean to compromise thee.' 'What an idea!' replied the architect; 'but my friends know that I am entirely ignorant of composition.' 'Ah! that is a good reason in truth for not composing,' said Berlioz; 'but since your vanity refuses to adopt the paternity of my piece, I shall create a name, of which thine own will form a part. It shall be Pierre Ducré, maître de musique de Sainte Chapelle, Paris, in the 17th century. That will give my manuscript all the value of an archaeological curiosity.'

Shortly afterwards, wishing to include a choral composition in the programme of a Philharmonic Society concert he had to conduct in Paris, Berlioz decided to perform this 'archæological curiosity.' At the rehearsals the singers very naturally showed 'a lively affection for the ancestral music' composed by 'Pierre Ducré.' Said they to Berlioz: 'Where did you disinter it?' 'Disinter is nearly the word,' he unhesitatingly replied; 'it was found in an old walled-up chest during the recent restoration of Sainte Chapelle.' The secret was well kept, the concert took place, the critics praised the music, and congratulated Berlioz on his discovery. One critic only, in his comments upon the 'Ducré' piece, was sceptical as to its given date of 1679! The ruse, however, proved to be quite successful, and the freak brought forth such remarks as: 'Perfectly delicious! that is music! and time has dimmed none of its freshness,' and 'If only M. Berlioz could compose such music!' So the story goes. The concert above referred to took place on November 12, 1850.

The choral creation of 'Pierre Ducré' is now the charming Shepherds' chorus, 'Thou must leave Thy lowly dwelling, a perfect gem of its kind. This and the Overture in F sharp minor ('without its leading note') with 'The Repose of the Holy Family,' constitute 'The Flight into Egypt' section of the Trilogy, which was published as a separate work under that title. The date and place of the first performance of this 'Part II.' is a little doubtful; but 'The Repose of the Holy Family' was sung in London at the Philharmonic concert of May 30, 1853, when the first part of the programme, conducted by the composer, consisted entirely of compositions by Berlioz. The excerpt appeared in the programme as follows:—

THE REPOSE OF THE HOLY FAMILY. A descriptive air, sung by Signor GARDONI. From an oratorio in the ancient style, entitled 'The Flight into Egypt'; the words and music by M. BERLIOZ.

Berlioz subsequently amplified 'The Flight into Egypt,' and in so doing created a sacred Trilogy, which he designated 'L'enfance du Christ.' On July 28, 1854, he wrote to his friend, Hans von Bülow, in these words:—

I have been working hard since my return from Dresden. I have finished the first portion of my Trilogy, 'The Dream of Herod.' This precedes the embryo which you know under the title of 'The Flight into Egypt,' and, with 'The Arrival at Saïs,' will form an entire work consisting of sixteen movements, lasting an hour and a-half, including the intervals.

The first performance of the complete work took place at the Salle Herz, Paris, on Sunday, December 10, 1854—not December 12, as has been printed for half-a-century on the French editions of the music. It achieved a splendid success. The Paris correspondent of The Musical World wrote: 'The audience contained almost every artist and literary man in Paris. For nearly a fortnight every reserved seat had been taken in advance; the few unreserved seats were filled directly the doors were opened, and hundreds were turned away . . . M. Berlioz was greeted with enormous cheers at the conclusion and recalled some twenty times.'

An English version, 'imitated from the French,' of 'L'enfance du Christ,' by Henry F. Chorley, was published by Messrs. Cramer at the end of 1855, or early in 1856, with the title 'The Holy Family.' It seems almost incredible that after its publication with words in the vernacular, the work should have had to wait for twenty-five years before its performance in England; but, according to present information, the oratorio was first brought to a hearing in this country by the late Sir Charles Hallé, at the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, on December 30, 1880; and in London, under the same conductorship, on February 26, 1881.

'The Childhood of Christ'—the only oratorio composed by Berlioz—was regarded with special affection by its author, who wrote both the words and the music. There are several references to it in his Autobiography and published letters. He says (in the Autobiography):—'In that work [L'enfance du Christ] many people imagined that they could detect a radical change in my style and manner. This opinion is entirely without foundation. The subject naturally lent itself to gentle and simple music, and for that reason alone it was more in accordance with the taste and intelligence of the public.'

In a letter, dated 'Paris, June 27, 1863,' and written within six years of his death, Berlioz makes the following interesting reference to this oratorio:—

'I have returned from Strasburg done up and unnerved. "L'enfance du Christ," performed before a perfect multitude, created a stupendous effect. The room, constructed ad hoc in the Kléber Square, contained 8,500 people, and yet every note was heard throughout the building. The audience wept, applauded, and involuntarily interrupted several movements. You can have no idea of the impression produced by the mystic chorus at the end. In it I saw the religious ecstasy of which I have dreamt, and which I have just felt while writing. An unaccompanied chorus sung by 250 men and 250 women who had been rehearsing for three months! They did not fall in pitch even half a quarter of a tone. Such a thing is unknown in Paris. At the last Amen—the pianissimo, which seems to lose itself in the mysterious distance—a burst of applause broke forth such as I have never heard; 16,000 hands were applauding together. Then came a deluge of flowers and manifestations of every kind.'

In the present edition of the 'Childhood of Christ,' the original duet form of the March in Part I., and Overture to Part II.—arrangements published during the composer's lifetime and which received his approval—have been retained. The new English version is one that should help towards successful performances of a very beautiful and devotional work—a work that is free from complexity, and one that occupied a warm corner in the heart of its composer.

Reviews.

The Oxford History of Music. Vol. V. The Viennese Period. By W. H. Hadow. Oxford University Press. 1904.

Those who have made acquaintance with Mr. Hadow's 'Studies in Modern Music' will have already recognized his qualification for the position of general editor of this great undertaking, and they will not be disappointed in the contribution which he makes to the series.

It will be remembered that the position claimed for the work is to 'trace the evolution of the Art of Music,' 'to deal with the Art rather than the Artist.' As we come to more recent times this is increasingly difficult. In considering the history of a nation we trace its progress in a gradual consensus of opinion, but even in this case the paramount force of character of one man—an Alexander or a Napoleon—may completely alter its course. Art stands on a different footing; its progress and advancement is due to individual genius alone. Its exponents no doubt are indebted to the knowledge and experience of their forerunners. Under such influences the man of talent produces work of much interest, differing but little in its characteristics from that which is in his day current. The man of genius breaks away from all such trammels, and we recognize that he has enlarged the domain of art. Each alike passes through a period of pupillage during which his production takes its cast from that of his master, and is indeed frankly imitative. The early works of Raffaele might almost be signed Perugino; when he arrives at maturity he gives us the Cartoons, and the Madonna di San Sisto, and the true Raffaele declares himself. And thus in the early works of Beethoven the influence of Haydn and Mozart is obvious; then comes the 'Eroica,' and we have for the first time the real Beethoven—and the difference is not only one of degree, but of kind. We are willing to trace the 'unceasing purpose,' but in Art 'the process' owes its energy to that of the great minds which have devoted themselves to its expression. Suppose for one moment that Mozart and Beethoven could have changed periods; is it conceivable that Beethoven, brought up under the same influence, could in any way have resembled the earlier master, or that Mozart could have developed Beethoven's third style? The development we admit, but we find it in the overpowering mastery of genius rather than in the action of any law of evolution.

Holding these views, it is not without a certain satisfaction that we find the evolutionary theory, if not tacitly abandoned, at least not unduly pressed in the present volume. The genius of the great masters comprised in the Viennese period dominates the work, nor could it be otherwise. In a complete history, much well-known ground has to be travelled over. The labours of Marx, Newman, Jahn, Thayer, and others, whose names will at once occur to the well-read musician, have rendered us familiar with the careers of these great men. But if the ground is well trodden, the journey is made delightful by the companionship of our author, with his intimate acquaintance with all the points of interest on the road. Mr. Hadow is the possessor of an excellent style, which adds much to the pleasure of the volume, and in addition he gives evidence of an amount of knowledge and reading which is really remarkable, and this is not confined to music. The first chapter on the general condition of taste in the 18th century is a brilliant example of this wealth of illustration, dealing with the social conditions then existing which made Mozart's life for some years so intolerable. Music at that time was the luxury of the wealthy alone, and frequently in their case only an expression of magnificence. The capacity for the enjoyment of music depends on a larger amount of leisure and cultivation than were then possessed by the middle and lower classes.

Mr. Hadow, we have no doubt, rightly dates the origin of this period from the passing away of the contrapuntal style with the death of Sebastian Bach, and the rise of the harmonic school of which his son, C. P. Emanuel Bach, was a foremost exponent. All who have studied the life of Haydn will remember how large was the influence which the Sonatas of this composer had on his career. This is excellently traced in the present work, and in fairness it must be admitted that it forms a strong argument in favour of the thesis originally laid down. We need hardly say that the influence of Croatian folk-song on the composer is brought prominently forward, Mr. Hadow's views on this point having already been brought before the public.

In treating of the Opera, a chapter is naturally devoted to the works of Gluck and the reforms which he introduced, with an account of the controversy of which they were the occasion, and this of course includes an estimate of the works of Piccini. It has always seemed to us remarkable how evanescent the influence of Gluck really was, unless the work of Wagner in our own day can be looked on as its continuation, and equally remarkable how completely his operas, perhaps with the exception of 'Orfeo,' have failed to keep the stage. Mr. Hadow does not consider either of these points, on which we should have been glad to have his opinion.

Passing to the chapter on 'The Opera from Mozart to Weber,' our author calls attention to the fact that the want of success of Mozart's German operas in Vienna, with the exception of 'Die Entführung,' had one good result, for it is to this that we are indebted for the masterpieces, 'Figaro,' 'Don Giovanni,' and 'Cosi fan tutte.' In Mr. Hadow's view it is 'a mere historical accident that the three great operas were set to Italian words. Had they been written for the German, in which they are so often played, one cannot suppose that the quality of the music would have been sensibly affected.' Possibly not the quality, but we think most people will agree with us that the style would certainly have been modified. Cimarosa appears to us to receive scant justice in the mere mention of his 'Il matrimonio segreto' as 'a landmark in the history of comic opera.' Paisiello and Salieri—whose operas in these days have quite passed out of notice—are glanced at, and we then come to Cherubini, whose greatest works, produced in Paris, are noticed at some length, as their importance demanded. Paris became for a time the centre of operatic activity, as witnessed by the works of Lesueur, Gossec, Méhul, Grétry, and later of Boieldieu, and there the most important of the works of Spontini first saw the light. To the last-named composer Mr. Hadow devotes some space, as he was in fact an important factor in musical history as the originator of the French 'Grand' opera, to be developed in later days by Meyerbeer. We should have supposed that Rossini would have rightly found a place in the present volume, but in this we are disappointed. Mr. Hadow tells us how the career of Spontini was brought to a close in Berlin by the extraordinary success of Weber's 'Freischütz.' Of 'Fidelio' and its four Overtures the author gives us the history, coupled with an excellent analysis of the work.

A chapter on Oratorio and Church music gives occasion for an appreciative notice of C. P. E. Bach's now forgotten 'Die Israeliten in der Wüste' (1769). Mr. Hadow, we are glad to find, speaks with refreshing delight of Haydn's two well-known oratorios, while he claims for his 'Il Ritorno di Tobia' that 'it contains some of his finest and most brilliant writing.' To Spohr's oratorios somewhat grudging praise is accorded, although he admits that 'The Last Judgment' is 'real music,' and that 'after all, among German composers of oratorio he is the most conspicuous figure between C. P. E. Bach and Mendelssohn.' Mr. Hadow is almost appalled at the vast extent of Church music, but there is an excellent note to this chapter on English cathedral music, and in speaking of Attwood's 'Come, Holy Ghost' he remarks 'it may be said adversely that it is not unworthy of the hand that wrote "Ave verum."' Justice is also done to the elder Wesley.

Space fails us to go seriatim through all the chapters of this excellent work. It must suffice to say that they treat of the Instrumental forms as developed in the growth of the Sonata, the earlier Symphonies and Quartets of Haydn, the works of Haydn and Mozart in their maturity, Beethoven and his later contemporaries, including Schubert, and we need hardly say that the two latter are treated with great fulness and wide acquaintance with their works. The volume concludes with a chapter on Song, Beethoven and Schubert naturally occupying the largest space, while we are glad to see that the merits of Arne, Dibdin, Shield, Hook, and Horn are recognized.

A profusion of music-type examples adds greatly to the value of this volume, and forms the text of the careful analysis with which it abounds. The comprehensive acquaintance which the author has with the works of the several composers, both of the greatest and the more obscure, is most noticeable. That we should always accept his judgments is of course impossible, but he is always prepared with 'a reason for the faith that is in him.'

But we must bring these remarks to a close. We regret that so little is said of the English Glee writers, many of whose works are in their particular way masterpieces. It is curious to find Bishop described as 'professorial and academic'—here we think Mr. Hadow has gone astray; and he should not write about 'Ludwig' Spohr.

Organ Arrangements. Edited by John E. West. Numbers 1 to 9. [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

These arrangements are a little off the beaten track, though we find some familiar strains in the nine numbers forming the first instalment of this series. The editor is responsible for Nos. 1, 2, 3, comprising Schumann's 'Manfred' Overture, the Intermezzo from Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Rose of Sharon,' and Schumann's 'Whims' from the 'Fantasiestücke.' Mr. West not only knows what he wants, but he has the faculty of making the most of the resources of the modern organ without unduly crowding his staves with a superfluity of notes, and he always aims at clearness and playability,—if that word may be allowed—and succeeds. Mr. W. A. C. Cruickshank makes skillful transcriptions of the melodious Andante from Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto and the first movement of Schubert's lovely 'Unfinished' Symphony. Three attractive movements from César Cui's Opus 20 are well laid out for the organ by Mr. Percy E. Fletcher; and Dr. Plant has arranged a charming pair of melodies in Schumann's familiar Nachstück in F, and Schubert's dainty Moment Musical in F minor—two pieces admirably mated for an (a) and (b) in a recital programme. Mr. West has furnished an able 'laying out' of C. Philipp Emanuel Bach's stately Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, a most effective piece and not difficult of execution. The series is one that will doubtless prove to be useful to organists of various degrees of technical attainment.

Original Compositions for the Organ. By various composers. [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

In an 'Overture alla marcia' in B flat, Dr. Markham Lee contributes to this familiar series of organ music a bright and effective composition, dedicated to Mr. W. G. Alcock, which makes an excellent 'out' voluntary or recital piece. The name of Mr. William Faulkes figures so frequently in organ recital programmes that any fresh product of his pen is sure to command attention. Here is a Fantasia (in A minor) of the maestoso species, full of go, with a fugal episode, the whole ending in the tonic major key, and containing the elements of attractiveness in the hands of a non-stodgy player. Buxtehude takes us from the modern to the ancient in his Chaconne in E minor and two Choral Preludes ('In dulci jubilo' and 'Puer natus in Bethlehem'), all three compositions being edited by Mr. John E. West with rare insight into these old-world examples of true organ music. Other recent numbers of the series are a Melody and Intermezzo by Mr. Luard-Selby; a Rhapsodie (on an ancient Christmas carol) by Mr. Faulkes; an Overture in F by Mr. Hamilton Clarke; and an Andante religioso in E flat by Mr. John W. Ivimey.

SOME USEFUL BOOKS OF REFERENCE.

The Musical Directory, Annual and Almanack for 1905 (Rudall, Carte & Co.), invaluable as of yore.—Hazell's Annual for 1905 (Hazell, Watson & Viney, Ltd.), which fully justifies its sub-title as 'a cyclopaedic record of men and topics of the day'; moreover, it contains several pages devoted to musical subjects.—The Public School Year-Book, 1905 (Swan Sonnenschein & Co., Ltd.), not only gives a mass of well-digested information concerning public schools, the masters, fees, scholarships, &c., but in the valuable Appendices (twelve in number) some twenty pages are devoted to music, especially Scholarships at the Universities and the great Schools of Music.

Obituary.

MR. T. W. TAPHOUSE, M.A.

(The Mayor of Oxford.)

With deep regret we have to place on record the death, from heart failure, of Mr. THOMAS WILLIAM TAPHOUSE, M.A., Mayor of Oxford, which took place suddenly at his residence, 3, Magdalen Street, Oxford, on January 8, at the age of sixty-seven. In our issue of October last we had the great satisfaction of giving an account of the splendid musical library of Mr. Taphouse, together with a sketch of his interesting career, and a special portrait, true to life. No need, therefore, to repeat the information set forth in an article which, we were glad to find, gave to its subject and his friends much pleasure. But life passing away of this modest, kind-hearted man—beloved and respected by all who enjoyed his friendship—calls for a further recognition of his interest in music and especially his willingness freely to place the treasures of his library at the disposal of those who worked in the field of musical literature. In this connection the readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES during the past few years have owed not a little to Mr. Taphouse; and we to whom he was always so exceedingly kind in lending books and supplying information will sorely miss our genial, generous friend. The interment took place on January 11, at Rose Hill Cemetery, Oxford, amid many manifestations of the sorrow of those who felt they had lost a dear friend, and also of the respect in which the University city held its Chief Magistrate.

MR. E. J. PAYNE.

The musical world has lost an active and genial amateur violinist by the death at Wendover, on December 26, 1904, of Mr. EDWARD JOHN PAYNE, Recorder of High Wycombe. He had no ambition to take a leading position as an instrumentalist, although he might have done so if he had cared or had been able to give the necessary time to perfecting his technique on the violin. His main interest, however, was with the history of stringed instruments, and, as a historian, he attained an important and well-recognised position. It was natural that this aspect of music should most seriously attract him, though he was fond of it in all its aspects. The extreme kindness of his nature made him ready to place his knowledge and skill at the disposal either of the promoters of a village concert or of a learned society. He took a special interest in the ancient stringed instruments, and played on several of the viol kind, including the treble viol, the tenor viol, and the bass viol or viola-da-gamba. For the last-named he had a special predilection, maintaining that it was far superior to the violoncello. On one occasion, at the South Kensington Loan Collection of 1885, Mr. Payne personally demonstrated on the viola-da-gamba the capabilities of the instrument in playing several pieces, accompanied by the late Mr. A. J. Hipkins on the harpsichord. He was a member of the committee of this Loan Collection, and also of the jury of the music section of the Inventions Exhibition. Mr. Payne gave a curious example of his enthusiasm for ancient instruments on the occasion of a performance of Handel's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day,' at Newbury, when, after a long search, he purchased a fine old lute, and learned to play it sufficiently to take the lute obbligato which occurs in that work. He could also read all the old music, play from the figured bass or lute tablature, and could on an emergency play a part on any stringed instrument. As one of the founders of the Bar Musical Society and as its first Hon. Secretary he did excellent work.

It is in connection with his contributions to Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' that his name is probably best known to the musical world. His article on Stradivari was far in advance of anything else that had hitherto been written. For the production of this article, and also the important one on the violin, he took great pains, as he did about all work that he undertook. He visited North Italy and South Germany for the purpose of collecting evidence in the places in which the great violin makers lived and worked, and he took the opportunity of the Exhibition at Milan in 1881 to see the collection of Stradivari's tools that was there shown. He made careful researches at Cremona in particular; and also visited Abam, near Innsbruck, on the other side of the Alps, the home of Jacob Stainer.

Mr. Payne formed certain theories on the subject of the tone of violins, and in a lecture which he gave some twenty years ago to the students of the Royal College of Music he expounded his views with considerable ingenuity. Whatever may be the ultimate verdict of those best qualified to judge upon his conclusions on the subject of tone, or on purely historical matters, it must be allowed that there was nothing careless or slipshod about his mode of reaching his results. He accepted no mere gossip or idle tradition such as readily accumulate about famous workers in all careers. At the same time he was a real enthusiast on the subject in hand, holding in the highest esteem the remarkable series of men who succeeded in developing and finally perfecting the most delicate and responsive of all instruments. It is unnecessary to touch on Mr. Payne's scholarly attainments in other directions. We must conclude with a hope that by his premature death the articles which he was preparing for the new edition of Grove's 'Dictionary' are not lost.

MR. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

Mr. SAMUEL ARTHUR CHAPPELL died, we regret to record, at 45, Brook Street, on December 21, 1904, aged seventy-eight. A member of the family so long connected with the well-known publishing and concert-giving business in New Bond Street, 'Uncle Arthur,' as he was affectionately called, will be long remembered as director of the Monday Popular Concerts, a position he filled with much distinction for forty years. In THE MUSICAL TIMES of September, 1898 (p. 595), we gave some historical notes on the origin of the far-famed Popular Concerts—financed by Mr. Tom Chappell: how they owed their inception to the Cattle Show, though the connection between bullocks and Beethoven, cattle and quartets, does not seem very obvious until the circumstances attending the initiation of the concerts are known.

MR. THEODORE THOMAS.

The death of Mr. THEODORE THOMAS is referred to by our own correspondent at New York, but a few biographical particulars may be given of the distinguished conductor who achieved such well-deserved fame in America. Born at Esens, Hanover, on October 11, 1835, he was taught the violin by his father and played in public at the age of six. In 1845 the family emigrated to New York, where Theodore played in an orchestra, subsequently (in 1851) going on a concert-tour as a soloist in the company of Jenny Lind, Grisi, Sontag, Mario, and others. He played in various opera orchestras, sometimes conducting, until 1861, but three years later he organized an orchestra for 'Symphony Soirées' at Irving Hall, New York, this venture being the beginning of his eventful career as an orchestra conductor in New York, Chicago, and elsewhere in the United States. It has been truly said that Theodore Thomas 'has done more than any other man to raise the standard of music in America.' This honourable record of something attempted, something done, is borne out by Mr. Krehbiel's appreciation on page 118 of our present issue, to which the reader is referred.

Other recent deaths are those of FRANK CELLI, at Charing Cross Hospital, formerly well known as an operatic baritone; Madame BELLE COLE, a popular American contralto, who died in London on January 6, aged sixty; and FREDERICK ENOCH, writer of lyrics and author of many popular songs, whose death took place at Ringmer, Sussex, at the age of seventy-seven.

The next conference of the Girls' School Music Union will be held on Saturday, February 25, at the Kensington High School, St. Alban's Road, at 3 p.m., Lady Mary Lygon in the chair. Mrs. Woodhouse, of Clapham High School, and Miss Elsa Froebel will jointly contribute a paper on 'The desirability of special training in the teaching of music.'

MR. ALFRED HOLLINS ON HIS AUSTRALASIAN TOUR.

EDINBURGH, January 12, 1905.

A gentleman whom I met in New Zealand came over to Scotland a few years ago to spend a holiday at his uncle's estate. One day, as they were walking through the grounds, they came across the gamekeeper. 'This is my nephew from New Zealand,' quoth the uncle. The gamekeeper stared hard for a few seconds, and then said in characteristic Scotch fashion: 'Why! he's no' black.' I am afraid not a few of us home-birds have equally strange notions of our Colonial cousins, in fact, they jokingly tell us that we need to go out there in order to be brought 'up to date'! They are a warm-hearted, enthusiastic kinsfolk, eager to receive and welcome everything new.

We left Tilbury Docks on May 20 last on board the good ship Ortona, of the Orient-Pacific line. A more comfortable and safe vessel, manned by kinder or more attentive officers, from Captain Fletcher downwards, one could not desire. I was most anxious to learn all I possibly could about the ship and its working, and if Mr. Turnbull, the genial Chief Engineer, is bothered every voyage with so inquisitive a passenger, I wonder he is alive to tell the tale. I shall always be grateful to him for his kindness and patience in explaining every detail of the engines to me; and what a revelation it was to go down into the engine-room and be able to see with my own 'ten eyes' all that vast machinery. The verse often came into my mind, 'They that go down to the sea in ships,' &c. Indeed, one thing that has impressed me perhaps more than any other is the enormous amount of work and care involved in the management of a steamship on a long voyage. But I am forgetting that I have been asked to write an account of our trip for THE MUSICAL TIMES.

The first music we heard was the band on board one of our ironclads, playing at the hoisting of the Union Jack, and although we had then travelled more than a thousand miles, its cheery sound made us feel very near home. It was with great pleasure we saw by the passenger list that Paderewski was to be one of our fellow voyagers. I had never met this great artist, and the pleasure was increased when I was introduced to him, and found after a very short time that he is not only a great musician, but a most courteous gentleman and sympathetic friend. He endeared himself to every one on board, and had a kindly smile and word for all. The same may be said of his charming wife: no wonder they win love and admiration wherever they go. I had many pleasant chats with Mr. Adlington, Paderewski's clever manager and friend, who often entertained me with stories of his experiences as a concert agent. Perhaps the greatest delight of the whole voyage was to sit and listen to Paderewski practising. I wish all students of music could have had this grand opportunity. One thing is certain, he is no trickster, but has obtained his great mastery of the pianoforte by enormous hard work. He meant to give Australia his very best, and to that end would practise even on board ship never less than three hours a day. The patience and care he bestows on passages even of the slightest difficulty are a lesson to all. I shall not speak of the various places we touched at, but I must just mention our stay at Naples. Here we were serenaded by parties of singers who accompanied themselves on guitars and mandolines. Their voices were not pretty, but there was a certain charm in lying in one's berth and hearing Italian canzonettas from a distance across the peaceful bay.

The first Australian city we visited was Adelaide, where we were met by Mr. A. W. Hendry, the enterprising superintendent of the Royal Institution for the Blind. He is a very clever and energetic man, and is doing much to advance the cause of the blind in Adelaide. I also made the acquaintance of Mr. Ernest Wood, organist of Melbourne Cathedral, who very kindly gave me the opportunity of trying his fine Lewis organ. This was interesting, as I had given a recital on the instrument in the factory before it was shipped to Australia. On my return to Melbourne I was present at a service in the Cathedral. I believe the Cathedral authorities spend more on their music than any other church in the Colonies, and the choir is considered the best church choir in Australasia; at any rate, I thought it extremely good and enjoyed the service immensely, especially the chanting, which reminded me very much of that at the Temple Church in dear old Father Hopkins's days. Mr. Wood's accompaniments were tasteful and devotional.

We reached Sydney early on Saturday morning, July 2. To see that glorious harbour with its innumerable points and bays opening out before one as the ship slowly steams between the huge Heads, must indeed be one of the sights of the world. There are four things of which Sydney people are justly proud: the Harbour, the Post Office, the Town Hall, and their colossal organ, built by Hill. We were warmly received by Mr. Arthur Mason, the City Organist, Mr. Nesbitt, the Town Clerk, and others. Indeed, Mr. Mason was most cordial and kind throughout our stay. I said that the Sydney people are justly proud of the organ; it is a noble instrument! The hall, when full, is acoustically perfect, and the organ is splendidly placed. It had been thoroughly cleaned, preparatory to my visit, by Mr. Charles Richardson, whose careful attention to the organ during my recitals added greatly to my comfort. The choir and solo organs are now enclosed in swell boxes, the crescendo pedals balanced, instead of being levers—a great advantage, in my opinion, and a glockenspiel, consisting of two octaves of steel bars, 2-feet pitch, has been added to the solo organ. It would be well if the City Council could see their way to having the entire key action modernized, as at present it is not equal to concert work. My final recital took place on Saturday, October 8, but I gave an extra one the following day, Sunday, as a mark of appreciation to my audiences. There were over five thousand people present, the corridors and outer hall being also crowded, and though many of the audience had to stand, the quietness which prevailed throughout the recital was marvellous, indeed, it was a marked feature at every performance.

Since my return, the one question I have been asked more than any other is 'Are the Australians musical?' I would undoubtedly answer 'Yes.' I do not think it possible to find more attentive or appreciative audiences than those I played to in Sydney, and it surprised and delighted me to see with what warmth and enthusiasm the Bach numbers were received. I met many enthusiastic music teachers, and the musical examinations, conducted yearly by the representatives of the various examining bodies of this country, are doing much to foster a love for the best music in our Colonies. Sydney possesses a really excellent amateur orchestra, the result of the indefatigable labour of its founder and admirable conductor, Signor Hazon. I had hoped to have the pleasure of playing a concerto at one of the Society's concerts, but this was impossible. A quartet of strings, formed by four members of the Sydney College of Music, with Mr. Alpress as leader, were kind enough to entertain me one evening, and played Dvorák's beautiful Trio for two Violins and Viola, and Beethoven's Quartet in C minor. Mr. Alpress is a magnificent violinist, and I consider this combination one of the finest I have ever heard. By-the-way, the College did me the honour to make me one of its patrons, at the same time presenting me with a neat little gold badge.

I cannot speak too warmly of the cordiality of the Sydney musicians: the organists very kindly entertained me at dinner, and a delightful function it was. The principal Episcopal churches are the Cathedral and St. James's. Mr. Joseph Massey, a fine church player, is organist of the former. He has a large Hill instrument, a splendid example of a church organ, placed in a gallery over one of the transepts. Mr. Mason is organist of St. James's, where the ritual is much higher. His organ, I believe, was originally a Gray and Davison, but it has been enlarged by a local builder. The Sydney Philharmonic Society performed the 'Creation' and 'Samson' during our stay, but I was unable to be present on either occasion. Colonials thoroughly appreciate talent in their countrymen, and if a student shows decided musical gifts, his fellow townsmen immediately get up a complimentary concert to raise funds in order that he may be sent home to complete his studies. We visited the Blind Institution, where we had a warm welcome. There are only fifteen or sixteen pupils at present, and these, unfortunately, are boarded with the deaf and dumb, of which there are a considerable number. Mr. Arthur Massey teaches the blind children music, and is doing good work.

On October 15 we sailed for Invercargill, the southernmost town in New Zealand, calling at Wellington, Christchurch, and Dunedin on the way. The Corporation of Wellington have just built a fine Town Hall, for which a large organ is being erected by Messrs. Norman and Beard. At Dunedin I was much interested in the peculiar chimes of the Town Hall clock. There are five bells, the notes being

The only chime I remember is the three-quarters:

I tried to find out their history, but no one could tell me, or had even seemed to notice they were not the well-known Westminster chimes, which are so common on all public clocks throughout Australasia. We spent a most delightful week at Invercargill, where I gave recitals on a new and charming little three-manual organ by Messrs. Norman and Beard, in St. John's Church. Mr. Charles Gray, the organist, is doing splendid work there. Besides his church choir, which is extremely good, he has an excellent Choral Society and a small orchestra, and, with his two clever lady assistants, does nearly all the teaching in the town. Invercargill is a Scotch settlement, and all its streets are named after the rivers in Scotland. There are two Presbyterian churches; the first of these has a remarkably good little choir, most carefully trained by an enthusiastic amateur, Mr. W. Quinn. Our stay here came all too quickly to an end, and we left by way of Hobart on October 31 for Melbourne, arriving there the following Sunday.

Before sailing for home on November 8 we spent two days with Professor Baldwin Spencer and his family at their charming house in the University grounds. Professor Spencer has recently been made a C.M.G. on account of his splendid researches among the aborigines of Australia. He was most kind in showing and explaining to me his wonderful collection of native curiosities, and altogether our visit to him was one of the chief interests of our trip. I renewed my acquaintance with Professor Franklin Peterson, whose Conservatorium in connection with the University seems to be flourishing. Mr. Guilfoyle, the director, very kindly showed us over the Melbourne Botanical Gardens, which are among the very finest in the world. On the morning of Tuesday, November 8, we embarked on the Ortona once more, and right glad we were to be able to return home in the good ship which had brought us out so safely. The days of the voyage passed very pleasantly for me, through the kindness of one of our fellow passengers, Professor Kirk, of Wellington, who gave me some lessons in chess. After entering the Red Sea, there was a gradual diminuendo in the sunshine and, consequently, the heat, till we landed at Plymouth on December 15, in real English drizzle and fog: but in spite of that, we felt, as all must feel who have any love for it, that 'There's no place like home.'

ALFRED HOLLINS.

THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

From Monday, January 2, to the following Friday inclusive the members foregathered at Manchester, their headquarters being the Midland Hotel. The proceedings began on the evening of the opening day with a reception by the Manchester section. On the following morning the Lord Mayor of Manchester (Alderman T. Thornhill Shann) presided at the inaugural meeting held in the Town Hall. After his Lordship had welcomed the members, Mr. Edward Chadfield, the Secretary, read the annual report, which told of an increase of membership during the year and continued activity in all branches of the Society's work. The Orphanage Report was also of a satisfactory nature. Mr. T. Henderson then read a paper on 'Some Blots on English Music,' the headings of his discourse being 'The Theatre Band,' 'The Brass Band,' 'The Choral and Orchestral Society,' and 'Time.' In the afternoon Sir Frederick Bridge discoursed on 'A Weak Point in our Musical Education.' Sir Frederick said: 'The weak point to which he wished to call attention was the deplorable and general inability to read music at sight.' He instanced a recent trial of voices for admittance to the Royal Choral Society, when 'thirty-two contraltos came up for examination, but only three passed, as the remaining twenty-nine ladies could not read'!

On Wednesday (January 4), under the presidency of Mr. James Dawber, the founder of the Society, Mr. G. W. Bebbington brought forward the thorny question 'On the necessity for further safeguarding the entrance to the musical profession.' In the discussion which followed Sir Frederick Bridge said, with perfect truth: 'Everybody knew that numbers of clever organists were absolute failures as choirmasters, and that many clever composers were great duffers as conductors.'

Mr. S. S. Stratton (of Birmingham) occupied the chair on Thursday (January 5), when Mr. W. A. C. Cruickshank tackled a big subject—'The progress of music during the 19th century.' Professor Prout, in opening the discussion following upon the reading of the paper, made the following important statement: 'If only their young composers would be content to write more naturally, instead of writing stuff some of which was enough to make the dead turn in their graves, it would be much better for art. Let them seek to write what the spirit moved them to write, and let the rest take care of itself.'

To Mr. Cruickshank succeeded Mr. S. Midgley, of Bradford, who, as might be expected, contributed a thoughtful paper on 'Municipalities and Music.' He pleaded for the municipal subsidizing of orchestras, though in the subsequent discussion some of his audience were of opinion 'that municipal concerts killed private enterprise.'

It is impossible, within the limits of space, to give even a résumé of the papers contributed at the Conference, and such summaries are never satisfactory. Moreover, are not the pages of the 'Special Conference number' (illustrated) of The Journal of the Society available for a complete report of all that took place at the Manchester gathering, including the receptions, concerts, annual general meeting, and the inevitable banquet? Special mention must be made, however, of the exhibition of ancient instruments which Dr. Henry Watson had arranged at the Royal Manchester College of Music, and on which he gave an informing lecture. A no less interesting feature of the Conference was the exhibition, at the Manchester Free Libraries, of ancient and modern books of music, MSS., &c., selected from 'The Henry Watson Music Library,' of which a very useful catalogue of the 257 entries had been prepared. The next Conference is to be held at Lowestoft, in January, 1906.

WAGNER'S EARLY OVERTURES.

The early works of a composer who has achieved greatness in his art always possess peculiar interest to the musician. There is no more fascinating study than that which reveals the process of development, and in particular with regard to mental growth. It may not always be kind to a composer who is no longer in the flesh to unearth his early efforts and bring them before the public, but such resurrections at least serve the purpose of instructing and encouraging young aspirants to creative fame.

The three Overtures 'Polonia,' 'Christopher Columbus,' and 'Rule, Britannia' were written by Wagner between the years 1831 and 1836. They form part of a series of eight works in this form, a list of which may be of interest, since very little is known generally about these compositions:

Overture in B flat, performed under Dorn's direction at Leipzig in 1830.

Overture in D minor, produced on December 25, 1831, at Leipzig.

Overture in C, in fugue form, played at Leipzig, April 30, 1833.

Overture to Raupach's 'King Enzo,' written 1832.

'Polonia,' composed 1832 (?)

'Christopher Columbus,' 1835-6.

'Rule, Britannia,' 1836.

'Faust,' 1839.

There is some doubt about the period when Wagner wrote the 'Polonia' Overture. It was certainly inspired by the defeat of the Polish patriots in December, 1831, which caused a large number of soldiers to march the following January to Leipzig, where they were enthusiastically received. Wagner, then a youth of eighteen, was a hot-headed Leipziger, having pronounced Radical opinions, and it was only natural that he should give vent to his feelings in music. But although the Overture was undoubtedly sketched in 1832, Herr Glasenapp, in his 'Life' of Wagner, says that it was not completed until 1836, at Königsberg. This statement would appear to be contradicted by Wagner in his autobiography, in which he says: 'The year I passed at Königsberg was completely lost to my art through the pettiest cares. I wrote one solitary Overture "Rule, Britannia"; but Wagner's 'pettiest cares' included his marriage with Minna Plauer, and he seems to have entirely forgotten the existence of the 'Polonia' Overture. Internal evidence points to 1832 as having been the year of its composition, for it could scarcely have been written after the advance in conception shown in the 'Columbus' Overture dating from 1835-6. 'Polonia' indeed is manifestly the product of a young brain strongly influenced by traditional methods and contemporary art. It is full of expressive tune; and flashes of unexpected effectiveness, but couched in the language of Beethoven and Weber, and above all constantly verging on the vulgar. There is no foreshadowing of the matured Wagner, except in the sonority of the scoring, which is remarkable when the age of the writer is considered. The music is, however, charged with life and intensity, and it certainly possesses the elements of popularity.

The 'Christopher Columbus' Overture was written for a play of that name by Theodore Apel, but it has a poetic basis of its own which Wagner has described as follows:

At the close of the Middle Ages a new impulse led the nations forth to voyages of discovery. The sea became the soil of life; no longer the land-locked sea of the Hellenic world, but the ocean that engirdles the earth. Good-bye to the old world; the yearning of Ulysses for hearth and home and wedded wife had given place to a longing for a new, an unknown country, invisible as yet, but dimly boded.

The emotions underlying this programme Wagner endeavours to express, and the result was a composition poetic in conception, dignified in character, though somewhat laboured, and at the present time to be regarded as being of interest in an endeavour to break new ground, than as a creative triumph. The 'Rule, Britannia' Overture is very disappointing. It shows advance on the 'Columbus' in contrapuntal resource, but the fine tune is weakened by the insertion of sundry turns and additions, and the dignity of the melody is vulgarised by the noisy character of the scoring, in which the 'brass' is exceedingly busy. Great praise is due to Mr. Henry J. Wood for bringing this trio of overtures to a first hearing in England at Queen's Hall on January 2, and their interpretation testified to painstaking rehearsal.

THE MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

A paper of unusual interest was read on January 11, at Broadwood's Rooms, by Mr. W. W. Starmer, on 'Carillons and Bell Music,' which proved to be a further instalment of information respecting bells, upon the same lines as his previous discourse on 'Bells and Bell-tones.'

After dealing with the derivation and definitions of the word Carillon, the lecturer proceeded to analyse minutely what is meant by tone and tune in bells, and showed that the most satisfactory musical tone is entirely dependent upon the perfect accord of its harmonics. Every good bell should contain at least five notes in perfect tune with each other—three octaves, a perfect fifth, and a minor third, thus:

An elaborate comparison was then made between English and Continental bells, showing how the form of the bell has been altered in this country to facilitate its use in change-ringing, with the result that the series of tones in each bell has been very much upset, as the following examples, taken from the peal of York Minster, show:

The variable scale of construction used in bells for change-ringing was compared with the constant one used in making bells for carillon use, and exemplified by a table of the weights of two sets of twelve bells of the same pitch made for change-ringing and for carillon use respectively. The numerous methods of sounding bells were next dealt with, showing that much less tone is produced in carillons than in change-ringing.

A short history of carillons was next given, in which Mr. Starmer remarked that thousands of years ago the Chinese seem to have anticipated the possibilities of the modern carillon. The perfecting of the art of bell-founding and the constructing of carillons took place during the 15th, 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries. One of the earliest carillons was that at Dunkerque in 1437. In its highest form the carillon is played by means of a special clavier arranged on the same principle as the manuals of an organ. The keys are made of oak. They are round, being about $\frac{3}{4}$ in. in diameter. There are two rows of them, the upper representing the black notes of the ordinary keyboard and projecting $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches, the lower corresponding to the white notes and projecting $6\frac{1}{2}$ inches. The keys are far enough apart to allow the player to strike each key without fear of touching those on either side of it. The pedals (like those of the organ) are from one to one-and-a-half octaves in compass, and are connected with the keys so that the lower notes can be played by both keys and pedals. The pedal clavier greatly increases the musical resources of the instrument. The keys are struck with the closed hand, the little finger being protected with a leather covering to prevent injury when playing. Carillon-playing requires a good deal of strength as well as celerity and skill. The connection between the key and the bell clapper is exactly the same in principle as the tracker action used in organs, iron being used in place of the wooden materials used in organ-building. The clappers of the smaller bells are fitted with springs to bring them back to their original position quickly after striking. The bulk of the playing is done on the smaller bells with the occasional use of the larger ones. Chords are mostly played arpeggiando. Some writers have mentioned the necessity of a means of damping the bells so that their tones should not interfere with one another. Apart from the fact that the effectual damping of bells is practically an impossibility, when carillons are played by an expert performer there is no real necessity for such a thing. Two quotations from Dr. Burney's 'Present State of Music in Germany' (Vol. I., p. 62; Vol. II., p. 294) were read, showing the high state of cultivation of carillon-playing in the Netherlands, and describing the great exertions of the player when performing.

Mr. Starmer then played two MS. pieces specially written for the carillon. The first was a very charming Prelude in C major by the famous Van den Gheyn, the second being a bright Introduction and Rondino in G major, by J. A. H. Wagenaar, Sen. (Utrecht). In conclusion he tendered his cordial thanks to the famous carillonneur, M. Denvyn (Malines), for allowing him the use of the MS. of the Van den Gheyn Prelude and also for information respecting many things of which he had had occasion to ask for particulars; to Herr J. A. H. Wagenaar, Junr., for providing him with the MS. of the Introduction and Rondino and for answering inquiries as to works on, and music for, carillons; and, lastly, to Messrs. Taylor, of Loughborough, for the table of the weights of bells, and for placing at his disposal information on various points considered in the paper.

* The first group of notes in each diagram represents the actual notes of the bell; the second group shows the notes as they should be; a 2 or 7 placed after a note indicates that the note is slightly inclined in that direction.

THE BACH CHOIR.

Amongst the most memorable concerts in the past month was that given by the Bach Choir under the direction of Dr. Walford Davies on January 20 at the Royal Horticultural Hall, Vincent Square, Westminster. Before commenting upon the performance, a few words may be welcome concerning the hall in which it took place, seeing that until this occasion the hall has been practically unknown to music-lovers. It is a new building, erected for the exhibitions of the Horticultural Society, but not always being wanted for this object, it is let for other purposes. Its situation is out of the ordinary beat of concert-goers, but with the existence of St. James's Hall trembling in the balance, a concert room capable of seating some 1,500 people is not to be despised. Moreover, although it has a glass roof, the acoustical properties of the building appeared to be excellent. Certainly the Bach Choir has rarely sung more effectively. The programme began with four unaccompanied motets, Palestrina's 'Adoramus Te,' Byrd's 'Bow Thine ear, O Lord,' Morley's 'Nolo mortem peccatoris,' and Purcell's 'Jehova quam multi,' an admirable selection which, designedly or otherwise, showed in an interesting manner the dawn of the dramatic element in this class of music. S. S. Wesley's splendid anthem for double chorus 'O Lord, Thou art my God,' was very finely rendered, Mr. William Forington singing the solo part, and the crescendi and diminuendi being beautifully graduated by the choir. Of three part-songs, that entitled 'Pastime with good company,' ascribed to Henry VIII., was particularly attractive. The other two were 'Ah, dere heart, why do you rise?' in five parts, by Gibbons; and 'Vineta,' in six parts, by Brahms. Another work worthy of note was a motet 'Blessing, glory, wisdom, and thanks,' formerly attributed to J. S. Bach, but probably written by Georg Gottfried Wagner (1698-1760). This comprises four movements:—Introduction and fugue, Andante, Allegro, and Chorale, which are conceived in a dignified vein and solidly built up. Very pleasing variety was given by the pianoforte solos contributed by Mr. Leonard Borwick, whose performance of Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue was beautifully finished. Mr. W. V. Hurlstone accompanied Mr. Forington in songs by Sir Hubert Parry and Schubert.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

New York, January 9.

THE LATE THEODORE THOMAS.

The death of Theodore Thomas, which took place in Chicago five days ago, is chiefly occupying the thoughts of musicians and music-lovers everywhere, for though New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago were the centres of his activities for fifty years, there is scarcely a city in the United States which has not felt the influences of his labours either directly or indirectly. There is a profoundly tragic pathos in the circumstance that death should have overtaken him at a moment when he had just realized the last large ambition of his life in the housing of the orchestra of which he was the soul, although it did not bear his name, and was looking forward to a brief return to New York, the city of his earliest labours, to conduct a pair of concerts for the Philharmonic Society, of which he was conductor for twelve prosperous years. His visit would have been turned into an ovation which would surely have been as heart-warming to him as that which greeted him three weeks ago when he stood before shouting thousands at the dedication of Chicago's new Orchestral Hall—which, henceforth, will be his monument and doubtless bear his name. I have written heretofore of the vicissitudes through which the movement passed before it culminated in success. The dedication took place on December 14. The Hall was in an unfinished condition, and there seems to be little doubt that Mr. Thomas's work in it, while the walls were still damp and raw, was the cause of the illness which developed into pneumonia and led to his death. He conducted the two pairs of concerts on December 16 and 17 and 24 and 25, but had to yield his baton to another for the next pair. He was a man of fine physical strength in spite of the fact that he was in his seventieth year; but the dread disease wasted his forces rapidly, and a few days after its nature had been unmistakably recognized, he was dead. A loud cry of grief has gone up from ocean to ocean and the newspapers are full of tributes to his memory. Naturally the praises that are sounding are full of extravagance, for those who knew his shortcomings are silent as to them and join in the laudation of his achievements. A just measure of his merits and defects will have to wait until there can be written a dispassionate critical history of the musical period in which he was a large and potential factor. Mr. Thomas did great things for music; he set fine patterns; he fought noble fights; and with the help of his friends whom he inspired to financial sacrifices, and the impressionable people, he won noble victories. For the present the fact that there were great kings before Agamemnon is forgotten, and musical history is being written as if it began in 1860—even in New York, where the masterful man was developed by influences that had been working for over a century. All this will right itself in time, and there will remain enough to keep a halo of glory and honour around the name of Theodore Thomas for generations to come. The dead man's memory has been honoured in nearly every orchestral concert that has taken place since his death—the death music from 'Götterdämmerung,' the funeral march from the 'Eroica,' or the lamentable finale from Tschaiikovsky's 'Pathetic' being played to introduce the set programme. At the concert of the New York Philharmonic Society it fell to the lot of Mr. Safonoff, of Moscow, to bestow the tribute.

Mr. Safonoff's first concerts (he has still a second pair to conduct) were devoted to music by his countrymen, the set programme consisting of Glazounoff's Sixth Symphony (in C minor), Tschaiikovsky's Violin Concerto (solo played by Mr. Fritz Kreisler), and the same composer's 'Romeo and Juliet.' Mr. Safonoff introduced an innovation in conducting without a baton, tempted, I think, by the sensation created last March in the climax of the third movement of the 'Pathetic' Symphony. When he had worked up the march till it sounded as fit to regulate the stride of Ilja and all of Russia's storied heroes, he dropped both arms to his sides, filled his broad chest as with the breath of battle, and seemed himself to be marching in the van. The effect was electrical upon players as well as hearers, and the audience all but rose to its feet to cheer. He achieved the same success last week, when, having discarded the little wand, he had both hands free for his inspiring gesticulations. To me the device looked of doubtful value in the Concerto, where there was a difficult accompaniment to play and no vivid and garish splashes of color to be applied, but there is no question that he carried his orchestra through the most thrilling performances of the Glazounoff Symphony and Tschaiikovsky Overture that New York has ever heard. M. Colonne who preceded him also carried off a victor's crown not only here, but in Boston, where he conducted Berlioz's 'Faust' at the public rehearsal, but was prevented by a snow storm from returning thither from New York in time to conduct the concert, whereupon the duty devolved on the regular conductor of the Cecilia Society, Mr. B. J. Lang.

The Musical Art Society at its first concert put Orlando Gibbons in the van, with Palestrina, Caldara, Arcadelt and Calvisius, singing his 'Hosanna to the Son of David' with superb effect. Another novelty in this Society's repertory was the motet 'Lieber Herr, Wecke uns auf' by Johann Christoph Bach, cousin of the father of the great Johann Sebastian. The sister societies of Boston, Brooklyn, and Troy, New York, have also given their first concerts of a capella music. In Bethlehem, Pa., the Bach Choir at its Christmas Festival in December sang the 'Magnificat' in D, the Christmas Oratorio, and three Cantatas—viz., 'How brightly shines the Morning Star!' 'O Jesu Christ, Light of my life,' and 'The Lord is a sun and shield,'—and the motet 'Sing ye to the Lord a new-made song.'

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, January 15, 1905.

As with the works of Liszt and Berlioz, so it is with those of Bruckner; their creator being dead, appreciation of them is ever on the increase. Bruckner's activity as a composer centres in his broadly drawn-out, rich-toned, highly pathetic symphonies, of several of which we hear magnificent performances every year. And indeed the conductor of our concert Society, Herr Ferdinand Löwe, is famed for his sympathetic carrying out of the intentions of his former teacher and friend. He recently performed the first Symphony, and won hearty applause. At every performance of these works he wins for their composer new friends and admirers. The Philharmonic brought to a hearing another Bruckner symphony under the direction of Mottl. For the rest, both Societies have given not only many standard works, but also many novelties. We mention first the fantastically humorous 'Don Quixote' Orchestral Variations of Richard Strauss; though the performance by the Löwe Orchestra created astonishment rather than genuine musical enjoyment. Then the César Franck Symphony in D, which had been most carefully rehearsed by Löwe, did not bring about the desired impression. The Entr'acte music from Schilling's opera 'Der Pfeifertag,' given at the Philharmonic, proved to be an interesting novelty.

Strauss's latest choral work, the 'Taillefer' Ballad, was performed at a concert of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde. Although both chorus and orchestra are employed, the latter has by far the greater share in the interpretation of the work; the words of the text are coloured by it rather than sung by the singers. But taken as a whole the music has fire and go, and made a strong impression. The Society also performed Mendelssohn's Overture in C (Op. 24) for wind instruments, a thoroughly delightful, nay enchanting work, which is heard only too seldom; also Bach's 'Magnificat' according to the original score of the now old, but at the time when he wrote it, young cantor of St. Thomas's, Leipzig.

Among pianists who have recently appeared, Rosenthal has created the greatest sensation: his playing, long famed for its brilliancy has become more subjective. Dohnányi, however, who as a composer is held in ever-growing estimation, has played his recently-published Pianoforte Concerto in E minor, also four Rhapsodies for Pianoforte. Among the finest concerts we reckon one given by Lili Lehmann, who sang some lieder by Fritz Kögel, unknown here, but she was more successful in others by Schubert and Hugo Wolf.

The Grillparzer Society gave a semi-literary matinée, the programme containing the finest settings of poems by Grillparzer, and the greater number were, naturally, by the friend and companion of the poet's young days, viz., Franz Schubert. After him no composer overcame with such ease the difficulties which the strongly reflective lyrics of Grillparzer present at the outset to every musician.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the Halford Society's concert, on January 17, the programme comprised Beethoven's fourth Symphony, and Rimsky-Korsakoff's suite 'Scheherazade.' A novelty was the symphonic poem 'The Passing of Beatrice,' by William Wallace. The performance of the work, conducted by the composer, made a great impression. Mr. Leonard Borwick gave a masterly reading of the solo part in Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto, and Mr. Halford conducted with skill and care.

Mr. Turner began a season of opera at the Grand Theatre on December 26. The principal feature so far has been the revival of Humperdinck's 'Hänsel und Gretel,' on January 4, when the opera was admirably staged under the direction of Mr. Friend, who supervised the production at Daly's Theatre in 1894. The cast included Mr. John Ridding, Madame Constance Bellamy, and the Misses Jessie and Mabel Dennis and Alice Boaden. The Amateur Opera Society gave a public performance of 'Ruddigore' in the theatre of the Midland Institute on January 9, and followed it up by four performances on the successive evenings of the annual conversazione of the Institute. The piece was well staged, and the amateurs surpassed all previous efforts. An excellent professional orchestra, conducted by Mr. E. W. Priestley, added greatly to the success of the undertaking.

It is worth placing on record that a short time back the Halford orchestra had their first outside engagement. Through the enterprise of Mr. A. H. Bassano, conductor of the Old Hill Musical Society, that portion of the 'Black Country' was regaled with a concert of the highest class, the programme consisting of Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony and Serenade for Strings, and the 'Egmont' and 'Tannhäuser' Overtures. The large audience were most appreciative and enthusiastic.

The concerts of the Wolverhampton Festival Choral Society, under Mr. Granville Bantock's direction, have been highly interesting. The first was devoted to Berlioz and Wagner, and novelties to the district were the charming chorus 'The Shepherds' Farewell,' from 'L'Enfance du Christ,' the finale from 'Romeo and Juliet,' and the finale from 'Die Meistersinger.' On December 27, Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' was given, and followed by a selection from Haydn's 'Creation.' The soloists were Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Eva Dickinson, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Dalton Baker, all young artists, and each is deserving of every encouragement.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

There was a large attendance in Shirehampton Parish Hall on January 2, when an orchestral concert was given under the direction of Mr. Max Heymann (Bath). The band comprised musicians from that city, Bristol, and London, with Miss Marie Hall, who played the solo violin in Bach's Concerto in E, No. 2, and in Mendelssohn's Concerto. Other compositions performed were Beethoven's Symphony in A, and 'Egmont' Overture, and the ballet music from Schubert's 'Kosamunde.' Mr. Frederic Austin and twelve members of the Avonmouth Choral Society sang with effect three out of the five 'Songs of the Sea,' of Sir Charles Stanford, produced at the last Leeds Festival. Mr. Austin also gave the piece, 'O captain! my captain!' written by Walt Whitman, and set by Mr. P. Napier Miles, an amateur of the neighbourhood, whose lyric overture, 'From the West Country,' was played a few months ago at the Queen's Hall, London. Mr. Miles conducted his song, which had an orchestral accompaniment.

The second subscription symphony concert was held at the Victoria Rooms on January 16, the performers being the Bath Pumproom orchestra, augmented by Bristol players, Mr. Max Heymann conductor. Mr. Cuthbert Whitmore played the solo instrument in Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto in A minor. Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony was excellently interpreted, and other features in the programme were Mr. Napier Miles's 'From the West Country,' given for the first time in Bristol, and Berlioz's version of Weber's 'Invitation to the Waltz.'

The annual Ladies' Night of the Bristol Madrigal Society is specially noticed on page 97.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the sixth Orchestral Concert on January 9, Edinburgh music-lovers were delighted to renew acquaintance with M. Edouard Colonne. The chief feature in the programme was the A minor Symphony of Saint-Saëns, the rendering of which roused the audience to great enthusiasm. Like M. Steinbach (who conducted the fourth concert on December 19), M. Colonne expressed himself in the most glowing terms as to the quality and training of the orchestra.

Dr. Cowen himself conducted the fifth and seventh concerts on December 28 and January 16, and the extra concert on January 5, and at each both programme and performance were of the highest interest and excellence. The soloists at these concerts were Miss Lydia Nervil and Miss Zélie de Lussan,—both of whom received great applause for their singing—and Messrs. Henri Verbrugghen (leader of the band) and Harold Bauer (pianoforte).

At his third concert on January 12 Mr. Gustav Nielsen had secured as his colleagues Miss Chrissie McDiarmid and Mr. Scott Macpherson (vocalists), Miss Muriel Hanson (violinist), and Mr. Mitchell Tomson (pianist). Perhaps the most interesting item in the programme was Sinding's Variations for two Pianofortes, brilliantly played by the concert-giver and Mr. Mitchell Tomson.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society's concert on December 22 was remarkable more for the quality of the programme than for the performance. Two novelties were given,—viz., Bach's Concerto (No. 1) for three pianofortes and string orchestra, and Mr. W. H. Reed's Suite 'Venitienne,' and the programme also included Beethoven's Symphony (No. 4), Saint-Saëns's symphonic poem 'La rouet d'Omphale,' and the overture to 'The Magic Flute.' On Christmas Day, at St. Aloysius's Church, a first performance in Scotland—and possibly in Great Britain—was given of Perosi's Mass 'Benedicamus Domino.'

Much interest was evinced in the appearance of Herr Fritz Steinbach as conductor of the sixth classical concert on December 20. As an interpreter of Brahms, Herr Steinbach is justly celebrated, and his reading of Symphony No. 4 in E minor on this occasion was an event to be remembered. Another notable feature of the concert was the first performance here of Bach's Brandenburg Concerto (No. 3) for divided string band. Dr. Cowen brought to a first hearing Rameau's 'Les Indes Galantes' (2nd Suite) and César Franck's Symphony in D minor, on December 27, and a Scherzo (Op. 45) by Goldmark on January 3. At the latter concert Miss Antonia Dolores made a very favourable appearance as vocalist. At the tenth concert, on January 10, M. Edouard Colonne occupied the conductor's desk and secured one of the most finished performances we have heard from the Scottish Orchestra this season. The programme, largely selected from works by the conductor's own countrymen, included an initial performance of Saint-Saëns's Symphony in A minor, the 'Scène d'Amour' from Berlioz's 'Romeo and Juliet' Symphony, the Andante from Massenet's Suite 'Les Erinnyes,' and an excellently played selection from Bach's Suite in B minor for strings and flute.

Mr. Harold Bauer gave a very fine performance of the solo part of Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto at the eleventh classical concert on January 17. The orchestral programme was largely made up of unfamiliar works, among which were a Minuet for Horn and Strings by Mozart, a Bourrée by Bach, both excellent examples of the old masters, Goetz's Symphony in F (Op. 9), and Brahms's Variations on a Theme by Haydn. The second of Herr Denhof's delightful chamber concerts took place on January 20, when the concert-giver was associated with Lady Hallé and Señor Pablo Casals. The main features of the programme were Beethoven's Trio in B flat major (Op. 97), Bach's Pianoforte and Violin Sonata in A major, and Mendelssohn's Pianoforte and Violoncello Sonata in D major, all of which received the highest artistic treatment.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the Hallé concert on January 12 Lady Hallé was once more welcomed by audience and orchestra with a warmth of personal regard that palpably touched her. She played the favourite Max Bruch Concerto, and Tartini's Sonata, with the Satanic trill in it, from which a period of more than one hundred and fifty years has evaporated all sulphurous taint. Lady Hallé played with an astonishing combination of vigour and grace, and the tones from her violin were magnificent. The selections for the orchestra were Schumann's 'Rhenish' Symphony; the spirited Overture to Cornelius's 'Barber of Bagdad'; and, for the first time at the concerts, Smetana's Symphonic Poem,

'Aus Böhmens Hain und Flur,' the fourth of that virile set of six, known collectively as 'My Fatherland.' The playing of the orchestra at this point was exceptionally fine, under Dr. Richter's conductorship. At the concert on January 19 Mr. Wilhelm Backhaus played Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto and an early unnumbered work by Richard Strauss entitled 'Burleske,' which afforded Mr. Backhaus an opportunity for the display of a style much more physically and nervously dashing than is usual with him. Mr. Backhaus, we may add, has just entered upon his new duties as professor of the pianoforte at the Royal Manchester College of Music. Goldmark's descriptive Concert-overture 'Penthesilea' and Glinka's Fantasia 'Recollections of a Summer Night in Madrid' were orchestral selections new to the concerts. The former was inspired by von Kleist's drama, published in 1808; and poor Hugo Wolf has left us a symphonic poem on the very same theme. There are many sensuous passages in the Overture strongly reminiscent of 'A Rustic Wedding,' Glinka's Fantasia—more than fifty years old—has little inherent or suggestive value.

At the Gentlemen's Concerts on January 16 Miss Fanny Davies played Mozart's Concerto in G (K. 453). She also played Schumann's Nocturne in D and Chopin's Nocturne in B, and a Strauss-Tausig Valse. Mr. J. Campbell McInnes was the solo vocalist. The orchestra, conducted by Dr. Richter, played Haydn's Symphony, No. 8 of the Salomon set; the first of Grieg's Peer Gynt Suites (Op. 46); and, for the first time, Hugo Wolf's 'Italian Serenade.' The Serenade did not produce any great impression, and it was not perhaps the best selection possible for introducing the lamented composer to Manchester amateurs.

Dr. Richard Strauss had a fine welcome at the Schiller-Anstalt on December 21, where he took part in a chamber concert. His colleagues were Dr. Brodsky, Mr. S. Spielman, and Mr. Carl Fuchs. With these he played his Pianoforte Quartet in C minor (Op. 13); and, with Mr. Carl Fuchs, his still earlier Sonata in F, for violoncello and pianoforte. Several of his songs were admirably rendered by Mr. Lawrence Atkinson. At Mr. Brand Lane's fifth subscription concert on January 21 the solo vocalists were Miss Nannie Tout and Mr. Robert Radford. Mr. Louis Pecskaï was the solo violinist; and, repeating a last year's experiment, Mrs. Kendal brought literature and the drama in their lighter modes into association with the art of music in a series of interesting recitations. The Philharmonic Society, as always, contributed to the artistic success of the concert, especially in the rendering of Madrigals by Weelkes and Morley—'As Vesta was descending,' and 'Fire, fire, my Heart!' At the Messrs. Broadwood's Ladies' Concerts (afternoon), on January 10, Miss Evangeline Florence and Mr. Archy Rosenthal gave a very successful vocal and pianoforte recital. The indisposition of Miss Olga Neruda necessitated an alteration in the programme of the third Brodsky Quartet Concerts on January 17. Happily, Lady Hallé was available to take her sister's place. The playing, by herself and Dr. Brodsky, of the familiar Bach Concerto in D minor for two violins, and of an equally familiar violin duet by Spohr (an encore), helped, along with a fine rendering of the Beethoven Quartet in D (Op. 18, No. 3), and of the less-known Brahms Quartet in B flat (Op. 67), to provide an excellent concert for a delighted audience. Exceptional success attended a vocal and violin recital, given in the Midland Hall on January 20, by Miss Nora Meredith and Mr. Arthur Catterall. Both the young artists, it is true, were surrounded by personal friends and a large sympathetic audience, but the singing of the one and the playing of the other were, within their limits, admirable.

The tenth Shakespearian revival at our Queen's Theatre—'Romeo and Juliet'—has a general interest from the fact that incidental music to it of some pretensions has been written by Mr. Yorke Sheffield, the conductor of the theatre orchestra. Mr. Sheffield has composed an overture and twenty-five incidental numbers, including entr'actes. The overture is quite a serious piece of work, built upon leading motives, that afterwards appear in their appropriate places in the incidental music, such as the Romeo motive, the Juliet motive, the Friar, the Mercutio, and the Feud motives. The two first-named motives are woven together in the finale. The fourth entr'acte is really a fugue in double counterpoint, for strings. Perhaps the most popular musical number is a vocal gavotte at the end of the first act. It is sung by a choir of about twenty-four voices, and it is scored for strings, harp, wood-wind, and a glockenspiel.

Mrs. Arthur Johnstone, widow of your local correspondent here, has intimated her intention to present her late husband's library of music to the Royal Manchester College of Music, as a memorial of his interest in the Institution.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The orchestra of the Northern Musicians' Benevolent Society, gathered together annually to rehearse for a few weeks and to give a concert in aid of the funds of the institution, exhibited on December 19 an improvement upon previous attainments. The programme, too, was of a commendable standard of merit, and included two movements from Beethoven's Second Symphony, Cowen's 'Language of Flowers' Suite, Sullivan's 'Merchant of Venice' music, and a smoothly-written, effectively-scored Triumphal March by Mr. A. Von Ahn Carse, whom the committee—in keeping with their usual policy of bringing before the public of Newcastle the more musically-gifted of its sons and daughters—invited to conduct rehearsals and concert. Miss Grace Angus, a local vocalist, sang with taste songs by Mozart, Handel and Liszt.

Many Northumbrians were surprised to learn of the rich treasures which exist in the music of their native county, and to hear the encomiums expressed by Mr. W. H. Hadow in a lecture on Northumbrian folk-song to the members of the Newcastle Literary and Philosophical Society on January 9. Mr. Hadow is an ideal lecturer, intensely enthusiastic, eloquent, rich in happy similes and striking comparisons, and entirely captivates his audience.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A performance of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' at the Wycliffe Congregational Church on January 9 was another instance of the excellent work which is being done by Sheffield suburban musical organizations. The chorus, numbering about 120, sang intelligently, and with precision and good tone, reflecting credit on Mr. Reeves Charlesworth, who conducted. The soloists were Miss E. Oates, Miss G. Mettham, Mr. J. L. Harrison, and Mr. Robert Charlesworth. Mr. S. Elliott led the orchestra, and Mr. J. C. Holmes was organist.

Another suburban organization, the Norton Lees Choral Society, visited the city on January 14, and sang Elgar's 'King Olaf' in the Wesleyan Chapel, Norfolk Street. In this case the performance was a repetition of a previous success. Mr. Horace Reynolds, the conductor, proved his versatility by also singing the bass solos! The other soloists were Miss M. Bromage and Mr. M. Tomlinson. Mr. A. Farnsworth was at the organ.

At the concert of the Sheffield Chamber Music Society on January 24, Dr. Walford Davies's Pastorals for four voices, string quartet and pianoforte were performed. The programme also included Brahms's Liebeslieder for vocal quartet and pianoforte (two performers) and Mozart's String Quartet in E flat (Op. 12, No. 1). Two days later the St. Barnabas Choral Society performed Sullivan's 'Martyr of Antioch' under the direction of Mr. M. Brüster.

MUSIC IN STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Hanley Caudon Vocal Society gave a concert in the Victoria Hall on January 12. The chorus, although only fifty in number, did full justice to the principal work of the evening, Brahms's 'Song of Destiny.' The singing of the choir was exceedingly fine, and reflected great credit on themselves and their conductor, Mr. John James. Unfortunately it was not possible to arrange for the orchestral accompaniment for which the work is scored, but in its place recourse was had to organ and pianoforte accompaniment, the organ being in the capable hands of Dr. A. L. Peace, of Liverpool, the duties of pianist being efficiently discharged by Mr. E. Hammond. The following items were also charmingly sung: Elgar's part-song, 'On the Alm,' Cyril H. Koolham's part-song, 'A shepherd in a glade' (for which the composer recently won a prize offered by THE MUSICAL TIMES, and now performed here for the first time), 'O lovely May' and 'Who is Sylvia?' by Edward German, and Eaton Fanning's humorous part-song 'The Vagabonds.' In the Elgar composition the choir reached a high degree of excellence in vocal delivery and clear articulation. The ladies of the Society gave Elgar's 'The Snow' with obligato accompaniment for two violins. The male voices followed with German's 'O peaceful night,' which received an enthusiastic encore. Dr. Peace contributed the following organ solos: 'Prelude and Fugue' (Krebs); 'Storm Fantasia' (Lemmens); 'Variations on Handel's 'Harmonious Blacksmith'; and a Fantasia on Scotch Airs composed by himself.

LEEDS.

Up to the time of writing the 'holiday season' has been in full swing, and music seems to be too serious a matter to be discussed at holiday times, save in the very rudimentary form in which it is associated with Pantomime. However, I have one event of more than local interest to record in the production of a new work at the concert of the Leeds Choral Union on January 18. This was a Ballad for chorus and orchestra by Mr. F. K. Hattersley, one of the most prominent of Leeds musicians, whose interesting Symphony, given by the Leeds Municipal Orchestra, I described in April last. Mr. Hattersley has chosen for his text Robert Browning's well-known ballad—perhaps the most popular of all his poems—'How they brought the good news from Ghent to Aix,' but has given his work the less cumbersome title 'Good news from Ghent.' He has caught very happily the swing and breezy vigour of the ballad, and as he has the technique of his art at his fingers' ends, expresses his ideas with ease and force. The result is a setting in close harmony with the text, and a thoroughly effective piece of music, well constructed, especially in the variety which, without doing violence to the mood of the poem, the composer has managed to secure by the one or two quieter episodes that relieve the strenuous energy of the headlong ride. Another novelty was a set of three Ballads for chorus and orchestra by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor (Op. 54). Once again he has turned to Longfellow, with a success not quite uniform, but marked in at least one of the three pieces, 'The Slave's Dream,' which is a fine, picturesque conception, with a touch of the pathetic that is all the more impressive because it is sincere and not maudlin. The second—'She dwells by great Kenhawa's side,' which was sung by the quartet of soloists, Miss Taggart, Miss L. Dews, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. Herbert Brown—does not quite escape a certain prettiness that is suggested by the rather sentimental poem, but contains some passages of genuine beauty, especially in the episodes for orchestra, which are treated with much charm. The third, 'Loud he sang the Psalm of David,' has individuality, and in it the quartet and chorus are both heard. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor was unable to be present to conduct his work, but it went well under Mr. Alfred Benton's direction, while the vigour of 'Good news from Ghent' was happily realised under the conductorship of the composer.

The Leeds Municipal Concerts were resumed on January 7, when Beethoven's Second Symphony was exceedingly well played by the orchestra, who under Mr. Fricker's direction are attaining such efficiency as makes their performances of the classics highly enjoyable. The interest of the programme was concentrated upon two compositions both new to Leeds by Mr. J. Weston Nicholl. The first was a Concert Overture for organ and orchestra, a combination the choice of which is explained by the fact that a prize for such a work was offered in connection with a Dover Festival, when the present composition was placed first. Under modern conditions such a combination seems almost impossible, and Mr. Nicholl, who played the organ part, has not been able quite to reconcile the antagonistic elements, though it is fair to say that the effect might be better, given a more sympathetic instrument than the big and blatant organ in the Leeds Town Hall. An 'Eclogue' for orchestra alone, which was inspired by the scenery of the Bavarian Highlands, had a better chance of success, and was certainly more effective, showing genuine musical feeling as well as the capacity to write well for an orchestra. Mr. Nicholl also played a Rheinberger Organ Concerto in F, which excited respect if not any warmer feeling. Another feature of interest was Mr. Edward German's Cardiff work, the 'Welsh Rhapsody,' which loses nothing of its charm on a second hearing, and produced a marked effect.

On January 11 one of the Leeds Bohemian Concerts, which do for chamber music what the Municipal Orchestra does for orchestral music, took place. The programme consisted of Cherubini's thoughtful, if hardly inspired, Quartet in D minor, in striking contrast to which was Glazounow's Quartet in the same key (Op. 70), which has warmth of feeling, and is, besides, effectively written for a quartet of strings. Kiel's waltzes (Op. 78) were less attractive than their description would suggest, and give one the impression that the composer, though electing to write 'waltzes,' found waltz-rhythm rather beneath his dignity, and did his best to minimise its characteristic lilt. Here, certainly, was an instance when Professor Prout's advice to 'write naturally' would not have been ill-applied. On January 17, at one of Messrs. Haddock's 'Musical Evenings,' we had, in addition to a lady who is the proud possessor of 'the world's top note,' the more distinctively musical interest associated with the playing of Miss Pauline Sant-Angelo, a refined and artistic pianist, and M. Zacharewitsch, the clever Russian violinist.

OTHER TOWNS.

The 'other towns' resolve themselves into one, and it demands no very detailed treatment. At Huddersfield the programme of the subscription concert on January 10 was supplied by Mr. Edgar Haddock's Leeds Orchestra, which played the 'Italian' Symphony very creditably for an organization largely amateur in its composition. Miss Sant-Angelo played the solo part in Liszt's Hungarian Fantasia for Pianoforte and Orchestra most brilliantly, with just the requisite bravura, yet without the vulgar exaggeration which virtuosi often associate with music of this description.

The Broadwood Chamber Concerts were resumed at Eolian Hall on January 12, when the programme was chiefly devoted to the old masters, Bach being represented by his cantata 'Ich habe genug,' the solo part of which was sung by Mr. J. Campbell McInnes, and the composer's Concerto for Two Claviers and Strings, the latter being played by the Misses Ada Wright and Ada Thomas, supported by Mr. Charles Williams's string orchestra. This band also played Corelli's Concerto in G (No. 8) for Strings, and Mozart's delightful 'Eine Kleine Nachtmusik.' A feature of the evening was the rendering—by Sir Walter Parratt—on the organ of Schumann's Canon in B minor, from the 'Six Sketches for Pianoforte and Pedalium' (Op. 56), and the composer's Fugue on the name of Bach (Op. 60, No. 6), both of these being played in a most refined manner.

Mr. Harold Bauer played so finely at his pianoforte recitals at Eolian Hall on January 10 and 21 that a few words of congratulation are due to this gifted artist. Perfect command of the keyboard combined with keen intuitive perception of the requirements of the composer, and an unaffected but masterly style, resulted in a series of interpretations difficult to surpass for significance, poetry, virility, and brilliancy.

Miss Taphouse, in association with the Chaplin Trio (Misses Nellie, Kate, and Mabel Chaplin), gave the first of a series of three concerts of 'Ancient Music and Dances' in the Royal Albert Hall Theatre on January 5, the programme comprising mainly the same features as that given with so much success at Oxford in November and noticed in our last issue. The concert-givers had also the assistance of Miss Leila Bull, who played the solo part in Handel's Oboe Concerto, No. 3, and Misses Dorothea Walenn and E. L. Muckle, who took part with the Sisters Chaplin in the Quartet accompaniment. Miss Dora Sims sang a madrigal by Caccini, ably accompanied by Miss Taphouse on the harpsichord.

The annual competition between ladies' choirs will take place at the Kensington Town Hall, on Thursday, April 6, in the afternoon. This year a competition between ladies' orchestras (strings only) has been added, and will take place on the evening of the same day. Full particulars can be obtained from the Hon. Secs., Miss C. E. Denison, 2, Strathmore Gardens, W., and Miss Rawson, 34, Pembroke Road, W.

The volume constituting the Proceedings of the Musical Association during the session 1903-4 has made its tardy appearance. The following is a list of the papers read, with the names of the readers:

The principles of vowel pronunciation	Dr. W. A. Aikin.
Hector Berlioz	T. S. Wotton.
The hydraulic organ of the ancients	J. W. Warman.
National opera in Russia (4th paper)	Mrs. Newmarch.
Alessandro Scarlatti	E. J. Dent.
Primitive African instruments	Algernon Rose.
The mutilation of a masterpiece	Dr. W. H. Cummings.
Permanent musical criteria	D. F. Tovey.

A complete index to all the papers read before the Musical Association from 1874 to 1904 inclusive is a useful reference adjunct to this volume of the Proceedings.

At the seventy-fifth general meeting of the Departments held in December in Utrecht, the Chief Committee appointed Sir Edward Elgar a Corresponding Member of the 'Maatschappij tot Bevordering der Toonkunst.'

The conclusion of the article 'Mendelssohn and his English publisher' is unavoidably postponed till next month owing to considerations of space.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

BLACKBURN.—The St. Cecilia and Vocal Union gave their first concert this season in the Exchange Hall on January 9. Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' which occupied the first portion of the programme, was performed with much refinement of tone and expression by the band and chorus of over 200 performers. The principal vocalists were Miss Kate Cherry, Madame Dewes, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Fowler Burton. The miscellaneous second part included the part-song 'Diaphenia' (Sir Charles Stanford) and Sullivan's incidental music to Shakespeare's 'Tempest.' Dr. E. C. Bairstow conducted with his usual ability.

CHRISTCHURCH (NEW ZEALAND).—The fourth Subscription Concert of the Musical Union took place at Canterbury Hall on October 27 under the sole direction of Mr. F. M. Wallace. The first part of the programme was devoted entirely to Schubert, and included the Overture and Entr'acte (No. 2) to 'Rosamunde,' and the 'Unfinished' Symphony. Other features of interest were Gounod's 'Danse des Bacchantes,' Godard's 'Chant sans paroles' (La Veillée), and Halvorsen's 'March of the Boyards.'

CRAYEN ARMS (SALOP).—The Craven Arms and District Choral Society gave a performance of Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' in the Assembly Rooms on January 4. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Alison-Johnson, Mr. H. Byolin, and Mr. W. Bradford. The orchestra was under the leadership of Mr. H. H. Salt, and the Rev. W. M. D. La Touche conducted.

DUFFIELD.—Mr. John Bland, who has recently retired from the office of organist and choirmaster of the Parish Church, has been presented by the members of the congregation with a handsome gold watch and chain as a token of their appreciation of his faithful services during a period of forty years. The members of the choir also presented him with three volumes of Bonney's 'Cathedrals, Abbeys, and Churches of England and Wales,' and a silver cigarette case.

EMSWORTH.—The Emsworth Musical Society gave their tenth concert (eighth session) in the Town Hall on January 19 before a crowded audience. The first part of the programme consisted of Gounod's 'Gallia' and Spohr's 'God, Thou art great,' which were most excellently performed, under the conductorship of Mr. Louis H. Torr. The second part included Wuerst's 'Russian Suite,' played by the orchestra, and part-songs sung by the choir, concluding with Fanning's 'Song of the Vikings.' The soloists were Madame Aimée Watheu (Birmingham), Miss Margaret Bellamy (Southampton), and Mr. F. Howard Fenwick (London). The chorus and orchestra consisted of about eighty members.

PENZANCE.—The Choral Society gave a good performance of 'Judas Maccabæus' at St. John's Hall on January 13. The choir and orchestra consisted of about 100 performers, the latter being augmented by some members of the Penzance military band. The solo vocalists were Miss Violet Nunn, Mrs. Walter H. Eva, Mr. J. C. Truscott, and Mr. J. Trebilcock. Owing to illness Mr. John H. Nunn's customary place as conductor was filled by Mr. Richard White.

SOUTHPORT.—The Choral Society under Mr. J. C. Clarke performed Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha' at their first subscription concert. Berlioz's 'Faust' is in rehearsal. The men's voice Vocal Union gained first-prize at the Liverpool Eisteddfod on December 26 and the Warrington Eisteddfod on January 2.

VENTNOR.—The Musical Society gave a concert in the Town Hall on January 18, when the programme consisted of Beethoven's 'Mount of Olives' and Barnby's Cantata 'Rebekah.' Both choir and orchestra acquitted themselves well and reflected much credit on the training received from Mr. Evan Jones, who conducted with care and ability. The solo vocalists were Miss Edith Patching, Mr. Emile d'Oisly (who at short notice ably replaced an absent vocalist), and Mr. David Brazell. Samuel Wesley's 'Sing aloud with gladness' (Exultate Deo) was also given by the choir between the two works above named.

WALSALL.—The Spencer Club gave a selection from Gounod's 'Faust' on January 20. The choir sang well under the direction of Mr. F. C. Mullings, and the solo vocalists were Messrs. E. St. Clair Barfield, H. Fenton, F. C. Mullings, E. Spargo, and F. Lester. Mr. F. L. Cookson and Mr. Nichols presided at the pianoforte and organ respectively.

Answers to Correspondents.

M. M. H.—The following description of the 'Danse Macabre' composed by M. Saint-Saëns is from the erudite pen of Mr. Edgar F. Jacques:

'This symphonic poem is a very clever example of the grotesque in music, and was first played in March, 1875, at the Châtelet Theatre, Paris. Its success was immense, and it was for many years by far the most popular of its composer's works. It is founded on a poem by Henry Cazalis, of which the following is a prose translation:

"Zig, zig, zig.—Death, keeping time, strikes a tomb with his heel, and at midnight plays a dance—zig, zig, zig—on his fiddle. The winter wind whistles, and the night is dark. Sighs are heard in the lindens, while skeletons gleam through the shadows, running and leaping in their shrouds. Zig, zig, zig.—Each frisks about. We hear the rattle of the dancers' bones. But, presto! All at once the circle is empty. They hurry, they fly—the cock has crowed!"

'The music at first consisted of a melody intended to be sung to the words of the poem, but it was found so difficult that the composer utilized it as the foundation for the piece now under notice. The orchestration of the work is full of interesting and picturesque details. The solo violin has its first string tuned to E flat, instead of E, so that the upper fifths are a semitone flat. The grim humour of the effect produced by this device, when "The Master of the Revels" tunes up, is irresistible. A part is also written for the xylophone, which gives a perhaps rather too realistic imitation of the "rattling bones" referred to in the poem. The single movement of which the "Danse Macabre" consists takes the form of a waltz. There are two principal themes, and an accessory one based on the chant of the Dies Iræ, which it parodies.'

J. G. W.—In regard to your inquiry concerning the origin of the tune associated with the words 'I think when I read that sweet story of old,' the authoress of the words, Mrs. Luke, visited, in 1841, the Normal Infant School in Gray's Inn Road. She records her visit thus: 'Among the marching pieces at Gray's Inn Road was a Greek air, the pathos of which took my fancy, and I searched Watts, and Jane Taylor, and several Sunday-school books for words to suit the measure; but in vain. Having been recalled home, I went one day on some missionary business to the little town of Wellington, five miles from Taunton, in a stage-coach. It was a beautiful spring morning, it was an hour's ride, and there was no other inside passenger. On the back of an old envelope I wrote in pencil the first two verses of the hymn now so well known, in order to teach the tune to the village school.' Mr. William Cowan, joint-author (with Mr. James Love) of 'The Music of the Church Hymnary,' says: 'The hymn so written and the tune referred to have remained associated, but nothing further seems to be known of the origin of the latter. They were printed in the Sunday School Teacher's Magazine, at the end of the volume for 1841.' Nothing more is known of the tune.

G. S.—A biography (in English) of Rubinstein, by Alexander McArthur, was published in 1889 by Messrs. Adam & Charles Black. See Rubinstein's 'A conversation on Music' (Augener & Co.); also his 'Autobiography,' translated by Aline Delane (Sampson Low, 1890). There are several monographs on Schumann, by Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland, in the 'Great Musicians' Series' (Sampson Low); by August Reissmann (Bell), by J. W. von Wasielewski (Reeves), by Dr. Ada Patterson, 'The Master Musicians Series' (Dent), and the article by Dr. Spitta in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians.' See also 'The Life of Robert Schumann told in his Letters' (Bentley), and 'Schumann's Early Letters' (Bell). For a biography of Liszt in English see the 'Life' by L. Ramann (Allen & Co., 1882); also 'The Letters of Franz Liszt' (translated by Constance Bache), and 'The Correspondence of Wagner and Liszt' (translated by F. Hueffer), both books published by Messrs. H. Grevel & Co.

J. C. S.—(1) Léon Boëllmann, composer of the Suite Gothique for the Organ, was born at Ensisheim, Alsatia, September 25, 1862, and died at Paris, October 11, 1897. He studied at the Ecole Niedermeyer, in Paris, where he was a pupil of M. Gigout, in whose school Boëllmann subsequently taught. Having early obtained a reputation as an organist and composer of talent, he was appointed to the important organistship of St. Vincent de Paul in the French capital, where his admirable performances attracted much attention. M. Boëllmann published no fewer than sixty-eight works, some for orchestra, which were produced by Lamoureux. His early death, at the age of thirty-five, cut short a career of great promise. (2) We are glad to say that M. Alexandre Guilmant is still living. (3) For Arpeggio Manuals, giving studies in close and extended form, see those by Wouters (6s. net) and Loeschorn (3s. net).

R. A. H.—(1) The following come within the range of standard biographies: Beethoven, by Grove, in the 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians'; Bach, by Spitta (3 vols.); Mozart, by Otto Jahn (3 vols.); Handel, by Rockstro—see also the article in the 'Dictionary of National Biography'; Mendelssohn, by Grove, in the 'Dictionary' above mentioned; and Berlioz, by Adolf Jullien (in French and illustrated). (2) We do not know of a good history of Church music and its development: it is a big subject.

W. S.—(1) You ask us 'which is the more correct pronunciation, that of the North, or that of the South of England?' We take refuge under the usual riddle-shelter by giving it up. (2) To give a complete list of the compositions of F. Edward Bache would occupy more space than we can afford: the British Museum catalogue contains about fifty entries under his name.

VIOLA.—We believe, though we cannot say for certain, that Tschaiakovsky's Symphony in E minor (No. 5) was first performed in England at the Hallé Concert, Free Trade Hall, Manchester, February 2, 1893, conducted by the late Sir Charles Hallé. The first performance in London took place at Queen's Hall, June 29, 1895, conducted by Herr Arthur Nikisch.

A. H. W.—We do not know of any biography in English of Edward Grieg.

A SEEKER.—You will find that composers occasionally make use of the half bar for rhythmic or phrasing purposes; therefore the half bar in Dr. Dykes's tune No. 308 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' (old edition) is perfectly justifiable. With all due respect to your suggested amendment, we prefer the original form of the tune.

110° IN THE SHADE.—You are evidently not satisfied with the degrees in which you live, and move, and have your being. Why not pay a visit to the Mother Country and take a musical degree? Oxford and Durham are exceedingly pleasant places, and well worth a visit even for an examination.

J. W. R.—The following are the titles of madrigals by modern composers: 'Sweet content' (W. G. Alcock), 'Lacking my love' (John E. West), 'Roses, oh how fair ye be' (H. Keeton), 'Cherry ripe' (S. P. Waddington), 'Flora's Queen' (J. Stainer), 'When love and beauty' (Sullivan), and 'When at Corinna's eyes I gaze' (C. H. Lloyd).

J. H. W.—In regard to Bach's eighth short and easy fugues for the organ, the three minims in the penultimate bar of the Fugue in E minor (No. 3) are in the nature of a ritard, while bars 3 and 5 in the Prelude of No. 7 cause no rhythmic difficulty, the notes played alternately by the left and right hands follow one another quite comfortably.

A READER.—The pianoforte you have purchased is probably of a somewhat high pitch, therefore the slight reduction you propose, in order that the instrument may be in tune with your organ, will be an advantage. The tuner may suggest a gradual lowering of the pitch.

F. E. F.—You are quite right in your method ('taking all scales downwards') of training boys' voices. Have you tried Sir George Martin's primer 'The art of training choir boys,' and its 'exercises' sequel?

P. E. J.—So far as we can discover, no modern edition of Felton's Suites seems to have been published. The original title of the work (c. 1760) is 'Eight Suits of easy lessons for the Harpsichord.'

ASPIRING STUDENT.—We shall always be glad to answer your questions, so far as we are able; but we cannot express an opinion on the 'colleges' you name.

ORGANIST.—If you have a penchant for the note F sharp in intoning the Lord's Prayer and the Creed, why not use one of the settings in G and transpose the accompaniment?

WIND.—The flute.

ONE SHILLING EACH.

The wonderful individuality of these Church Cantatas. . . . An undreamt-of wealth of new phenomena meets our gaze on all sides; grand tone-pictures in new, strange, and diversified forms, single ideas of stalwart growth, and of free and noble birth; poetic inspirations of such unspeakable depth, that we are impressed with an unearthly awe.—SPITTA'S Life of Bach.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)

SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY ANTON DVOŘÁK.
(Op. 58.)

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY
FRED. I. W. CROWE.
(Organist of Chichester Cathedral).

THE ACCOMPANIMENTS ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN BY
H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

NOTE.

This English version of Dvořák's "Stabat Mater" brings the beauties of the work within the reach of those who, for various reasons, prefer not to use the original Latin. The adaptation avoids the use of any passages of a controversial nature, thus making it available for use in any English place of worship; and, whilst preserving as far as possible the original rhythm, no pains have been spared to make this English version both vocal and practical.

Chichester, 1904.

F. J. W. C.

The accompaniment, while not professing to be purely an organ arrangement (which would necessitate the use of three staves) will, it is hoped, be found useful at the organ and at the same time easily playable on the piano at rehearsals.

Very few suggestions as to stops have been made, but the plain indication of the pedal part throughout the work and of the instrumentation (marked in brackets) will be a useful guide to the organist in his interpretation of this complex score.

H. E. B.

If there is one choral work of the past twenty years that can claim to have been universally and thoroughly accepted as a masterpiece by all who have any right to express an opinion, it is this most beautiful composition. Its position among the masterpieces of music is too assured to need any defence, and it may suffice to recall the fact that since it made the composer's reputation in this country, it has been heard at the Cathedral Festivals of Worcester, Hereford, Gloucester, Chester and Lincoln, at the Birmingham, Norwich, Leeds, Sheffield, and Hovingham Festivals, and, of course, in countless churches and concert-rooms, one memorable occasion being in 1891, when the composer conducted it at Cambridge, on the day when he received an honorary degree from the University. . . . The version, which is by the organist of Chichester Cathedral, Dr. Crowe, is at least a translation of the original, and not an irrelevant and absurd concoction like the unsectarian libretto, entitled "Tribulation," which one William Ball provided for Rossini's "Stabat Mater."—Yorkshire Post.

STOOD THE MOURNFUL MOTHER WEeping

(STABAT MATER DOLOROSA)

ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY

REV. J. MONSELL.

MUSIC BY

F. ROLLASON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

"A second performance of Rollason's beautiful setting of the 'Stabat Mater' was given in St. Michael's Church on Wednesday evening. . . . A second hearing confirms first impressions that it is a work of genius—as Canon Atkinson said at the close—a deeply reverent, sympathetic, and expressive setting of very beautiful words."—Coventry Herald.

"A feature of the service at St. Andrew's Church last evening, and which attracted a large congregation, was the rendering by the choir of F. Rollason's 'Stabat Mater Dolorosa.' In the solemnity of such surroundings and to an audience already impressed by the sacredness of the day, the beautiful music of this work, so touchingly descriptive of events connected with the Crucifixion, appealed with much force."—Newcastle Daily Journal.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S PASSION SERVICE

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul has to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

SET TO MUSIC BY

G. F. HANDEL.

EDITED BY

EBENEZER PROUT.

THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY THE REV. J. TROUTBECK, D.D.

ABRIDGED FOR CHURCH USE BY THE REV. JAMES BADEN POWELL.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

THE present publication—an abridgment of the complete edition to about one fourth of the original work, but including most of its gems—is an attempt to make it available for Church purposes. The arrangement is planned with a view to bring out (i) the Institution of the Holy Communion, and (ii) the most important points in the Trial before Pontius Pilate, with the reflective (solo) meditations upon it, closing with the “Calvary” Chorus (“Haste, ye souls”), and the last Choral. This gives a more complete and consecutive selection than any other portions of this long oratorio.

For the sake of the Congregation, by way of giving them a response to what has been sung by the Choir, two or three Hymns may with advantage be introduced.

THE STORY OF THE PASSION

WITH REFERENCES FOR HOME STUDY

BY THE

REV. JOHN H. MATTHEWS, M.A.

Music and Words, 3d. Words only, 3s. per 100.

THE BISHOP OF LONDON “is much pleased with ‘The Story of the Passion.’”

THE BISHOP OF LICHFIELD: “Both the words and the music give good expression to the thoughts which should be uppermost in the mind of Christ’s disciples when Passiontide comes round.”

THE BISHOP OF CARLISLE: “It seems . . . very suitable for use in Passion Week, and I trust that it may have a large circulation.”

THE BISHOP OF MANCHESTER: “It has the great merit of being reverent in phrase, and sound in doctrine.”

THE BISHOP OF OXFORD: “The references at the end seem to me a valuable addition, such as I have not seen before.”

CHURCH BELLS: “A smoothly-written composition, and devotional in effect. ‘The Story of the Passion’ will be found useful at Good Friday Services, and the ‘References for Home Study’ will prove a help in private devotion.”

THE CHURCH FAMILY NEWSPAPER: “This Hymn is beautifully set to music, and describes graphically the Story of the Passion. The opening verses are set to a simple but most effective air, which changes for one equally beautiful, but with a deeper note of sadness as the Betrayal is described. We wish this Hymn all the success it certainly merits, and feel confident it will be warmly commended by all who try it.”

THE RECORD: “The words are of a deeply devotional character, and are set to music at once solemnising and impressive. We doubt not that ‘The Story of the Passion’ will become, as soon as it is known, deservedly popular.”

CHURCH TIMES: “A poem . . . of the ‘Story of the Cross’ type, but superior in quality both as to versification and musical composition.”

STANDARD (London), August 1, 1904.

Mr. Maunder has long since proved his ability to write melodiously and with great artistic feeling, from the standpoint of congregational music. His Cantata is a happy combination of these talents in these respects, and the work may be warmly recommended to the clergy and choir-masters.

DAILY TELEGRAPH (London), April 2, 1904.

The Cantata is of devotional character. Not a few of the composer's pages are effective, and show a skilful hand.

CHURCH TIMES, March 26, 1904.

The work is decidedly attractive, and should be a welcome addition to the growing stores of Passion Music. The writing is melodious, and there is considerable vigour in the chorus work.

MUSICAL OPINION, June 1, 1904.

The work is remarkably clear and effective. A feature of the Cantata is the clear writing, throughout plain and straightforward yet invariably impressive and beautiful. The solo portions reveal many points of the most beauty and most musical interest, and are quite in keeping with the general high tone and character of the Cantata. One does not need to be a prophet to foretell the ultimate popularity of "Olivet to Calvary" in Church singing circles.

MUSICAL NEWS, April 2, 1904.

I cannot but find Mr. Maunder's work to be marked by those qualities of appropriate expression, melodiousness, and absence of great difficulty which have made his compositions in the past so acceptable, and we are sure that this Cantata will prove very welcome. We cordially recommend it to the notice of choir-masters.

MUSICAL TIMES, March 1, 1904.

The composer has approached the subject with a full sense of responsibility, and in a devotional spirit. The music is charged with that melodious attribute with which Mr. Maunder's name is favourably associated, and is free from interpretative difficulty. The Cantata is one that may be welcomed, not only for its appropriateness to the Lenten Season, but upon its own merits.

BIRMINGHAM POST, April 1, 1904.

The musical treatment is reverent, and the Cantata should be important.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH, March 28, 1904.

The music is impressive throughout, and the work forms a notable addition to its class.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY MAIL, March 9, 1904.

A feature of the work is the reverent and scholarly composition, evidenced in the various sections betraying facile and scholarly workmanship. It is well conceived and effective, and the Cantata throughout is written in a popular vein.

THE LADY, April 21, 1904.

The music and the treatment will find the Cantata excellent for uniting the congregation in a common interest. . . . "Olivet to Calvary" is an excellent work for a special service of song.

THE

PRINCE OF PEACE

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE

AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Is well ahead of all Mr. Gaul's previous efforts. . . . Special mention may be made of the treatment of the parable of the Prodigal Son, which occupies a conspicuous place."—Daily Star.

"The Victoria Hall, Hanley, was well filled by an audience who gave enthusiastic evidence of their approval of Mr. Gaul's music. The chorus and band numbered 350 performers. . . . A striking feature in the form of a delightfully instrumented Eastern dance in itself is sufficient to enhance Mr. Gaul's reputation."—STAFFORDSHIRE CORRESPONDENT, The Musical Times.

"Judged by the appreciative reception accorded it by the crowded audience at Griffithstown, it bids fair to eclipse the popularity of the same composer's 'Holy City'. . . . 'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment. . . . Already we understand numerous requests have been made for an early repetition."—Pontypool Free Press.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneity, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm. This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it prove less popular than the composer's 'The Holy City,' we shall be surprised."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . It indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

PARISH CHOIR MANUAL

CONTAINING

THE CANTICLES AT MORNING AND EVENING PRAYER

SET TO APPROPRIATE CHANTS

FERIAL AND FESTAL RESPONSES, LITANY, RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS, FINAL AMENS, VESPER HYMNS AND VESTRY PRAYERS

TOGETHER WITH

ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS TO THE LORD'S PRAYER, APOSTLES' AND NICENE CREEDS.

The Canticles, with the Cathedral Psalter Pointing, have been set to appropriate Chants by Sir John Stainer, Sir George C. Martin, Sir Joseph Barnby, Sir George Elvey, and other well-known church composers.

The Responses to the Commandments have been selected from the Services of the above composers as well as those of Myles B. Foster, Dr. Garrett, Ch. Gounod, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Dr. C. H. Lloyd, Merbecke, H. Smart, John E. West, S. S. Wesley, and others.

Sir John Stainer's Sevenfold Amen is also included, as well as Vesper Hymns by Beethoven, Sullivan, and others; concluding with two Vestry Prayers by S. S. Wesley and the Rev. Canon Hervey.

PREFACE.

Organists, choirmasters, and librarians of choirs often have occasion to wish for a choral service-book of a comprehensive nature. This desideratum the "Parish Choir Manual" seeks to meet by supplying within one cover the Canticles for Morning and Evening Prayer, Responses (Ferial, Festal, and to the Commandments), Final Amens, Vesper Hymns and Vestry Prayers, in addition to organ accompaniments to the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds.

The constant usefulness and the practicability of such a compilation are obvious, and a glance at the names of the composers will assure confidence in a publication that should commend itself for use "in quires and places where they sing."

OLD ENGLISH ORGAN MUSIC

EDITED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has for some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day.

Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance.

The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs.

"Organists may be recommended a Sonata in D minor by Alfred H. Allen. This is an extremely well-written work by one who evidently is an expert organist. In the Prelude the composer employs the rarely-used seven-four, alternating with three-four tempo. His counterpoint flows naturally and without effort. There is an excellent fugal section in this movement. The Intermezzo is melodious and simple in construction, an Allegretto Scherzando in the middle affording effective contrast. The Finale worthily concludes the sonata."—Morning Post.

"A Sonata in D minor, by Alfred H. Allen, contains something more than sound workmanship, and the light Scherzo offers excellent contrast to the stately opening movement and the elaborate Finale."—Athenæum.

SONATA IN E MINOR

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

COMPOSED BY

JOHN B. McEWEN.

"A work which will undoubtedly enhance the composer's reputation, since it is interesting to play and to listen to, the themes are individual and striking (they have a curious interconnection, at least rhythmically, in three of the four movements), and the whole should be very effective. It is a pleasure to see a new sonata that is not merely a laboured effort to adopt an unfamiliar style, but a work cast in that form because it has been spontaneously imagined in it."—The Times.

ADDITIONAL HYMNS WITH TUNES

FOR USE WITH

HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN OR ANY OTHER CHURCH HYMNAL.

272 pages, Imperial 16mo. Cloth Boards, price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

Hymns only, Imperial 32mo, Cloth Boards, One Shilling.

Single specimen copies of the above editions sent post-free to the Clergy and Organists, on application to the Publishers direct, at the following prices: Hymns with Tunes, 2s. ; Hymns only, 8d.

Hymns only, medium 32mo, diamond type, cloth, 4d. ; paper, 3d.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern (Old Edition), so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

CHARLES KNOWLES

(BARITONE).

Of the London, Leeds, Sheffield, Chester and Scarborough Festivals.

LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1904—"THE GOLDEN LEGEND."

Full Mail Gazette.

Mr. Charles Knowles, in the part of Lucifer, sang very dramatically, very sincerely, and with excellent vocal technique. I praise him all the more sincerely because it is only in recent days that his name has been gradually coming towards the front.

Mr. Charles Knowles is another singer who is with great celebrity coming to the front. Perhaps at present his enthusiasm for music rather overbalances the fine qualities of his voice, but he is so gradually making the two levels meet together that it will not be long before he will be classed as a thoroughly sound singer and possibly something more.

BELFAST PHILHARMONIC—"MESSIAH."

Belfast News Letter, Dec. 17, 1904.

Mr. Charles Knowles was superb in the bass solos. It is not many years since the Leeds vocalist made his first appearance on the concert platform, but he has made great progress, and he may be said to be in quite the front rank of singers at the present time. His voice seems to have deepened in timbre and strengthened in tone since we heard him last, and from the very outset he made a splendid impression. The stern and menacing "Thus saith the Lord of Hosts," and the air "But who may abide" were interpreted with decision and forcefulness, and he was also very effective in "For, behold, darkness shall cover" and "The people that walked in darkness." Perhaps his greatest achievement, however, was his singing of "Why do the nations," in which he made the pulses throb with the great fire and vividness of his rendering. Seldom has it been our lot to hear the difficult solo so efficiently rendered.

ROCHDALE—"CARACTACUS." Rochdale Times, Nov. 16.

The success of the evening was, however, undoubtedly Mr. Charles Knowles. He possesses a splendid baritone voice, and in his work on the higher register was really splendid, there being not the slightest straining apparent even in the heaviest passages. On the lower notes he was most effective, and altogether his performance must be accounted a magnificent one. A hearty round of applause greeted his rendering of "Leap to the light," which was given with fine dramatic force and fervour, and his vocalisation of "The Lament" roused the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm, the applause breaking forth again and again.

FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY.

FROM THE PORTRAIT PAINTED BY HORACE VERNET, IN ROME, 1831.

MARCH 1, 1905.

SECTION (REDUCED FACSIMILE) OF THE MAP OF LONDON PREPARED BY RALPH AGAS, circa 1591.

three hundred years later than the date of the bishop's will, all the ground stretching from Shoe Lane to Chancery Lane was laid out as gardens, with trees and shrubs, and, without doubt, 'good strawberries.' By-the-way, it is not without interest to note that Mr. Agas resided in this district, as (in 1606) he wrote from 'his lodging in holborne at fetter lane nere the signe of the helmet.'

Holborn, as in the present day, was a very important thoroughfare in olden times, but ghastly indeed were the scenes then frequently witnessed. Along its narrow and jolting roadway criminals were taken from Newgate to the gallows at Tyburn, there to be hanged for various offences, such as murder, forgery, or theft. These executorial processions used to be witnessed by crowds of people on foot and at the windows along the route. It is said that an old inhabitant of Holborn made a practice of giving his clerks a holiday every execution-day in order that they might 'see the show,' saying to them: 'Go, ye young rogues, go to school, and improve'! Titus Oates and Dangerfield were publicly whipped at the cart's tail along Holborn.

In pleasant contrast to the repulsive customs of those brutalising days, we may turn to a philanthropic incident and its beneficent results. In the winter of 1827 a Dr. William Marsden found on the steps of St. Andrew's church a poor girl of eighteen years of age perishing from disease and famine. He conveyed her to three or four different hospitals, but not being provided with the necessary letters the poor sufferer was refused admission. The kind doctor then took her to a lodging close by, but she died two days afterwards, unknown and friendless. This distressing event—one by no means uncommon at that time—determined Dr. Marsden to found a hospital on the principle of free and instant admission, with the result that the Royal Free Hospital in Gray's Inn Road—an Institution worthy of benevolent support—was thereupon founded.

The church of St. Andrew's, Holborn, like so many of the venerable sanctuaries of London, teems with interest, regarded from various points of view. In 1297 the church was given by Gladerinus, a priest, or presbyter, to the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, on condition that the Abbot and Convent of St. Saviour, Bermondsey, should hold the same of that Cathedral. They held it till 1547, paying the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's 12*d.* per annum, when, on the dissolution of monasteries, it passed to the Crown. Nothing seems to be known of the original building, but in 1446 the steeple of the present edifice was commenced, and the church 'was builded by the money given of devotion of good people, then used to be gathered by the men and women of the parish in boxes, in ales, shootings, &c., for the only purpose, through the parish weekly, during the time of these works, as by their accounts may and doth appear.' This 15th century church escaped the great fire of London; but as its main portion became so dilapidated it was rebuilt by Sir Christopher Wren in the year 1686. The great architect, however, preserved the original tower, which he re-cased, and this ancient part of the structure can be recognised by the large and original buttresses and the fine Gothic arch of the interior, as shown in the illustration on p. 161. The largest of Wren's churches, St. Andrew's suffered much at the 'restoring' hands of Teulon in 1872. As a well-known ecclesiologist says: 'He did a lot of mischief, and never ought to have been allowed to touch a Wren church. He carted away the fine old organ case and a quantity of good pewing and woodwork, including the unique "Christening pew" placed under the organ-loft. In St. Martin's Ludgate one can see exactly how a Wren church ought to be restored; in St. Andrew's how it ought not to be done.'

From a series of papers on stained glass before and after the Gothic revival, contributed to The Architect by Mr. T. Francis Bumpus, we derive the following information concerning the glass in the church:

The stained glass in the great east window is a fine example of the work of Joshua Price, to whom we are deeply indebted for the manner in which he, and a few others, kept the art of glass-painting alive in this country during the 17th and 18th centuries. It is a work unequalled—unequalled that is for the 18th century, especially in its use of 'pot metal glass'—and, together with the stone altar and the decoration of the sanctuary generally, forms a valuable memorial of Dr. Sacheverell, to whom they are due, and who is buried beneath the altar. Some armorial glass in the windows at the eastern ends of the galleries is likewise remarkable for the magnificence and brilliancy of its tinctures. The date of these, and of the great east window would, I should think, be about 1710-14.

Previous to the making of that wonderful example of engineering skill, the Holborn Viaduct (opened by Queen Victoria on November 6, 1869), the church had to be reached by steps upward from the sloping side-walk (as shown in our illustration on p. 157), but now one has to descend, owing to the altered street level. The church is mentioned as having been originally situated 'in a spacious cemetery'; therefore it is no wonder that in its churchyard and in its extensive vaults an immense number of bodies were interred: indeed, when the new road through this campo santo was made (in 1869), no fewer than some 12,000 remains were removed and re-interred at Ilford cemetery. The various visitations of the plague must have tested the interment capacities of these old London churchyards to a marvellous extent, e.g., at St. Andrew's, it is recorded that, in February, 1563: 'Here, by God's mercy, the plague did cease; whereof died in this parish this year to the number of four hundred, four score, and ten'; while in the year 1583 we learn that 'The great heap of dead men's bones and skulls that lay unseemly and offensive at the east end of the church, near Shoe-lane, were all this year buried in a pit.'

Preserved in the archives of St. Andrew's Church is a very interesting and informing manuscript volume written by Churchwarden Thomas Bentley, who held office in 1584. This volume—which really ought to be printed by one of the learned societies—is entitled:—

Sume Monuments of Antiquitie worthy [of] memory collected and gathered together out of sundry old accounts had and made by ye churchwardens, lightwardens, and such like officers of ye parish since ye time of King Henry ye sixth by Thomas Bentley gent. sometime an unprofitable member and churchwarden of ye parish in ye year of our Lord 1584.

From the pages of this valuable tome we cull the following extract concerning the plague, to which Churchwarden Bentley's book must be subjected to further quotation. Here are some quaint extracts concerning the Churchwardens, the spelling being modernized:

The churchwardens of the parish took a woman's gown to pledge for their duties belonging to the church at a funeral.

The churchwardens compelled 'Sir Harry,' the priest, to pay 4*d.* as a fine for driving a cart across the churchyard to the rectory.

The churchwardens used to lend chalices, vestments, missals, &c., to noblemen, parishioners and others, 'but always for money' (!)

This extract is interesting as furnishing a 16th century foreshadowing of the sanitary precautions and nursing methods of our own day.

The churchwardens this year [1556] received 35*s.* of the communicants at Easter. This money was called Houseling Money in old time; the which was used to be received by the light-wardens in Henry VII and VIII time appears in old accounts also in the 6th year of Queen Mary the light-wardens received it at God's board and called it the Hali Pence. The same in old time was received of the Inns of Court and Chancery also by the light-wardens as appears in the accounts.

['Houseling Money' means Eucharist offerings; and Hali Pence signifies Holy pence.]

Coming to later times—the early years of the 18th century—we find some equally entertaining entries in the Vestry Minutes. Here is one, suggestive of the pews being cells to be locked and unlocked—doubtless with profit—by female turnkeys:

Agreed that Mrs. Cornish be pewkeeper in the room of Mrs. Bugden, and that Mrs. Bugden's daughter keep the keys till the Sunday night after Candlemass day, and then she is to deliver the keys to Mrs. Cornish who is to pay Mrs. Bugden's daughter ten shillings out of the profit of the pews arising after Lady day next or w^{thin} fourteen days after Lady day. (January 23, 1724.)

Later, the 18th century lotteries appear to have been favoured by the clergy, as (in 1707) a lady residing in Holborn had a lottery-ticket presented to her by her husband, and on the Sunday preceding the drawing her success was prayed for in the parish church of St. Andrew's in these words: 'The prayers of this congregation are desired for the success of a person engaged in a new undertaking.'

The rectors of St. Andrew's—their names are recorded from the year 1322—have included famous dignitaries of the church, some of whom have adorned the Episcopal bench: e.g., Richard Bancroft, Archbishop of Canterbury in the 17th century; John King, Bishop of London in 1621, who was punningly described by King James 'the King of preachers'; John Hacket, Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield in 1661; Edward Stillingfleet, Bishop of Worcester in 1689, a prelate so handsome in appearance that he was called 'the beauty of holiness.' Perhaps the most famous of all the rectors, by reason of his political propensities, was Dr. Henry Sacheverell. A hot-headed partisan, he was tried by impeachment for preaching political sermons—one before the Lord Mayor in St. Paul's Cathedral in 1709—and suspended from his clerical ministrations for three years. But at the expiration of his sentence in 1713, Queen Anne presented Sacheverell to the rectory of St. Andrew's, Holborn! Although he afterwards sank into comparative oblivion, Sacheverell quarrelled with his parishioners, notably with one William Whiston, whom he ordered out of the church and forbade to enter it again. In the course of some research among old London newspapers for the purposes of this article, we accidentally came across the following amusing reference to the redoubtable Dr. Sacheverell, as recorded in the Weekly Journal or Saturday's Post of November 23, 1717:

Last Saturday Dr. Sacheverell, with his Lady, came to Town from Derbyshire, she being perfectly recovered of the Fall she had in her Coach. The Doctor was met as far as St. Albans by about 2 or 300 Horse of his Parishioners and Friends; he treated them all the Way to Town, and upon his Arrival the Bells of St. Andrew in Holborn were rung to bid him welcome.

From this it may be inferred that the Doctor 'treated' these '2 or 300 Horse of his Parishioners' better than he did Mr. Whiston. He died June 5, 1724, and was buried in the chancel of the church. Twenty-three years later the General Advertiser of September 29, 1747, contained the following information, set forth in two separate paragraphs:

Yesterday John Lamb Sexton of St. Andrew's Church, Holborn, was committed to Newgate by the Lord Mayor for being concerned with the Grave-digger of the said Parish, in stealing 150 Lead Coffins out of the Vault of the said Church, several of which were found in his House.

Among the Leaden Coffins taken out of the Vaults under St. Andrew's Church, Holborn, are found those of the late Rev. Dr. Sacheverell and the noted Sally Salisbury.

The coupling together of these two names is most amusing. This sepulchral desecration called forth a threepenny pamphlet entitled:

A genuine narrative of the sacrilegious Impiety of John Lamb, the sexton and Wm. Bilby, the grave-digger of St. Andrew's, Holborn.

While on this grave subject, some extracts from the Vestry Minutes may be given. They are of the year 1717:

Ordered That whereas Thomas Abraham late Grave digger of this Parish hath been detected of several misdemeanours comitted by him in his office as robbing the dead and other enormities by him most sacrilegiously practised we therefore discharge him from his said employment.

Ordered that four new Bearers be provided to officiate as such for this parish and their fees be as usual.

Ordered that the Bearers take care of the Pall in their turns each Bearer to discharge that duty for one month and so consequently monthly from time to time as the Churchwardens shall direct.

Agreed that the Sexton be upon the death of every person satisfied what Bell must be used upon that occasion, before any bell be used, and that the Sexton use no other Bell but such as shall be required or desired to be so used, and that the Churchwarden for the time being be satisfied what bell is to be used before any Bell be made use of upon that occasion.

The Registers of St. Andrew's, which date from 1558, contain some interesting entries. Among the baptisms we find the names of Richard Savage the poet, and friend of Dr. Johnson, and Henry Addington, a former Speaker of the House of Commons and Prime Minister, whose administration evoked the couplet:

Pitt is to Addington
As London is to Paddington.

But of greater interest is the following entry, which we give literatim et verbatim:

In regard to the Marriage Registers there is preserved in the Registry of the church a book which throws a curious light on nuptial customs during the Commonwealth. The volume is entitled :

We give two extracts from this 17th century book :

An Agreement and Intent of Marriage betweene Richard Jones chirurgeon and Mary Bridges daughter of James Bridges of the City of Worcestre Mercer both of the parish of Andrewes Holborne was published three Market Dayes in Newgate Markett and in three severall weekes videlt. :—On the 19th on the 25th and on the 30th dayes of November 1653.

meeting place.' Both the couples mentioned in the above 'publications' were 'married by Thomas Lisle Esqre. Justice of the peace,' and not by a clergyman.

The marriage of the famous lawyer, Sir Edward Coke (1552-1634) to his second wife, relict of Sir William Hatton, is recorded in November, 1598 ; but the ceremony was irregular, having taken place in a private house. Here is a contemporary reference to this union of hearts :

The seventh of this month the quenes attorney married the Lady Hatton, to the great admiration of all men, that after so many large and likely offers she should decline to a man of his qualitie, and they will not believe it was without a misterie.

On Sunday, May 1, 1808, William Hazlitt was married to Sarah Stoddart, one of the witnesses to the marriage being Mary Ann Lamb, the bridesmaid. Mary's brother Charles was also present at the ceremony, as he records in a letter, written seven years later, to Southey. Here is the extract, written in Charles Lamb's inimitable style :

I am going to stand godfather; I don't like the business. I cannot muster up decorum for these occasions; I shall certainly disgrace the font. I was at Hazlitt's marriage, and had like to have been turned out several times during the ceremony. Anything awful makes me laugh. I misbehaved once at a funeral. Yet I can read about these ceremonies with pious and proper feelings. The realities of life only seem the mockeries.

Passing on to the Burial Registers, we find recorded therein the interment of Daniel Purcell, brother of the famous Henry of that ilk. His (Daniel's) remains were deposited at St. Andrew's Church—of which he was organist—in the month of November, 1717, the entry reading :

Daniell Purcell from Fetter Lane ye 26th.

This entry gives approximately the date of Daniel Purcell's death, which we believe is now made known for the first time. Some of his biographers give his death-year as 1718, and none of these investigators could have searched the St. Andrew's registers, or they would have found the above information. John Hughes (1677-1720), one of the best minor poets of the Queen Anne period, is also buried here. He was an amateur violinist, and took active part in the concerts given by Thomas Britton, the musical small-coal man in Clerkenwell, which music-makings were honoured with the presence of Handel. In a letter to Rorer, Handel—writing after his first visit to England in 1710—says :

Pray give my compliments to Mr. Hughes. I shall take the liberty of writing to him at the first opportunity. In the meantime if he will honour me with his commands, and will add to them one of his charming English poems, he will do me the greatest kindness. Since I left you, I have made some progress in the language.

It should not be forgotten that John Hughes wrote the words of the air, 'Would you gain the tender creature?' which occurs in 'Acis and Galatea.' The most pathetic entry in the burial register is, however, that of Thomas Chatterton, the ill-fated poet, of whom Wordsworth wrote :

The marvellous boy,
The sleepless soul, that perished in his pride.

His suicidal end in his eighteenth year, the fact that he was buried in a pauper's grave—the ground now occupied by Farringdon Avenue—and that his Christian name is wrongly stated (William, instead of Thomas) in the burial entry, deepen the tragedy of his untimely death from starvation. The sad event took place in a lonely lodging at Brooke Street, Holborn, on August 24, 1770. Three months previously he had contributed to one of the London newspapers an open letter, signed 'Probus,' and addressed to Lord Mayor Beckford, which gained him an interview with the Lord Mayor. A second letter was written and sent for publication, but it never appeared owing to the death of Beckford. This unpublished communication Chatterton sent to a friend accompanied with this endorsement :

Accepted by Bingley, set for and thrown out of the North Briton 21 June, on account of the lord mayor's death.

But it is now time to turn to matters more strictly musical. As no history of this interesting church has been written, the material for even a 'chatty' article on its various interests has had to be gleaned from various sources. In regard to the organ, the MS. book of Churchwarden Bentley—a tome probably hidden during the Commonwealth, and thereby fortunately preserved—furnishes some curious information. It is thus set forth :

9 Henry viii.—Item. The lytle orgaynes were made, and bought at the charges of the parish and devotion of good people and purchased by the churchwardens. They cost as I can gather £6. Ye loft for ye sayd orgaynes was built ye same year and stood the parish in 40s.

2 Edward vi.—Item. My Lord of Lincoln had given a payre of orgaynes to the church.

1 Mary.—Item. The parish gave young Whyte £5 for ye great orgaynes which his father gave to ye church.

A still more interesting entry is the following, of the year 1572, which we give literatim et verbatim :

Md yt ye sayd Langston [churchwarden] without leave of ye parishoners or consent of ye Vestry & clean against ye mynd of ye parson solde awaye ye great Orgaynes given by Mr Whyte & for wh. ye parish payd V℥ to young Whyte, & was at greater charges for a loft to sett them upp on not long before. He puled down ye loft & sold these fayre Orgaynes & excellent Instrument for X℥ Xs unto ye Deane of Westminster & ye Mynster Church ther wher now they stand & cannot be bought for any money so highly are they esteemed of for their goodness.

This information furnishes some fresh light on the history of the organ in Westminster Abbey—information that, we believe, has not hitherto been known.

As the actual Vestry Minutes now existing do not go back beyond 1714, nothing is discoverable as to the builders or scope of these ancient orgaynes, or the organists who played thereupon. We must therefore pass on to the year 1684, when the memorable contest between Father Smith and Renatus Harris began at the Temple Church for the building of the organ in that venerable sanctuary. Harris, it will be remembered, lost the day, and it is said that a portion of the instrument which he had erected in the Temple Church for the competition was re-erected in St. Andrew's Church, Holborn. Hawkins says that when Sacheverell became rector (in 1713) he 'found an organ in the church of Harris's building, which, having never been paid for, had, from the time of its erection, in 1699, been shut up,' and so on. (Hawkins's History of Music, 1859 edn., p. 759). As Hawkins is inaccurate in other parts of his statement, he cannot be relied upon in regard to the silence of the instrument in the church for fourteen years. For one splendid case.' Ah! what has become of that 'splendid case'? Hatton also records that 'the church is very well and regularly Pew'd uniform,' and that 'there are Prayers every day in the week at 6, 11, and 3 in the Summer, and at 7, 11, and 3 in the Winter.'

The Historical Documents Commission Report (vol. vii., p. 689) gives some contemporary information on the subject of the Harris organ in St. Andrew's. This is contained in a folio paper volume, consisting, as the Report says, 'of eighty-nine pages of cases submitted to Serjeant Pengelly, and of his opinion thereon in 1719 and later years.'

thing, the first of the Charity School annual festivals—which afterwards became so familiar a feature in St. Paul's Cathedral—was held in St. Andrew's Church, on June 8, 1704, when nearly 2,000 children were present. Now, is it at all likely that the Harris organ remained silent on that occasion? Let us turn to Hatton's 'New View of London' (1708) and see what he has to say regarding the instrument in St. Andrew's: 'Here is also a very fine organ made by Mr. Harris.' So unusual a circumstance as a locked-up and silent organ would almost certainly have been recorded by Hatton. Another old writer says: 'The organ is very large, and contained in a most

The learned counsel's 'opinion' is thus stated:

The case (which is not dated) states that about 27 years ago an organ was erected in the church, but no organist was appointed for many years afterwards. About the year 1715 Dr. Sacheverell, being then rector, and the organ being unpaid for, went about the parish and raised money sufficient to pay the debt. At that time one Mr. Purcell played the said organ, without being elected or appointed organist or without having any fixed salary, and he died about ten years since; on whose death Dr. Sacheverell summoned and procured a meeting of the parishioners when he recommended them to do what they thought proper as to the choice of an organist and his salary; and the parishioners then agreed to allow £50 per ann. There were seven candidates and a day appointed for the election; but the rector and a select vestry alone chose one Mr. Greene, who officiated for some months and resigned, when the select vestry chose Mr. Heysham [Isham], who died a month ago. [Isham died in June, 1726.]

The circumstances attending the erection of the Harris organ engaged the serious attention of the Vestry in January 1717¹⁸. Here is a Minute thereupon, now made public for the first time:

The Question being put what answer should be given to Mr. Harris the organ-maker concerning a Letter he had caused to be written to the Churchwardens dated eleventh January 1717 the same was Referred to Mr. Greenway to give an answer upon the first opportunity who promised to write an answer accordingly and the Churchwardens are to signe or subscribe same.

The letter referred to, evidently written to Mr. Renatus Harris's solicitor, reads thus:

Sr.

Some time since wee each of us recd. a Lr. from you relateing to ye organ made and sett up by Mr. Harris wee have showed your Lr. to the vestry and the organ not being made and sett up either by order of the vestry or any parish meeting or by order or direction of any of the parishioners unless by one Mr. Battersby formerly Churchwarden who might doe the same of his owne accord and they are informed that Mr. Harris agreed with the said Mr. Battersby to be paid for the organ by moneys to be raised by subscription and that according to Mr. Harris agreem^t there have been considerable sumes of money raised and paid him by subscription Therefore if he hath made an organ that requires more money than he can raise by subscription he must blame himself, for that the money he hath already recd. would pay for a very good organ and the vestry tell us they cannot doe anything in it or doe they believe (as Mr. Harris case stands) that he can by Law recover anything agt. the parish for the Organ and if Mr. Harris thinks that the moneys he recd. is not sufficient for the paym^t of the organ the most he can desire is to re-imburse the parishioners what he hath already recd. and to have their leave to take away the organ making good the Gallery where it stands All which wee thought fitt to lett you know and as to what you pretend to sue us as Churchwardens wee doubt not but you may be easily informed that no prosecution or proper proceeding doth lye against us or the parish for the organ.

The next entries in the Vestry Minutes in regard to the organ are as follows, with their respective dates:

March 31, 1718¹⁹.

The question being putt whether the person Employed to look after the organ should have a yearly salary for looking after and keeping in repair the said Organ or not It was agreed that a Salary should be allowed him and that Mr. Isham [the organist] do bring an account of such Sallaries as are usually paid by other churches in and about the City, and Mr. Isham reported 10^l. the usuall allowance paid by other Churches.

May 1, 1719.

It is also agreed that Mr. Christopher Shridder be paid eight pounds for his service in looking after the organ this last year which eight pounds when paid him is to be in full of all demands except Locks and Keys amounting to Eleven shills and six pence.

March 27, 1723.

The Question being putt whether Mr. Shriders debt for looking after the Organ should be paid to him by Mr. Stanton out of the money in his hands (Reced. by the said Mr. Stanton out of Thavies's rents) or not Agreed that Mr. Stanton shall pay him for four years due at Lady day last after the rate of eight pounds per annum taking the said Shriders receipt for the same.

Agreed that the Churchwarden Lawrence (calling to his assistance 2 or more of the vestry) may agree with the said Shridder or any other person for the looking after and cleaning the organ for the future.

As Shridder appears to have had charge of the organ, it may be assumed that the Vestry had not made its peace with Renatus Harris; but the following entry serves to show that matters had ultimately been amicably arranged between the parties, and moreover that Harris had added 'the Ecco's and Swelling' to the original Temple Church instrument, or rather that portion of it in St. Andrew's Church:

8 April, 1735.

Ordered that Mr. Harris, the Organ Builder, be paid the Balance of his Bill for making the Ecco's and Swelling amounting to twenty-three pounds and also the sume of twenty-eight pounds being the salary for three years and an halfe due and ending at Lady day last for cleaning and keeping the Organ in Tune by Mr. Horsnail, the Churchwarden, out of Thavies's estate.

The Harris organ was subsequently enlarged by various builders, including (in 1842 and 1872) Messrs. Hill & Son. A further enlargement, with new action throughout, has just been completed by Messrs. Hill, thus providing the church with almost a new instrument, which is announced to be opened on March 1. Here is the specification of the rebuilt organ:

The first recorded organist of the church was Daniel Purcell (1660?-1717), who is said to have begun his duties in 1713—probably at the request of the rector, Dr. Sacheverell, and not by being officially elected by the Vestry. After Daniel Purcell's death, in 1717,—to which we have already referred—there appeared :

THE PSALMS SET FULL for the Organ or Harpsichord as they are Plaid in Churches and Chappels in the manner given out; as also with their Interludes of great Variety, by MR. DANIEL PURCELL, late Organist of St. Andrew's, Holborn.

We give a specimen of the 'given out' and 'Interludes' from this Purcellian publication :

THE 100 PSALM TUNE GIVEN OUT.

THE 100 PSALM TUNE WITH THE INTERLUDES.

The candidates for the organistship immediately after Daniel Purcell's death included his nephew Edward, who appears to have inserted the following advertisement in one of the leading newspapers of the day :

Whereas Edward Purcell, only son to the famous Mr. Henry Purcell, stands candidate for the Organist's place of St. Andrew, Holbourn, in the room of his Uncle, Mr. Daniel Purcell, deceased, This is to give Notice that the Place is to be decided by a General Poll of House-keepers of the said Parish, whom he humbly hopes, notwithstanding the false and malicious Reports of his being a Papist, will be assistant to him in obtaining the said Place.

N.B.—The Election will begin upon Tuesday the 17th, at Nine in the Morning, and continue till Friday following, to Four in the Afternoon.—(Daily Courant, December 11, 1717.)

At a meeting of the Select Vestry, held on February 17, 1717, the following Minutes were entered upon the records :

The Question being putt whether the Vestry should take the election of an Organist into their nomination or not, it was agreed in the affirmative.

The Question being putt whether the Vestry should now proceed upon the said election or not, it was agreed by a majority to proceed forthwith.

The continuation of the Minutes we give in the Select Vestry in recording the votes of its facsimile, as showing the method adopted by members :

The Candidates names are as followeth viz^t

Mr. Short _____
Mr. Isham _____
Mr. Young _____
Mr. Green HHHH _____
Mr. Purwill _____
Mr. Haydon _____
Mr. Harris _____
Mr. East _____

Voted nemine contradicente That Mr. Green is elected Organist of the Parish Church of St. Andrew, Holborne.

Mr. (afterwards the celebrated Dr. Maurice) Greene held the appointment for about a month, as the following Minute, dated April 3, 1718, will show :

Mr. Green ye Organist, being elected Organist of Saint Paul's and his place as Organist of this Church thereby being become vacant, the Vestry do order that his salary be continued to Sunday the 4th of May inclusive.

Itt is also Ordered that such person who shall be elected Organist of this Parish in the room of Mr. Green, shall be obliged to a constant personall attendance on all Sundays and Holydays.

The several candidates named for Organist in the Room of Mr. Green are as follows, viz. :

Mr. George Haydon + _____
 Mr. Charles Young _____
 Mr. Edward Pursil _____
 Mr. John Isham +++++ _____

Agreed that Mr. Isham be elected Organist of the Parish Church of Saint Andrew, Holborne, in the room of Mr. Greene, and that he have a yearly salary of Fifty pounds paid him out of the Bells and Palls.

'What's in a name?' the St. Andrew's vestrymen may have said about 'Mr. Edward Pursil,' judging from the result of their voting. The John Isham then elected came from St. Anne's Church, Soho, where he had succeeded Dr. Croft.

The next organist of St. Andrew's was a most distinguished man, the celebrated blind performer, John Stanley (1714-1786). He was only a boy of twelve at the time of his appointment, concerning which the following advertisement—now for the first time reprinted—from The London Journal of August 13, 1726, may not be without interest :

To the worthy Inhabitants of the Parish of St. Andrew's Holbourn,

The place of Organist being vacant, your Vote and Interest are desired for

JOHN STANLEY,
the Blind Youth, who was Educated under Mr. Green, Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral.

N.B. Mr. Short, one of the Candidates, has no less than three places, viz. Organist of St. Sepulchre's, and St. Dunstan's, Stepney, and one in the Play-House.

N.B. The Report of the Blind Youth's Father having a Place of Four or Five Hundred Pounds a Year under the Government is without Foundation, he having no Place of any Value whatsoever.

The Election begins on MONDAY morning next.

The result of the contest is thus recorded in The Weekly Journal, or the British Gazetteer, of Saturday, August 20, 1726 :

There having been a Poll at St. Andrew's, Holbourn, for the Place of Organist of that Church in the Room of Mr. Isham, deceased ; the same ended last Wednesday Night, when the Choice fell by a great Majority upon Mr. Stanley, a Youth who has had the Misfortune to be blind, but having been educated under Mr. Green, Organist of St. Paul's, and being endowed with an extraordinary Genius for Musick, is the Admiration of all that ever heard his Performances.

The career of John Stanley is so well known that there is no need to give detailed particulars, except to mention that he was one of the greatest, if not the greatest, organist of his day. He held the organistship of St. Andrew's for sixty years, and for fifty-two years of that time he was also organist of the Temple Church, where Handel and some fifty other organists are said to have assembled in order to hear him play. He became Master of the King's Musick in succession to Dr. Boyce, and he led the band himself, using a Stainer violin for orchestral work and a Cremona for solo playing. In spite of his blindness Stanley was a good player at skittles, shovel-board, billiards, and whist, for which he used perforated cards.

The next organist was James Evance, concerning whose election the following resolutions were passed at a General Meeting of the Parishioners held on June 2, 1786:

That the salary of the organist be fifty pounds, out of which he is to pay the Blower £3.

That in case a Poll be demanded the candidates deposit before the opening of the Poll in equal shares in the hands of the Upper Churchwarden the sum of Twenty Pounds to defray the expenses thereof.

A poll, which lasted for three days and at which no fewer than 1,919 parishioners voted, resulted in

JOHN STANLEY, MUS.B. (1714-1786).

SECOND ORGANIST OF ST. ANDREW'S, HOLBORN, AND OF THE TEMPLE CHURCH.
(From the portrait by James McArdell.)

He died at his house in Hatton Garden on May 19, 1786. His death is thus recorded in the Gentleman's Magazine of that month:

19th. In Hatton-Garden, John Stanley Esq, master of his Majesty's band of musicians, and organist to the society of the Temple, and St. Andrew's Holborn; and on the evening of this 27th his remains were interred in the new burying-ground of St. Andrew's. At that parish church, on the 28th [Sunday] instead of the usual voluntary, a solemn dirge, and after service, 'I know that my Redeemer liveth' were, with great propriety, given upon that organ on which Mr. Stanley had, with much eminence, displayed his musical abilities near 60 years.

the election of Mr. Evance, who received 1,041 votes. We may pass on to mention, and make very honourable mention, of the most distinguished organist of St. Andrew's in modern times, the late Dr. James Higgs, who held the office from 1867 to 1895, and of whom an obituary notice, with portrait, appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of June and August, 1902. To Mr. Higgs succeeded Mr. Harold Phillips, who fully maintained the musical traditions of the church.

The present organist of St. Andrew's is Mr. Frank George Mitford Ogbourne. He studied under various teachers, including the late William Beavan and Mr. E. H. Thorne. He has always devoted himself to the organ and church music, his previous appointments having included St. Mary's, Kilburn, St. George's, Campden Hill, All Saints', Norfolk Square, and St. Mary-the-Virgin, Chelsea. For about six years he deputized for Dr. Creser at the Chapel Royal, though he had no official appointment as assistant-organist, taking the entire duty during Dr. Creser's absence in India, when he played at several important memorial services. On July 1, 1903, he was selected, upon the recommendation of Sir George Martin, from among a large number of candidates as organist of St. Andrew's, Holborn, where a full choral service is effectively rendered. For twenty years Mr. Ogbourne has been

For valued help in the preparation of this article we are specially indebted to the kindness of the Rector of St. Andrew's, Holborn, the Rev. A LONG-LOST PORTRAIT OF MENDELSSOHN.

In his biography of Mendelssohn, contributed to the 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' Sir George Grove admits his inability to trace the portrait of the composer painted by Horace Vernet in Rome during the winter of 1830-31. Even, as Sir George states, the efforts of M. Edouard Detaille, the painter, failed to discover the picture. Its history during the intervening seventy-four years since it was painted can be briefly told. The portrait was sent by Vernet to the Mendelssohn family at Berlin. Then it became successively the property of Mendelssohn's sister, Fanny Hensel, upon whose death (in 1847) it passed to her husband, who died in 1861. An artist friend of Hensel's then acquired, either by purchase or bequest, the portrait, and it has remained in the possession of his widow until quite recently. It is now the property of Herr Geheimrath Ernst von Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, of Berlin, nephew of the composer, and by his kind and special permission we are enabled to reproduce it as one of our special supplements.

Horace Vernet—or, to give him his full name, Emile Jean Horace Vernet—was born at Paris, June 30, 1789, and died there January 17, 1863. An exceedingly brilliant and vigorous artist, he made himself famous by his battle-pieces, of which examples may be seen at Versailles. From 1828 to 1833 he was Director of the French Academy of Art in Rome. It was there that Mendelssohn made his acquaintance. They had interests in common—but Mendelssohn shall speak for himself in a letter he wrote to his mother, dated 'Rome, January 17, 1831':

I have applied myself again vigorously to drawing, and begin to work in sepia, as I should be glad to be able to recall some pictorial effects, and practice quickens the perceptions. I must now tell you, dear mother, of a great, very great pleasure I recently enjoyed, because you will rejoice with me. Two days ago I was for the first time in a small circle with Horace Vernet, and played there. He had previously told me that his most favourite and esteemed music was 'Don Juan,' especially the Duet and the Commendatore at the end; and as I highly approved of such sentiments on his part, the result was, that while intending to play a prelude to Weber's Concert-stück, I imperceptibly glided further into extemporizing,—thought I would please him by taking these themes, and so I worked them up fancifully for some time. This caused him a degree of delight such as I have seldom known my music produce in any one, and we felt at once more intimate. Afterwards he suddenly came up to me, and whispered that we must make an exchange, for that he also was an improvisatore; and when I was naturally curious to know what he meant, he said it was his secret. He is however like a little child, and could not conceal it for more than a quarter of an hour, when he came in again, and taking me into the next room, he asked me if I had any time to spare, as he had stretched and prepared a canvas, and proposed painting my portrait on it, which I was to keep in memory of this day, or roll it up and send it to you, or take it with me, just as I chose. He said he should have no easy task with his improvisation, but at all events he would attempt it. I was only too glad to give my consent, and cannot tell you how much I was enchanted with the delight and enthusiasm he evidently felt in my playing.

A letter written by Rebecca Mendelssohn (Felix's sister) to Ferdinand David confirms the foregoing—that the portrait was actually painted in return for the extempore fantasia on 'Don Juan.' Another extract from one of Mendelssohn's delightful letters written from Rome may be quoted in this Vernet portrait connection. He writes to his family on March 15, 1831, thus:

You inquire about Horace Vernet, and this is, indeed, a pleasant theme. I believe I may say that I have learned something from him, and that every one may do the same. He produces with incredible facility and freshness. When a form meets his eye which touches his feelings, he instantly adopts it, and while others are deliberating whether it can be called beautiful, and praising or censuring, he has long completed his work, entirely deranging our æsthetic standard. Though this facility cannot be acquired, still its principle is admirable, and the cheerfulness which springs from it, and the creative energy it evokes, nothing else can replace.

Among the alleys of evergreen trees, where at this season of blossoms the fragrance is so charming, in the midst of the shrubberies and gardens of the Villa Medici, stands a small house, in which as you approach you invariably hear some sort of noise,—shouting, wrangling, trumpet-playing, or dogs barking; this is Vernet's atelier. The most picturesque disorder everywhere prevails; guns, a hunting horn, a monkey, palettes, a couple of dead hares or rabbits; the walls covered with pictures, finished and unfinished. 'The Investiture of the National Cockade' (an eccentric picture which does not please me), portraits recently begun of Thorwaldsen, Eynard, Latour-Maubourg, some horses, a sketch of a Judith, and studies for it: the portrait of the Pope, a couple of Moorish heads, bagpipers, Papal soldiers, my unworthy self, Cain and Abel, and last of all a drawing of the interior of the place itself, all hang up in his studio.

In an earlier letter—'Rome, December 30, 1830'—Mendelssohn describes a ball at which he was present, and where he met Thorwaldsen, who tapped him on the shoulder and said: 'So you are also admiring the English beauty; I am dazzled'—the reference being to 'the prettiest girl' at the ball. Scarcely had Thorwaldsen addressed these words to Mendelssohn, 'when,' he says, 'we heard a torrent of words behind us—"Mais où est-elle donc, cette petite Anglaise? Ma femme m'a envoyée pour la regarder. Per Baccho!"' It was quite clear that this little, thin Frenchman, with stiff, grey hair and the ribbon of the Legion of Honour, must be Horace Vernet. He now discussed the youthful beauty with Thorwaldsen in the most earnest and scientific manner; and it was quite a pleasure to me to see these two old masters admiring the young girl together, while she was dancing away quite unconcerned.' Later on, in the same letter, there are some pleasant references to our own country. He says: 'The "Hebrides" is finished at last, and a strange production it is'; and he mentions that he intends to have a peep at his English baton—thus showing, amid all the delights of Rome and the happy time he spent in Italy, that England had, as it always had, a warm corner in Mendelssohn's heart.

HANDEL MYTHS.

BY WILLIAM H. CUMMINGS.

THE MUSICAL TIMES of January and February, 1885, contains two short articles written by me under the above heading, and I now desire to call attention to two other mythical statements which have been widely promulgated and largely accepted. The first refers to Handel's method of harmonization. The late W. S. Rockstro—an ardent admirer of Handel—published a small 'History of Music for the use of young students' (1879). In the Introduction to that book we read:

Until we know that Handel never by any chance used the chord of $\frac{6}{3}$ we have no means of distinguishing a faithful arrangement of 'The Messiah' from a spurious one.

Again, on p. 60, he writes:

A singular bond of union between these two Great Masters (Palestrina and Handel) is indeed suggested by the punctilious care with which Handel invariably substituted a simple chord of the Sixth for the less pure $\frac{6}{4}$ so frequently found in the works of modern writers.

Rockstro also wrote the article 'Oratorio' in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' and there we find the following statement:

Handel never by any chance wrote the Second Inversion of the Dominant Seventh, but we shall find few modern arrangements in which the Chord is not substituted for the original chord of the Sixth, notwithstanding the extraordinary pains which the composer frequently took to avoid it.

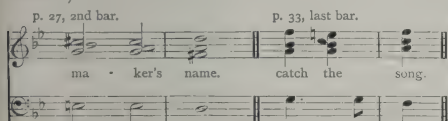

In his 'Life of G. F. Handel,' p. 413, Rockstro says:

So delicate was his sense of euphony, that he would go whole leagues out of his way to avoid the Second Inversion of the Dominant Seventh, which, treated as a chord of simple percussion, he utterly abhorred.

The above quotations are very clear and emphatic, but the information given is absolutely erroneous.

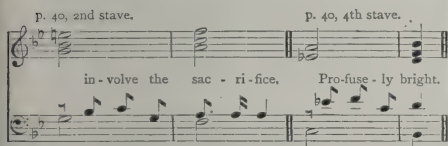

I take the oratorio 'Solomon,' and find the following examples of the chord. (The page references are to Novello's most recent octavo edition):

p. 27, 2nd bar. p. 33, last bar.

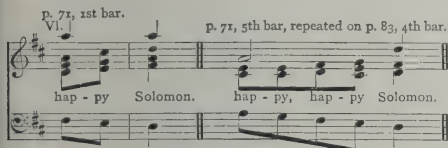

ma - ker's name. catch the song.

p. 40, 2nd stave. p. 40, 4th stave.

in - volve the sac - ri - fice. Pro - fuse - ly bright.

p. 71, 1st bar. p. 71, 5th bar, repeated on p. 83, 4th bar.

hap - py Solomon. hap - py, hap - py Solomon.

In all these instances the chord is not merely indicated in the figured bass, but it is freely displayed in the full score in the voice and orchestral parts. Handel uses the chord in the opera 'Radamisto,' and doubtless many other examples could be found in his works if one looked for them. Rockstro makes special reference to a faithful arrangement of 'The Messiah.' He seems to have overlooked the contralto solo 'O thou that tellest'; the following bar in the ritornel of that air is an example of the second inversion of the seventh; the figures are mine:

The other myth that I am anxious to dispose of is in connection with the mis-called 'Harmonious Blacksmith.' In the Appendix to Grove's 'Dictionary' William Chappell, referring to the harpsichord lesson, says:

The next claim is for G. C. Wagenseil, an eminent clavecinist of Vienna, who was born three years after Handel. The late Dr. William Crotch, Professor of Music at the University of Oxford, informed the present writer that he had seen the air in a piece of music for the clavecin composed by Wagenseil. It is far more probable that Handel copied from Wagenseil than vice versa, because Handel borrowed systematically from other authors, dead and living, whenever he found anything to suit his purpose.

I possess the volume of Handel's 'Suite des Pieces' which belonged to Dr. Crotch. It is marked and noted by him throughout the pages, and I find over the Suite in E the following note:

This is taken from one in G, by Wagenseil, with variations, but greatly improved, also said to be like something called the Harmonious Blacksmith.

After reading Chappell's uncompromising statement, one is reminded of the old proverb, 'Give a dog an ill name, and hang him.' Happily in this instance it will be an easy task to prove that Crotch and Chappell were both wrong. Handel published his 'Suite des Pieces' in London in 1720. Wagenseil was born in Vienna in 1715. The latter was therefore five years old when Handel's music was published. Any further discussion of the claims of Wagenseil versus Handel is quite unnecessary.

MENDELSSOHN AND HIS ENGLISH PUBLISHER.

SOME UNPUBLISHED LETTERS.

Writing from Frankfort on April 10, 1845, Mendelssohn refers to the publication of his Violin Concerto and 'Hear my prayer,' for which he asks '20 guineas for both together.' He adds:

I have also written a new Trio [in C minor], which I will send you as soon as it is to be published; but you know that it always requires some time with me before I can make up my mind in that respect: so I am afraid several months will go by before I can deliver the manuscript, but come it will certainly.

On May 14 he says that 'Hear my prayer' is not to have an 'opus-number (Keine Opuszahl, as we say), because it was always my fashion to leave such trifling things without these numbers.' He adds that the Trio (in C minor) 'is not at all difficult, as Miss Horsley seems to have described it, indeed, much less so, I think, than the first.' Later in the month he writes: 'As for the Lieder ohne Worte, I wish you would send them to many millions of amateurs and let them play it.' In sending the MS. of the Lieder ohne Worte (Book 6), he says: 'I should wish to fix the price for them at 24 guineas. It is higher than that of the former books, but I have been asked from so many quarters just for these sort of things that I hope it will not be inconvenient to you (which I beg you will tell me sincerely).' In a subsequent letter he says: 'Of course I beg you will not omit the dedication on the English title-page.'

'Have many, many thanks for saying that you have not too much of my music,' he writes to Buxton, with whom our composer seems to have had the pleasantest business relations. 'It is very liberal in you,' says Mendelssohn, 'to pay an additional sum for the Walpurgisnacht (which indeed I scarcely thought worth while engraving to an English publisher) and I beg to return my best thanks to you.' Towards the end of 1845 'Elijah' begins to be mentioned; but as all the letters relating thereto have already been printed in the 'History' of that oratorio,* no further mention need be made of them in this article.

The next letter, which is of great interest to English church musicians, speaks for itself. It must be quoted in full:

Leipzig, 13 Feby., 1846.

I send you herewith the English Te Deum of which I told you. As you wished to have something in my handwriting, I copied it out for you, and beg you will send me by some opportunity a printed copy in return when you have published it. By a curious coincidence I had a letter from Novello yesterday while I was in the middle of my copy, asking me when he should get the English Te Deum of which we had spoken so many years ago. I beg you will send him my answer which I enclose. There must not be a German translation made of this piece, for I do not wish to have it published in this country, as it is written for yours and for your Service; if they want to do it here on their own account of course I cannot help it; but I will not authorize a publication of it and make it a condition that you will not send it for publication to Bote & Bock or any other German publisher, but keep it for yourself and England. If there are faults in the English words and their musical accent, I wish to correct them, but you must tell me first! I wish to fix the price for this and the Trio [in C minor] at £30. Can I say 'English Service' on the title? Or must it be 'Service of the English Church'?

I was much surprised to hear of Moscheles being elected as Conductor of the next Birmingham festival, while he is going to leave England so soon and to live here in future. Do you know how this came about, as you used to see the 'wheels within wheels' of which otherwise I should not have dreamt.

On May 8, 1846—in the midst of his 'Elijah' rush—he sends 'the score and parts of Ædipus which Mr. Anderson wrote me for some time ago by Prince Albert's commands.' He speaks of the Lower Rhine Festival (Whitsuntide, at Aix-la-Chapelle) to which he has to go, and 'an enormous Sangerfest of nearly 2,000 men, which I have also to direct (at Cologne, on June 14 and 15.)' He asks Buxton if he can come to either of these music-makings.

A New Year's letter—of 1847, the year in which Mendelssohn died—contains the following pleasant reference to the Buxton family. 'Many good wishes for you and the family. I hope the little ones will soon have got over their bad Christmas-meazles, and will have the apples and "Pfffer Kuchen" paid afterwards.' On February 17, 1847, he sends 'an Orchestra-score of my hymn ["Hear my prayer"] which I hope will reconcile you to the trouble you had for my and my alterations sake.' He refers to the report that he is engaged upon a new opera on the subject of 'The Tempest': 'I will not [doubly underlined] come forward in any newspaper controversy, and I therefore will tell you "mündlich" all I have to tell you and to thank you for in this matter.' A week later he writes:

Leipzig, 25 Feb., 1847.

I am glad that my friend explained the opera-affair to you, and that you explained it to him. But really I prefer not writing any more on this subject because it seems to be a source of eternal misunderstandings; you write you are sorry that you caused me to be angry with you, and I never was angry, nor will I ever be for your friendly exertions in my behalf.

Then again you write that you hear I will return in July to conduct the Athalie—pray mind I never promised to do so nor even made up my mind as to whether I should do it or not. Quite the contrary, it is much more probable that I shall not return and I have no other musical undertaking, which makes me come to England at present, but the performances of my Elijah. Need I repeat that to you?

Further references to the English Service occur in two letters written in the summer of 1847, from Switzerland, where Mendelssohn was sojourning in order to recover from the terrible blow caused by the sudden death of his sister, Fanny Hensel, a shock which shattered his constitution:

Thun, 7 July, 1847.

I send here the piece which I brought already to England for you, and was prevented from looking over and finishing during that hurried but very pleasant stay in your country. It completes the morning service of which you published the first piece.

I also send two new pieces forming the whole of an Evening Service, which are perhaps a little longer and more developed than usual in your Cathedral style; yet I hoped they might be used, and I found much pleasure in occupying myself with them. You told me you wanted to have something of my manuscripts, and so I send this as I wrote it: but as there are several passages which might not be quite clear to the engraver it is quite necessary that you should send me the proofs of all the three pieces before they are published.

This is also necessary because I beg you will submit the wording of them to Mr. Bartholomew (to whom I beg to be most kindly remembered). If he finds passages where the English accent is wrong I beg he will alter them, but before these alterations are published I should like to know them and therefore again I must look over the proofs. I should name as the price the same which I received for the two pieces forming the Morning Service, viz: 22 guineas.

If you have something to write to me please to direct Unterseen (Canton Berne) poste restante. I intend staying there at least 6 weeks.

The second letter reads:

Interlaken (Canton Berne), 15 August, 1847.

According to your wish I send you here enclosed two more 'Gloria Patri.' Of the three modes of alteration for the wrong 'imagination' I prefer the 1st because it is the only one that does not alter the rhythm of the whole movement, and will as well apply to the second passage when the 'imagination' again comes into play. This is not the case with alteration no. 2 and 3, and as I could not find another I beg you will insert no. 1.

It is impossible to me to give any answer to your Philharmonic question. You know that I always made it a rule not to name my conditions in such cases, and therefore I cannot do so if even I knew what to say to your question, which indeed I do not.

Pray give my best compliments to Mr. Bartholomew and tell him how sincerely I wish him a complete recovery and better health, and do not forget to tell me in your next letter how he is.

The symphonies of Mozart are unknown to me; but I know a great many of his Manuscripts, which still are unpublished and seem to me to belong to his earlier period. This is also the case with that symphony in D which forms part of that collection and which Breitkopf & H. published; but at any rate everything which he has written is of the greatest value to the friends of music, and they will certainly feel always indebted to every publisher who enables them to become acquainted with one more of his works, be they from what period they may.*

I intend to remain here till the beginning of September, and shall then return to Leipsic. Therefore address your communication, which you do not make in immediate return to this letter to Leipsic; and till the 1st Sept. my direction remains Interlaken hotel d'Interlaken as before.

Always yours very truly

FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY.

The above letter, if not the last, was one of the last that Mendelssohn wrote to his English publisher. Within three months—on November 4, 1847, at the age of thirty-eight—the spirit of the Master had taken its flight.

Occasional Notes.

Welcome, welcome, ev'ry guest,
Welcome to the Muses' feast!
Music is your only cheer,
Music entertains the ear.
The sacred Nine observe the mode,
And bring you dainties from abroad;
The delicious Thracian lute
And Dodona's mellow flute,
With Cremona's racy fruit.
At home you have the freshest air,
Vocal, instrumental fare;
Our English trumpet nothing has surpast:
The Carnival has not so rich a taste.

Anon.

The Prospectus of the ninety-third season of the Philharmonic Society has been issued. The only actual novelty therein announced is Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Canadian Rhapsody,' to be conducted by the composer. The following is a digest of the season's scheme, as set forth in the Prospectus:

SYMPHONIES: Beethoven, No. 2; Cowen, No. 5; César Franck, in D minor; Haydn, in D (No. 14, B. and H.); Paul Juon, in A; and Rimsky-Korsakoff, No. 2, 'Antar.'

OVERTURES: Sterndale Bennett, 'The Naiades'; Brahms, 'Academic'; Debussy, 'L'après-midi d'un faune'; Elgar, 'In the South'; and Tchaikovsky, 'Hamlet.'

CONCERTOS AND VARIOUS ORCHESTRAL COMPOSITIONS: César Franck, Symphonic Variations for Pianoforte and Orchestra; Edward German, 'Welsh Rhapsody'; Arthur Hervey, Tone-Poem, 'In the East'; Mendelssohn, 'Scherzo in E flat'; Mozart, Variations from 'Concertante Quartett,' for Oboe, Clarinet, Bassoon, and Horn; A. Randegger, Junr., 'Two Bohemian Dances'; Saint-Saëns, Violoncello Concerto, No. 1, Fantasia, 'Africa,' for Pianoforte and Orchestra, and Havanaise, for Violin and Orchestra; Schumann, Pianoforte Concerto; and Stanford, Violin Concerto.

Dr. Frederic Cowen retains his accustomed place as conductor of the Society's concerts.

EDWARD DANNREUTHER.

It is with much regret that we record the death of Mr. EDWARD GEORGE DANNREUTHER, which took place at Chester Studio, Gerald Road, Pimlico, on Sunday, February 12. In THE MUSICAL TIMES of October, 1898, we had peculiar pleasure in writing a biographical sketch of him, accompanied by an excellent portrait taken specially for that article; therefore it is unnecessary to give details concerning the career of this much-esteemed musician. Mr. Dannreuther took a very keen interest in the preparation of that biographical sketch, and it may not be without interest now to quote from a letter he wrote when returning the proof. He said: 'The article is admirably planned and carried out. What a vast amount of trouble you must have taken to get at all the details! I have ventured to cancel a few adjectives here and there, as my old white beard began to look pink with blushing.' And here we may remark on the delightful personality of Mr. Dannreuther. One of the most modest of men, he was a giant in intellect. To spend half an hour in his company was to receive a mental tonic of a most invigorating kind. His interests were by no means narrowed by the art he so worthily professed and intellectually represented, and his removal by death, at the age of sixty, causes a blank which will not be easily filled. Although during the last few years Mr. Dannreuther had not prominently appeared before the public, he had continued his busy life as a teacher, and in so doing had endeared himself to a large number of pupils; but it is very satisfactory to know that he had quite completed the volume of the Oxford History of Music which, in dealing with the Romantic Period, discusses the formative conditions which inspired Weber in the theatre, and Schumann and Chopin in the concert-room. Mr. Dannreuther's article on his friend Richard Wagner in Grove's 'Dictionary' is a splendid piece of biographical work.

The Oxford University Musical Union has now completed an existence of a full score of years. The Club Room was opened on October 12, 1884, and two days afterwards the first weekly meeting was held. In 1894 the first ten years of the Union's activities were recorded in an interesting volume compiled by Dr. P. C. Buck, the Rev. Dr. J. H. Mee, and Mr. F. Cunningham Woods; and now we have before us an equally well compiled narrative, entitled:

Ten more years, 1894 to 1904, of University Music in Oxford, being a continuation of the proceedings of the Oxford University Musical Union.

Compiled by direction of the Club, by E. S. Kemp, B.A., Magdalen College, and J. H. Mee, M.A., D. Mus., Merton College.

Oxford: Printed by J. Vincent, 94, High Street, MCMLV.

The greater part of this book is naturally devoted to the operations of the Musical Union—an account of its origin and progress, list of members and officers, programmes of music-meetings, catalogue of library, &c.—the record therein contained being one that reflects the greatest credit on all concerned, and, at the same time, shows how much this art-loving organization has done to leaven the musical life of the University.

* Mendelssohn's reference to some symphonies of Mozart that were 'unknown' to him is doubtless to certain compositions then in manuscript, and not to the three great Symphonies (in C, G minor, and E flat), with which, of course, he would be perfectly familiar.

To the general reader the most attractive feature of this 'Ten more years' volume is a chapter headed 'A brief account of the earlier history of the Club House'—i.e., the home of the Oxford University Musical Union. Formerly known as 'The Music Room, Oxford,' it is probably the oldest building of its kind in Europe, having been opened in 1748. Dr. William Hayes, organist of Magdalen College (1734-77) and Professor of Music, in an account of the building written in 1773, says:

Here are weekly Performances of Vocal and Instrumental Music, every Monday evening, except in Passion-Week, [and] all the month of September, and the Quarterly Choral Performances; which are usually Oratorios; and these with very little foreign Assistance. Benefit Concerts are also held here for such Performers to whom they are allowed.

The foregoing speaks well for the musical life of Oxford in the latter part of the 18th century, especially the reference to 'very little foreign Assistance.' In addition to the weekly concerts (held on Mondays at 6.30 p.m.), an oratorio was performed in each of the four academical terms (temp. 1763); while the Benefit Concerts, as a rule, were three in each year—two for the first violin player and one for the principal violoncellist. Among the former were Pinto, W. Cramer, and Salomon, and the violoncellists include such players as Crosse and Cervetto. In 1789 the band consisted of six violins, two violas, one violoncello, one double-bass, two oboes, two bassoons, and two horns, one of the horn players also being an excellent flautist. This instrumental force was doubtless reinforced by 'foreign Assistance' on important occasions, as we read that (in 1783): 'The Instrumental Parts by the Oxford Band, with the addition of Trumpets from London.' A clarinet concerto was introduced at a benefit concert as early as 1772, and one of the earliest programmes that has been preserved (February 21, 1774) contains a 'Symphony with clarionets, Gossec.' So long as Oxford had a resident Professor of Music—until about 1807—the performances were conducted by him; and in a programme dated November 11, 1773, we find an organ concerto composed by Dr. Hayes, and doubtless played by that worthy man.

Among the prodigies who appeared at 'The Music Room, Oxford,' was baby-Boy Crotch, on July 3, 1779, announced thus:

Mrs. Crotch from Norwich begs leave to acquaint the Ladies and Gentlemen of this University and City that her Child, who is not yet Four Years of Age, will . . . play upon the Organ at the Music Room this day at Twelve o'clock.

Mrs. Crotch doubtless little thought that in less than eighteen years her three-year-old child would become Professor of Music in the University. The temptation to quote from these pages must be resisted; but mention must be made of a wonderful piece of programme-music performed at the Music Room, with a description thereof, dated July 4, 1798. Here it is, in its full fighting form:

BATTLE PIECE, composed by Mr. Reinagle, in the following order:

- 1st. GRAND MARCH.
- 2nd. Word of Command.
- 3rd. First Signal Cannon.
- 4th. The Bugle Horn Call for the Cavalry.
- 5th. Answer to the first Signal Cannon.
- 6th. Trumpet Call for the Cavalry.
- 7th. Galloping of the Cavalry.
- 8th. Recitative accompanied: 'Are the troops drawn up?' Answer: 'They are, according to your orders.' 'The Cannons, are they pointed?' Answer: 'Each man impatient stands by his gun.' 'Then tell each Leader to advance.—Make ready!—Present!—Fire!'
- 9th. The Grand Attack.
- 10th. The Cries of the Wounded.
- 11th. The Bugle Horn Call for the Infantry.
- 12th. Trumpet of Victory.
- 13th. The Retreat.
- 14th. TRIO.—'The Sword that is drawn in Virtue's cause.'

To conclude with the MARCH in Blue Beard.

This Blue Beardless Battle Piece, must have been composed by Joseph Reinagle, a famous violoncellist, who died at Oxford in 1836. His son, Alexander Robert Reinagle, composer of the well-known common-metre tune 'St. Peter,' appeared as a pianist at the Music Room, on May 13, 1816, aged twelve, when the programme contained this atrocity (the italics are in the original):

Sonata, Pianoforte—Master Reinagle - - Beethoven.

(In which will be introduced a favourite Air, with Harp Variations, accompanied on the Violoncello by MR. REINAGLE.)

THE MUSIC ROOM, OXFORD.

THE OLDEST MUSIC ROOM IN EUROPE, NOW THE CHIEF ROOM IN THE CLUB-HOUSE OF THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY MUSICAL UNION.

(From 'Ten more years': by kind permission of the Rev. Dr. J. H. Mee.)

The particular pianoforte sonata which Master Reinagle harped upon is not stated; the violoncello variations were doubtless literally fathered upon the youthful pianist. The hand of the Rev. Dr. J. H. Mee, the founder and chief benefactor of the Oxford University Musical Union, can be traced in the pages of this interesting chapter on 'The earlier history of the Club House,' formerly 'The Music Room, Oxford.'

The performance by the students of the Royal College of Music, on February 14, of Beethoven's cantata 'The Praise of Music,' prompts a few remarks on its origin and the early performances of the work. Sir George Grove says that the cantata was not originally composed to its present words, which were an after adaptation. It was written in honour of the Sovereigns and other exalted personages assembled in the winter of 1814 for the Congress of Vienna, which was opened on November 3 and remained sitting till broken up in the following March, owing to the news of the escape of Napoleon from Elba. One Dr. Weissenbach, of Vienna, furnished the libretto entitled 'The glorious moment' ('Der glorieiche Augenblick'), having for its subject the homage of Vienna to her illustrious guests. 'It is not difficult to believe,' says Sir George Grove, 'that the work was somewhat against the grain, and that when he [Beethoven] jokingly complains of his task, and speaks of his effort to set Weissenbach's platitudes to music as an "heroic" one, his joke had a grim reference to the "heroic" Symphony in which he had portrayed the captive Emperor ten years before.'

Beethoven composed the music in a few weeks, its first performance taking place on November 29, 1814, in the Hall of the Imperial Redout, which had been specially placed at the composer's disposal for the purpose. He himself issued the invitations to the Sovereigns. The programme of the concert, at which upwards of 6,000 persons were present, included his seventh Symphony and the so-called 'Battle of Vittoria,' in addition to the cantata, and the huge audience were intensely satisfied. One drawback alone was felt—the absence of the greatest man of the Congress, Wellington, as he did not arrive in Vienna some days after the second performance. After two subsequent performances to that already mentioned—on December 2 and Christmas Day—the cantata lay dormant until after Beethoven's death. In 1836 Haslinger published it with two texts: (1) the original, and (2) on 'The Praise of Music' ('Preis der Tonkunst'), the latter by Rochlitz, the well-known critic and poet who, in 1822, had shown his libretto to Beethoven. An English translation of the work, entitled 'The Praise of Music,' was made by the late Thomas Oliphant. The first performance of the work in England was that given by the Vocal Society, on January 15, 1838, under the direction of Edward Taylor. Choral Societies might follow the example of the students of the Royal College of Music by performing Beethoven's 'The Praise of Music.'

We hope it may be inferred from the title of a highly interesting article on 'A Waning Glory of England; the Madrigal,' by Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland, which appeared in The Nineteenth Century for February, that the glory has not yet irretrievably waned. The history of the madrigal, which Mr. Maitland re-tells with so much special knowledge and literary skill, is one that makes the bosom of the artistically meek Englishman swell with conscious virtue and honest pride, and induces him to feel that what was may be again. The triumphs of our own time may yet rival the 'Triumphs of Oriana.' One wonders whether the English madrigal school would have existed if that ever-to-be-respected singing man at St. Paul's Cathedral, Nicholas Yonge, had not held those 'athomes' at which he introduced 'the Bookes of that kind yeeresly sent me out of Italy and other places' (from the preface to 'Musica Transalpina'). Most madrigals are in at least five parts. Mr. Maitland states his belief that this minimum was an evolution from the exigencies of the final cadence.

The inner part with its canto fermo must descend one step to the tonic. Another inner or top part must ascend one step to the tonic, and the bass part must also find its home on that point of repose. Therefore in four-part writing the final chord must do without a third or a fifth. So rather than die this uninteresting death, the old writers chose to write throughout in at least five parts. This theory reminds us of the story of the origin of roast pork. But in both cases we have reason to be grateful that so small a cause produced such a gratifying result. A fine six-part madrigal, 'A Reverend Memorial of that Honorable True Gentleman, Henry Noel, Esquire,' by Thos. Morley, and another in five parts, 'The Love of Change,' by the Rev. Richard Carlton, 1601, are printed as illustrations in the article. Mr. Maitland lays it down that 'one of the parts in any true madrigal must conform to the usage of the ecclesiastical modes,' and that 'the modal part is the key to the composition, and the most important feature of the form.' This may be true as to the basis of the Italian Madrigal of the Palestrina type, but the English Madrigal school treated this feature with great freedom.

'Ecclesiastical music found in the Burgh Charter-room of Dundee' is the title of an interesting paper read before the Society of Antiquaries in Scotland by Mr. A. H. Miller, of the Dundee Advertiser, and reprinted from the Proceedings. The paper describes some sheets of music forming part of a Roman Missal which one Robert Wedderburne, in 1575, had used as 'stiffening' for the cover of his Protocol Book! Mr. Wedderburne—doubtless a gentleman of a very utilitarian mind—evidently did not regard this book (the Missal) of 'the auld religioun' in the category of 'Gude and Godlie Ballatis.'

Hector Berlioz, in a letter to Mlle. Louise Bertin, gives his opinion of Cimarosa's 'Matrimonio segreto' and Mozart's 'Figaro,' and in terms none too favourable, 'If you were to play me something of Bach's,' he says, 'I should be capable of flying from his fugues and leaving you alone with his Passion!' This was written somewhere about 1842. And shortly before that, viz., in an article on a Conservatoire concert in the Revue et Gazette Musicale of 1840, he refers to an air with chorus from the 'Matthew' Passion. Berlioz admires the sad mood of the music in keeping with the words, but he adds: 'Why is one forced to recognise harsh, harmonic effects and false relations, all the more offensive seeing that the passages in which they occur are only written in two parts?' Of bars six and seven in the symphony of the air in question—viz., 'Ich will bei meinem Jesus wachen'—he complains that the D of the bass rising to the E flat bearing a chord of dominant seventh, and consequently D flat unprepared, is, to say the least, extremely painful.' Here is the passage:

With such primitive ideas of harmony it is not surprising that Berlioz could not endure the bold progressions of the great master. As to the 'only two parts' of which he complains, it reminds one of Robert Franz's expression, 'a duet between flute and double-bass in a Bach cantata!' Berlioz never studied Bach's scores, or he would have known that the great Cantor intended harpsichord or organ to fill in harmonies between those parts. In many ways Berlioz was a great critic, but only of music from Weber onwards.

The name of Berlioz again appears in the Revue et Gazette Musicale for the year 1840, but in a different capacity. It is interesting to find him as a subscriber to the Beethoven monument proposed to be erected at Bonn. A first list of subscribers' names is given, among them being Berlioz, who is down for 20 francs. That list is somewhat of a curiosity; it includes the following well-known musicians: Doehler, Kastner, Artôt, and Panofka. The smallest subscription was 1 franc, and the largest 31 francs. A certain Védèche, of Montpellier, contributes 4 fr. 40 c. The whole amounted to only 259 fr. 40 c. 'Voilà,' says the writer of the note, 'toute la somme que nous avons pu recueillir en France pour le monument de Beethoven.' Two additional lists are however given, yet all three together only amounted to 457 fr. 90 c.

'The London Banks Orchestral Society' is a recently-formed organization which deserves a welcome and all encouragement. The President is Mr. Felix Schuster, Governor of the Union Bank of London and Smith's Bank, Limited, and the Secretary is Mr. T. V. Philipps, 16, Finsbury Circus. May all success attend the efforts of these musical bankers, and may all their notes be as true as those which pass through their hands in many scores day by day.

The University of Oxford has conferred the degree of Doctor of Music, honoris causa, upon Sir Edward Elgar. The ceremony took place on February 6, when Sir Hubert Parry, in a brief and humorous Latin speech, presented the recipient of the degree to the Vice-Chancellor, the Rev. Dr. W. W. Merry, Rector of Lincoln College.

Two distinguished German writers on music have recently responded to the call of the inevitable 'messenger'—Alfred Dörfel, who died at Leipzig, aged seventy-four, and Robert Eitner, who died at Templin, aged seventy-two—both savants, singularly enough, paying the debt of nature on the same day, January 22. Dr. Dörfel is noted for his bibliographical learning and ceaseless industry, e.g. his exhaustive 'History of the Gewandhaus Concerts,' and Eitner's name will go down to posterity as the compiler of the invaluable 'Quellen-Lexion' so worthily associated with his name.

Dr. Joseph C. Bridge, organist of Chester Cathedral, was presented, on February 8, with an album containing a complimentary address, a service of plate, and a cheque for 200 guineas, as a mark of appreciation of the services he has rendered to the art of music in the city. The Mayor presided over an influential audience which included the Bishop, the Recorder (Sir Horatio Lloyd), and Mr. Robert Yerburch, M.P. Congratulations to Dr. Bridge.

Dr. Frederic H. Cowen has been engaged to conduct two concerts to be given on the Handel Orchestra at the Crystal Palace, one on Good Friday, the other in June. We are glad to hear that the Scottish Orchestra has had another successful season under the direction of Dr. Cowen.

By command of the King of the Belgians, M. Gevaert, the eminent Director of the Conservatoire of Music at Brussels, has composed music for the new National Hymn entitled 'Expansion belge,' written by the Belgian poet Anthéunis.

BEETHOVEN'S CONCERTO FOR PIANOFORTE AND ORCHESTRA, No. 5, IN E FLAT (OP. 73).

BY SIR GEORGE GROVE, C.B.*

This is the last of the five Concertos with which the great master alike of orchestra and pianoforte enriched the répertoire of music. There are indeed six, if we include Beethoven's interesting transcription of his Violin Concerto for Pianoforte, which was played (for the first time in this country) at the Crystal Palace Saturday Concert of December 7, 1872, by Miss Agnes Zimmermann. Of the five Concertos, the first two (in B flat, Op. 19, and in C, Op. 15) are early and, for Beethoven, comparatively unimportant works. The third, C minor (Op. 37), is more remarkable, and in more than one passage reveals the great master. It is, in fact, the bridge from the concertos of his immature age to those of his full manhood—the fourth and fifth, which belong to his very finest and grandest achievements, and hold the same place among compositions for pianoforte and orchestra that his 'Coriolan' and 'Leonora' do among overtures, or the C minor among symphonies. A note at the end of these remarks tells the curious story of another pianoforte concerto, written by Beethoven some years after that which is now before us, and unhappily lost for ever.

There are some works in which the poet, the painter, or the sculptor has, by common consent, reached the very summit of his art, and on which there is only one universal verdict of applause. Such are the Madonna di San Sisto, the Venus of Milo, Milton's 'Lycidas,' or Wordsworth's 'Ode on the Intimations of Immortality.' And such is the E flat Concerto of Beethoven. The key which the master has selected for this great composition is that of the Eroica Symphony, two of his noblest Quartets, two Pianoforte Trios, the Septet, and no fewer than four Pianoforte Sonatas. It is a singular fact, to be noticed in passing, that three consecutive works (consecutive in the order of composition, though not in their Opus numbers, which are often arbitrary) should be all in the same key, namely, the Sonata called 'Les Adieux, l'Absence et le Retour' (Op. 81a), this Concerto (Op. 73), and the so-called 'Harp Quartet' (Op. 74). But who shall solve the mysteries of keys? or say why Beethoven should have characterized that of B minor as 'black,' or that of four flats as 'Barbaresco' rather than 'Amoroso'; or should have written two Symphonies so entirely different as No. 6 and No. 8 in the key of F; or why Schubert should have chosen such remote keys to write in as G flat and G sharp minor; † why none of Mozart's forty-nine Symphonies should be in A, while two out of four of Mendelssohn's are in that tonality.

The autograph of the Concerto is preserved at the Royal Library, Berlin, and bears the following title in Beethoven's own hand:

* Klavier Konzert 1809 von L v Bthvn.

It is dedicated to his friend and patron the Archduke Rodolph, who enjoys the distinction of having had his name inscribed on the title-pages of no less than nine of the great musician's finest and choicest works. The list is a truly remarkable one—the Missa Solennis in D; the Solo Sonatas, Ops. 81, 106, and 111

* Similar analyses by Sir George Grove (author of 'Beethoven and his Nine Symphonies') have appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES as follows: Beethoven's 'Leonora' Overture, August, 1903; Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' Overture, November, 1903; Schubert's great Symphony in C, August, 1904; and Mendelssohn's 'Scottish' Symphony, October and November, 1904.

(Beethoven's 'Last Words' on the pianoforte); the fourth and fifth Pianoforte Concertos; the great B flat Trio, Op. 97; the Quartet-Fugue, Op. 133; and the splendid Sonata for Pianoforte and Violin, Op. 96.

The Concerto asserts its originality and dignity at the very commencement. Instead of beginning, as was the usual previous custom, with a long orchestral passage in which the themes are given out and developed before the entrance of the solo instrument—a plan which he followed in his first three concertos; or again, instead of opening, as does the G major Concerto, with an unaccompanied passage for the pianoforte, Beethoven has devised a happy medium which is very original and suited to the genius of the instrument, and starts the composition with the greatest éclat. The movement opens with a kind of prelude—the chord of E flat is sounded by the full orchestra, which is followed by a passage of arpeggios and scales on that chord for the pianoforte; then the chord of A flat is sounded and similarly followed; and thirdly the chord of B flat. The passages for the pianoforte increase in brilliancy and boldness on each occasion, and at last end in the chord of the tonic, E flat, and in the principal theme of the movement. Thus the pianoforte at once makes itself felt as the mistress of the situation; and whatever may occur afterwards, no one can forget that he is listening to a concerto for the pianoforte. Among the many things which distinguish this and the fourth Concertos from the three which preceded them, nothing perhaps is so obviously and immediately appreciable as this.

In the B flat Concerto, for example, the solo instrument makes its first appearance, piano, and in a weak and ineffective part of the register, almost as if shrinking from public notice. How different from those lovely, magical, speaking chords of G major, with which the solo instrument addresses us at the opening of the fourth Concerto; or the truly splendid start of that now before us—fortissimo—pedal down—grand arpeggios flying all over the keyboard—ad libitum—espressivo—everything that can give the grandest effect! 'Incessu patuit Dea'—'She comes, she comes, the goddess comes!' And the same happy result of Beethoven's long experience is continued afterwards; for when the orchestra has finished its development of the themes of the movement, and the serious work of the pianoforte is to begin, it is in no timid passage of single notes that it comes before us, but after a run of two octaves through every semitone of the scale to the upper E flat, it fastens upon the subject with both hands, full chords in each, with the most manifest intention of being heard. Can anything be more superb than such treatment? Superb indeed! and yet not less reasonable. Beethoven, with all his imagination, was eminently practical, and the case now before us is one instance among many of the manner in which he profited by experience. Another fact may be mentioned, which distinguishes the E flat Concerto from the previous ones, namely, that in this work the entrance of the pianoforte is never marked in the score as 'Solo,' as it invariably is in the others. If this is not the result of mere accident, it would seem to show that in this masterpiece Beethoven placed the pianoforte on the same level with the other members of the band—in fact, made it an orchestral instrument.

1. Allegro.
2. Adagio un poco moto.
3. Rondo. Allegro ma non troppo.

I. The Allegro, as is the case with the first movement of Beethoven's other Concertos, is arranged on the plan of the first movement of a symphony. The melody of the first subject, given out in full harmony by the strings, and then taken up by the clarinets, is as follows:

The working of this furnishes a good example of Beethoven's way of breaking up his themes and using the different joints or fragments as independent ideas. The turn in the first bar, and the crotchets in the second, are used over and over again, as melody, as accompaniment, as bass, till the movement is saturated with the sound of them.

The first subject is soon followed by the second:

—given out first staccato and in E flat minor in the strings (as above), and then legato in E flat major in the horns, as if Beethoven could not make up his mind as to either mode or medium, and so gave it us in both. The second solo, answering to the 'working out' of a symphony-movement, begins in G. The first portion of it consists of imitations in the woodwind instruments of phrases based on the first two bars of the principal subject (No. 1), accompanied by the pianoforte in brilliant semiquaver arpeggios. In the second portion the pianoforte has a new passage—possibly a development of a previous one—incessant scales up and down, with an accompaniment in the bassoon, drawn from a previous figure and beautifully prolonged; and after this the figure quoted in No. 5 is charmingly imitated and played with, the whole going through many keys. For the third solo the original key and subjects are returned to.

Of other subsidiary themes—partly independent, partly arising out of these—the two following are very much used in the elaboration of the movement, rising in importance as it proceeds:

and—

But there is one melody, coming in as it were quite by chance, just to finish one of the periods, which adds a tenderness hitherto wanting in the composition, and too lovely not to be quoted :

No. 5. Violins in octaves.

The three first bars are a kind of introduction, settling down into the beautiful though short figure itself. Five notes (a) amplified on repetition into ten (b)—but where else will you find such a five or such a ten? And listen for them later on in the movement, where Beethoven, as it were repenting of the cursory way in which he had dismissed his darling little creation, brings it back again and fondles it for a few minutes—first in the pianoforte, then in the clarinet, then in the pianoforte again, then in the oboe, and so on, till he makes us as much in love with it as he was himself. One thing in this Concerto is very remarkable, namely, the audacity with which Beethoven repeats his themes and phrases. The same thing is elsewhere noticeable—especially in the Violin Concerto and the Pastoral Symphony—but it is nowhere more observable than here, and it explains why he was so extraordinarily careful in choosing and correcting his themes, so insatiable in refining and polishing them. He wrote and rewrote them until he had brought them to that form that would exactly express his meaning, and enable him to bring them back over and over again, each recurrence only proving the depth of meaning and beauty that they contain.

It was formerly the rule to allow the solo-player in a concerto an opportunity of making a display of his original skill in an extempore 'cadence,' towards the end of the movement, where the orchestra paused for that purpose. In this case Beethoven has, for the first time, dispensed with the custom, and has inserted a solo passage of his own, with the words non si fa una cadenza ma s'attaca subito il seguente—'do not make a Cadence but go on at once to the following passage.' Whether this was due to the inability of Czerny (then a youth of nineteen), by whom the Concerto was performed at Vienna, to extemporise a Cadence, or whether, as is more probable, it arose from Beethoven's own wish to preserve the unity of so splendid a movement from any chance of being damaged by injudicious improvisations on its themes, certain it is that the presence of the composer's own Cadence forms one of the original features which distinguish this piece. At any rate, it gave the death-blow to the old practice. Mendelssohn, Schumann, Brahms, have all followed the example of their great predecessor, and written their own Cadences.

Beethoven, however, was not content with writing the Cadence himself, but he makes it still more a novelty by accompanying the latter half of it with the orchestra. He had already written a Cadence with an accompaniment for the drum, to his arrangement of the Violin Concerto for the pianoforte; but the accompaniment is there confined to the drum, while here other instruments are employed. First the horns come in with the second subject, and the strings pizzicato; then they are joined by the other wind instruments, the violins and basses having snatches of the first subject, until the Cadence ends in the grand tutti of the whole band. It may be remarked en passant that Bach, who never neglected an opportunity of anticipating his successors, has done so in this instance, as will be seen in a Trio for keyed instrument and strings published by the Bach-Gesellschaft of Leipzig, where the Cadenza is fully written out. Of this, however, Beethoven can have known nothing. It is one of the many cases where les beaux esprits se rencontrent.

II. The second movement (Adagio un poco moto) is a noble hymn, which, though not so entitled, might as appropriately be headed Canzone di ringraziamento offerta a una divinità da un guarito, as the noble strain which Beethoven has so inscribed in his 15th Quartet. It is in the key of B major (connected enharmonically with that of E flat), and is in the form of quasi-variations. The theme, a strain of great beauty and serenity, is given out by the violins, which remain muted during the whole Adagio :

No. 6. Adagio un poco moto,
Violins con sordini.

It is then taken up by the pianoforte, and accompanied in various lovely figures, and with an astonishing transition into the key of D major. The third and culminating repetition is in semiquavers and octaves for both hands throughout, with the most touching effect. Beethoven does not, however, allow us long to remain in the ecstatic frame of mind induced by this beautiful treatment; but by a very characteristic change he, with one touch of horn and bassoon, brings the key from B natural to E flat, and without a pause introduces the theme of the final Rondo on the pianoforte—we quote the melody :

No. 7.

III. The Finale, an Allegro, is as full of energy and gaiety as the other movements are of dignity and sentiment. There is, however, a second theme, for pianoforte solo, of more passionate character, contrasting well with the animated spirit of the chief subject, and more particularly with the rapid octave passage which immediately announces it:

No. 8.

Pianoforte Solo.

Of the many other interesting features of the Rondo we can only notice one—if that be called 'one' which includes several. We allude to a phrase—

No. 9.

Horns & Trumpets.

which appears in the orchestra at the end of the first period of the movement. It is repeated until it becomes very prominent, and ends by handing over the rhythmical figure with which the horns and trumpets divide its two portions (see a in the quotation, No. 9) to the drum—an old favourite of the master; while it appears itself in the pianoforte in a novel though perfectly recognisable form. This duet of pianoforte and drum, 17 bars pianissimo—the pianoforte descending from the topmost heights to the keynote of the movement, lessening its force by a continual diminuendo, and its speed to Adagio, while the drum maintains the murmur of the rhythmical phrase alluded to—is a triumph of refined and original humour.

Although composed in 1809, this Concerto appears to have remained unheard till the winter of 1811. The first performance actually recorded was by Friedrich Schneider at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig, on November 28 of that year; but the first time the work appeared in public in its native air and under the eye of its composer was in the following February at Vienna, when it was played by Carl Czerny, Beethoven's pupil, at a curious combination of concert and picture-exhibition, for the benefit of a charity, and where its length deprived it of the effect which it could hardly have failed under proper circumstances to produce. In the programme it is sandwiched-in between a Cavatina from 'Adelasia and Alerano,' by Mdlle. Sessi, a débutante, and a picture of Nicolo Pousin, representing Esther fainting before Ahasuerus!

The sketches of the Adagio which record the steps in the conception and formation of its principal theme are most interesting as well as instructive. They are printed in Nottebohm's 'Zweite Beethoveniana' (1887). Beethoven first proposed C as the key of the movement, and in that key we find the first attempt at the melody:

A little farther on he has got into the key of B, but he has also dropped some of the distinctive features of the tune—

Next, still in B, he tries a further variation—

Finally, we come much nearer the present form—

It is touching to see how gradually this great inventor arrives at his complete form, and how insatiable he is until his end is fully attained. The way in which the different points of the melody are laboured at will strike everyone, especially the figure in bars 5 and 6 of the finished subject, and the chromatic passage in bar 7 of the same.

The E flat Concerto is, as we observed at the beginning of these remarks, the last of Beethoven's works in this department. But it only escaped this position by a very narrow accident, since sketches for a sixth, in the key of D, have been discovered, belonging to the years 1814 and 1815, a date long subsequent to that of the E flat Concerto and after the Seventh and Eighth Symphonies and the B flat Pianoforte Trio had been composed. Not only do as many as fifty pages of sketches for this Concerto exist, but no less than thirty sheets, or one hundred and twenty pages, of the complete score of the first movement were finished—that is, virtually the whole of the movement. The pianoforte does not actually start the composition, as it does in the Fourth and Fifth Concertos, but enters after ten bars of orchestra. We learn all this from Mr. Nottebohm, the great Beethoven explorer, who also informs us that the sheets of the score have in time become widely scattered in various collections.*

[Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat appears to have been first performed in England at the concert of the Philharmonic Society, on May 8, 1820. The work was announced in the programme as—

Concerto, Pianoforte, Mr. NEATE (never performed in this country) Beethoven.

The soloist on that occasion was Charles Neate, one of the few English musicians who made the personal acquaintance of Beethoven. The Quarterly Magazine and Review—the only English periodical then devoted to music—thus criticised the work: 'A concerto, by the same author [Beethoven], was performed for the first time in this country by Mr. Neate. Beethoven wrote it expressly for himself, but his slovenly habits of execution were unequal to the task. The tutti introduction is fine, and the executive parts for the pianoforte very various, very difficult, and at times very effective, though frequently incongruous. Mr. Neate played with remarkable brilliancy, and was greeted with never-ending applause.'—ED. M.T.]

Church and Organ Music.

A FAVOURITE ANTHEM.

'O taste, and see, how gracious the Lord is,' Anthem for four voices, composed expressly for, and inscribed to the members of the Special Sunday evening choir of St. Paul's Cathedral, By JOHN GOSS, composer to Her Majesty's Chapels Royal and Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral.

London: Novello & Co.

Thus reads the original title-page of one of the most beautiful and devotional anthems ever written. So perfect is it in melodic flow and harmonic design that it seems almost sacrilegious to point to any technical features. But one cannot help being struck by the simplicity and tenderness that characterize these heart-moving strains: the step-wise tread of the melody, the points of imitation—e.g., bar 12, alto, answering the two initial notes of the soprano at a fourth below—the dignity of the bass, and the tunefulness of all the parts which rejoices the hearts of all the singers. Even the chromatic nature of 'the lions do lack' section is irreproachable as a subtle contrast to the prevailing sentiment of the Psalmist's invitation and promise of a good thing to those who accept it. And then after the exciting working-up towards the end, how exquisitely falls on the ear the opening strain, sung softly by the sopranos and accompanied by the lower voices—an accompaniment in the nature of a confirming undercurrent of harmony. It adds to the beauty of this contrast if bars 6 to 10 from the end are sung unaccompanied, the organ entering at the forte 'Blessed is the man that trusteth in Him.'

'O taste, and see' appears to have been first sung on Sunday, February 15, 1863, at St. Paul's Cathedral. Here is an account—from the Guardian of February 18, 1863—of its introduction:

The Anthem, 'O taste, and see, how gracious the Lord is' (34th Psalm 8, 9, 10) was also sung for the first time at these services. To these words Mr. Goss has composed graceful and expressive music, admirably suited for performance by the numerous and chiefly amateur choir for which it was recently written by the talented theorist and composer. This little anthem is in good form; the music lies well within the compass of ordinary voices, the tenor part not ranging higher than D, and the harmony is chiefly diatonic. Both the anthem and the chant had evidently been carefully rehearsed by the patient and energetic choirmaster Mr. Henry Buckland.

It would be impossible to overestimate the pleasure this anthem has given to countless singers in churches of all denominations wherever the English language is spoken, or attempt to estimate its value as a spiritual up-lift to the hearts of millions of worshippers.

'Eton under Hornby,' in the January Fortnightly Review, contains some amusing 'anecdotes and reminiscences.' Here is an extract referring to chapel services in the late sixties or early seventies at Eton:

The College Chapel, it must be owned, was often the scene of a good deal that could not, even in those days of lax discipline, be regarded as proper behaviour. It was the practice in the early part of Dr. Hornby's headmastership (wisely abolished by him later) to have a service—a full choral service—on each of the three weekly half-holidays, and the effect of this on the minds of the boys who were, of course, thirsting to be free for the river or cricket field, may readily be imagined. Worship there was literally none: the sole thought was how to get the service over. Against the text of every anthem, in every anthem-book in the chapel, was written in pencil, corrected and tested by generations of impatient listeners, the time taken in its performance. The most popular of the Chaplains ('Conducts,' they were called at Eton) was one whose fleetness in gabbling through the service at breakneck speed was phenomenal, and had the extra merit of occasionally delighting the boys by an accidental transposition of words, as when he would adjure the congregation to 'Rend your garments and not your hearts'—a version of the text much more likely to obtain fulfilment at Eton. The members of the professional choir, too, were well known individually to their unwilling audience, and each of them had his nickname; the bass, for example, whose voice and figure were alike of ample proportions, was universally known as 'Thunderguts.'

'Thunderguts' is typically Etonic.

'WESLEY'S WILDERNESS.'

Mr. Robert Taylor, of Brighton, writes:

I have followed with much interest the various expressions of opinion regarding the reading of the Recit., 'Then shall the lame man leap as an hart.' I venture to add my humble testimony to the fact that in the early 'Sixties' the note sung in the Midland Cathedrals was C sharp (not D sharp) on the word 'man.' Indeed, I never remember to have heard it otherwise, and I should be a little surprised to hear the D sharp, having such a distinct recollection of the two C's. And dare I venture to suggest—even after Sir Frederick Bridge has expressed his determination to continue to use the D sharp to the word 'man'—that the C sharp, D sharp, E sharp progression is more suggestive of a 'Crawl' than the 'leap' caused by the interval C sharp to E sharp; and, moreover, does not my 'crawl' suggestion destroy the vigour of the passage altogether? I think it does.

'HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN': THE NEW EDITION.

One of Sir Frederick Ouseley's oldest friends writes to protest against the unwarrantable alterations which have been made in Ouseley's tune 'Hereford,' No. 98. 'I was horrified,' he says, 'to find that the beautiful ending is marred by the substitution of an A for B flat in the melody. The harmonies also have been greatly altered. Ouseley did not authorize these changes, which I can only regard as a piece of great impudence on the part of the musical editor of the book.'

THE ETHICS OF ORGAN-BUILDING.

There has recently come to our knowledge an instance of the unfair methods adopted by a certain firm of organ-builders in the endeavour to oust a rival. An order for an organ had actually been given, when this firm, knowing that the order had been placed, offered to build apparently the same instrument at a lower cost. The church authorities very properly declined to avail themselves of this un-English way of doing business. Another unpleasant feature connected with the building of church organs is that of commission. We understand that 15 per cent. is offered by some firms to organists if they will only give them (Messrs. A, B, or C) 'the job,' with the result that builders of repute are often unfairly handicapped in sending in their estimates, because—to their credit be it said—they will not countenance such bribery. The prevalence of these undesirable methods prompts the suggestion that some of the various examining bodies should insert in their papers a few questions on commercial morality.

Mr. Christopher Edwin Cumming Willing, a former organist of All Saints' Church, Margaret Street, and The Foundling, and organist of the Sacred Harmonic Society, died on December 1 last aged seventy-four years. Mr. Willing—the news of whose death has only just reached us—is well-known as the composer of the tune associated with the hymn 'We are but little children weak.'

Mr. J. T. Lightwood, Hope House, Lytham, would be glad if any reader of THE MUSICAL TIMES could tell him of the whereabouts of a book entitled 'Hymns and Sacred Poems,' published at Dublin in 1749; it is said to contain (at the end) a few tunes, including 'Irish.' He is also anxious to obtain the melody of a song by G. Manwell, entitled 'O sing again that melody,' published in 1837.

The Manchester branch of the Guild of Organists held its first Festival at Manchester Cathedral on February 15, when ten choirs took part. The singers numbered about 300, of whom about 250 were surprised, and the singing was very effective and impressive. The Canticles were sung to Stanford in B flat, and the anthem was Elvey's 'O give thanks.' Dr. Kendrick Pyne, President of the Guild, presided at the organ.

The opening of the new organ in the City Hall, Glasgow, took place on February 20. A concert was preceded by a short organ recital given by Mr. Thomas Berry, who played the following pieces: Grand Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Pastorale, Guilman; 'Jubilee' Overture (introducing the Austrian Hymn), Haslinger. The organ is a four-manual instrument built by Messrs. Lewis & Co., Ltd.

Mr. T. Tertius Noble, organist of York Minster, was the principal guest at the second annual dinner of the Huddersfield and District Organists' Association held on January 27, at which the president, Mr. J. W. Pearce, presided. During the hour previous to the dinner, Mr. H. Percy Richardson, of St. Chad's, Headingley, Leeds, gave an organ recital to the members in Highfield Chapel.

Bach's 'Trauer Ode,' for solo voices, chorus, orchestra and organ, was sung (in German) at St. John's College Chapel, Cambridge, on Sunday evening, February 19, under the direction of Mr. C. B. Rootham. Dr. Alan Gray played Handel's Organ Concerto in B flat.

JOHN READING.

The following note about the reputed composer of 'Adeste Fideles' may be of interest, if it has not been printed before. It is written in an old handwriting (I suppose of the end of the 18th century) in a copy of the Fourth Book of Playford's 'Theater of Music,' 1687, now in the Bodleian Library, being part of the Douce collection. It occurs on p. 5, and is written against a song, 'Our Gamester,' by Mr. J. Reading:

His son was organist of St. Dunstan's Church and Master to Stanley. He was living [in] the year 1750; a little red-faced old man with bleared Eyes. He used to go to the Temple Church of a Sunday evening among others to hear his pupil play, & was proud to own him.

This was evidently written by some one who knew something about the younger Reading, and is proof, I think, that he was the son of the contributor to the 'Theater of Music' (whoever he was); a fact which is not mentioned in the 'Dictionary of National Biography,' nor in Grove.

It may be worth noting that the composer of 'Adeste Fideles' seems to have heard and admired the air 'Pensa ad amare,' from Handel's 'Ottone' (1723). This was one of the airs for Durastanti, especially mentioned by Burney (Hist. IV., 287) as being 'favourites with all the performers on the German-flute in the kingdom,' 'long after they had done their duty at the opera-house.' The particular passage which is recalled by 'Adeste Fideles' is this:

più che do-ver, a-mor si

chie di più che . . do-ver,

G. E. P. ARKWRIGHT.

Dr. H. A. Harding has given at the Guildhall School of Music, during the past month, a course of lectures on 'Musical Form and Analysis.' The syllabus of the first lecture, delivered on February 1, at which students were advised to bring with them Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonatas, was as follows:—What is meant by Musical Form? The necessity for Form in all art work—architecture, painting, sculpture, literature, &c. Reasons why Form is especially necessary in music. Musical art not imitative, not the expression of external surroundings. Inspiration without method futile. Modern tendencies—predominance of colour at expense of clearness of outline—emotional expressiveness versus design—'Programme music'; dangerous fascination of this for immature students. Complete knowledge of Form required for Musical Degrees, a most salutary provision. The result of the neglect of Musical Form in the case of musicians, professional and amateur, executant, theorist and composer. The value of Academic training—especially for Degrees in Music. Suggested preliminary knowledge antecedent to the study of Form, and the best method of acquiring it. Value of the power of analysis, examination of the works of the great Masters recommended in preference to an exclusive study of text-books.

Byron. Poem (No. 6, Op. 30) for Orchestra and Chorus.
Words by Keats. Music by Josef Holbrooke.
[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Mr. Josef Holbrooke is one of our composers from whom works of artistic importance may be expected, for his compositions testify to boldness of conception, originality of idea, and musicianly attainment. 'Byron' is one of a series of compositions of which a distinguishing feature is the important position occupied by the orchestra in relation to the choral section. The form of the work is modelled on Beethoven's Choral Symphony and Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise, but the orchestral section is more continuous and in closer touch with the poem. In Mr. Holbrooke's 'Byron,' the purely instrumental part comprises half the entire composition, and is so arranged that it can be played as a separate piece, for which purpose a Coda is provided—a concession to practical utility so rarely found in a young composer as to be deserving of notice. After a few introductory chords there comes a version of the theme subsequently allied to the line which theme appropriately forms the chief subject of the work. Another feature of the instrumental portion is a passage in which the clarinet is assigned an important part. The whole conception is poetical, and one that excites much interest. Those who have heard the composer's 'Queen Mab' poem—originally produced at the Leeds Festival last autumn—will remember the charm and effectiveness of the choral ending. The same merits will be found in 'Byron.' The triple repetition of the poet's name at the opening of the choral section—first piano and subsequently mezzo-forte and fortissimo—is a happy inspiration, and the vocal part-writing is not only grateful to sing, but possesses great tranquil beauty. 'Byron' was first performed by the Leeds Choral Union on December 7 last—we hope soon to hear it in London.

A Handbook to Chopin's Works. By G. C. Ashton Jonson.
[William Heinemann.]

The title-page of this industriously compiled book states that the volume is 'for the use of concert-goers, pianists, and pianola-players.' The last named would appear to have brought into existence Mr. Jonson's pages, for, he says, 'owing to the invention of the pianola and the fact that all Chopin's works, including even the least important of the posthumous compositions, are now available for that instrument, the whole domain of his music is for the first time open to all.' Now of all composers for the pianoforte the music of Chopin would suffer by being pianolaized, however skilfully it were thus mechanically revolutionized; and as for 'the far-reaching educational value of the pianola, and the vastly-increased artistic pleasure to be obtained from its intelligent use' (pace our author), we are decidedly of opinion that the 'intelligent use' of well-trained fingers set in motion by a musician possessed of a highly poetic temperament is worth all the pianolaists in the world in the interpretation of Chopin's music.

The chief value of this Handbook lies in its anthological nature. Mr. Jonson therein sets forth, under their opus numbers, the history (so far as it is known) of each Chopin composition, which is followed by the opinions of various critics and others thereupon, the names of the writers including Schumann, Liszt, Hans von Bülow, Niecks, Karasowski, Kleczynski, J. W. Davison (not Davidson, as stated on p. 14), Hadow, Huneker, and others. 'This book,' says the author, 'is not intended to be read straight through and then placed on the shelf. It is a handbook, a kind of musical "Baedeker," a guide through the "Thoughtland and Dreamland" of Chopin's kingdom.' This description of 'what the book is' is fully borne out by a perusal of its informing pages, which many players of Chopin—and what pianist, amateur or professional, is not?—may study with profit and interest.

In the section headed 'Chopin's life and work' (one of the chapters forming the forty pages of introductory matter) the author makes this astounding statement (p. xxiv.): 'The revolution of 1848 broke out in Paris, and Chopin came to England. He stayed in London till the summer, when he went for a tour in Scotland with Mendelssohn.' That this travelling companionship was impossible is proved by the fact that Mendelssohn died on November 4, 1847! This slip should not, however, detract from the value of a book that is a most useful addition to Chopin literature in the English language.

Good News from Ghent. Choral Ballad. The poem by Robert Browning. Music composed by F. Kilvington Hattersley. [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

'There is no sort of historical foundation for the poem. I wrote it under the bulwark of a vessel off the African coast, after I had been at sea long enough to appreciate even the fancy of a gallop on the back of a certain good horse, York, then in my stable at home.' Thus the poet records; but the avowal, far from diminishing interest in the 'Good News from Ghent,' increases it, for the ride is so vividly described that it testifies with peculiar force to the power of the imagination to invest its creations with the semblance of truth. As to what the good news consisted of, and why it was necessary to run so wild a race with Father Time, is not revealed. All we are told is that the riders were three, and of these only he who tells the story reached his destination. No better subject could be found for a choral ballad. The paces of a horse can be powerfully suggested in musical terms, and the insistent beat of the rhythm, and crescendi and diminuendi readily lend themselves to exciting dynamic effects. Of these resources Mr. Hattersley has made excellent use. The vocal parts (S.A.T.B.) are melodious and spirited; moreover they are well supported by the accompaniment, which also imparts a realism to the ride by the deft use of rhythmic devices affording scope for the composer's unbridled fancy. The necessary contrast to the ceaseless gallop of the horses is secured at the points where two of the steeds fall exhausted by the way, and these incidents are made further impressive by harmonic transitions. Choral societies in need of a short, spirited work could hardly do better than deliver the 'Good News from Ghent' as set to music by Mr. Hattersley.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Two works practically new to London formed the programme of the Royal Choral Society's concert at the Albert Hall on January 26—Berlioz's 'Childhood of Christ' and Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Cantata 'The Witch's Daughter,' composed for the Leeds Festival of 1904. Sir Alexander's Cantata met with a distinctly favourable reception. The first scene, with its humorous conclusion, elicited prolonged and hearty applause, and the dignity and breadth of the chorus, 'Immortal Love,' were fully appreciated. As at Leeds, the work was conducted by its composer, but on this occasion it was sung with more verve and finish, the result greatly increasing the significance of the music. The soloists were Madame Sobrino and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies.

Berlioz's 'Sacred Trilogy,' 'The Childhood of Christ,' was sung according to the new English translation of the text by Paul England. This characteristic work was conducted by Sir Frederick Bridge, who secured a very effective interpretation of the French master's picturesque and melodious music. In addition to the vocalists named above, the following took part: Mr. Dan Price, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Frederick Randalow.

The performance of Berlioz's 'Faust' on February 16 needs only to be recorded, as this work has long been familiar to the choristers and is so much liked by them that they may be said to be heard at their best in its fantastic and realistic choruses. It should be recorded, however, that Mr. Paul England's version of the text was used, the excellence of which contributed in a notable degree to the effectiveness of the interpretation under Sir Frederick Bridge's vivacious direction.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

'THE APOSTLES.'

The London Choral Society gave a very creditable performance of Elgar's Oratorio 'The Apostles' on February 13 at the Queen's Hall. Great pains had been spent on the preparation in order to realise the large ideas of the composer. A special contingent of the Dulwich Philharmonic Society provided the chorus within the Temple, and Mr. James Bates's School of Choristers the music of the celestial choir. The orchestra, led by Mr. Henry Lewis, was competent, but was scarcely strong enough to produce adequately the powerful climaxes of the work. The touching beauty of the scene 'By the wayside' was well brought out. Generally, the choir was most successful in the delicate passages, but they have yet to acquire the art of producing a full, rich, massive resonance. The soloists were Madame de Vere (the Angel and the Virgin Mary), Miss Marie Brema (Mary Magdalene), Mr. Gregory Hast (the Apostle St. John), Mr. Francis Braun (the Apostle St. Peter), Mr. Plunket Greene (Judas Iscariot), and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies (Jesus). All these artists gave interesting interpretations. The performance of Mr. Plunket Greene was perhaps specially interesting. He made the part of Judas intensely dramatic, although his intonation was not always true.

Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted. It is a tribute to his progress as a conductor that he kept his diverse resources admirably together. Mr. C. H. Kemping was at the organ. The London Choral Society has good reason to be proud of its record. It is certainly the most enterprising choral body in the Metropolis.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The fourth concert given at Queen's Hall by the London Symphony Orchestra on January 26 was conducted by Sir Charles V. Stanford. Its chief feature was the performance of the conductor-composer's Symphony in D (Op. 56, No. 5), which has for its poetic basis Milton's 'L'Allegro ed il Penseroso.' Dedicated to 'The Philharmonic Society of London and its conductor, Sir A. C. Mackenzie,' and produced, under the composer's direction, at the Society's concert of March 20, 1895, this fine Symphony, so full of attractive melody and so reflective of the dignified spirit of Milton's poem, has been well-nigh forgotten. Now however that the Symphony has been rescued from this undeserved neglect, we may hope that it will take the place it merits in the esteem of conductors and concert audiences. The concert also included the first performance with orchestra of Sir Charles Stanford's 'Five Songs of the Sea,' soloist, Mr. Plunket Greene, who was supported by a male-voice choir from the Royal College of Music. As on the production of the songs at the recent Leeds Festival, they elicited enthusiastic applause. Other noteworthy performances were those of Sir Hubert Parry's 'Symphonic Variations' and Brahms's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat, with Mr. Leonard Borwick as soloist.

A programme of French music—with the exception of three movements from Bach's Suite in B minor for flute and strings—under the direction of M. Colonne, made distinctive the fifth concert on February 16. The orchestra, under the French musician's vivacious command, played with wonderful verve, delicacy, and precision. During the afternoon there was given the first performance of a 'Caprice Andaloux' for Violin and Orchestra (Op. 122), by M. Saint-Saëns. This work, composed last year, is based upon Spanish airs, and though not one of the most inspired creations of its versatile author, the themes are ingeniously treated, the violin part is brilliantly effective, and the orchestration picturesque. The 'Caprice' is dedicated to M. Johannes Wolf, by whom the solo part was played on this occasion. The principal orchestral work was César Franck's Symphony in D, introduced to this country on November 19, 1896, by M. Colonne on his visit to London with his Parisian Orchestra to the Queen's Hall in that year.

MISS MAUD MACCARTHY'S CONCERTS.

Eleven years ago a young Irish girl made her début as violinist at the Princes' Hall, and as then recorded in THE MUSICAL TIMES of June, 1894 (p. 413), she 'displayed intelligence and feeling quite remarkable in one so young,' and 'in De Beriot's "Scène de Bal" she showed great vigour and command of the fingerboard.' This was Miss Maud MacCarthy, who last month gave two orchestral concerts (February 2 and 7) at Queen's Hall, and in the Violin Concertos of Brahms and Beethoven, one at each concert, proved that she had not only conquered all the technical difficulties of these works, but that she entered into the spirit of the music. Her readings were remarkable for true dignity combined with rare simplicity; while displaying individuality she seemed forgetful of herself, absorbed in the music she was interpreting. Health and strength permitting, she has a great future before her, and judging from the Concertos she played, she means to devote herself to the cause of high—we may indeed say highest—art. Although eleven years have passed, Miss MacCarthy is still quite young; on the programme of her first concert now lying before us are printed the words 'Aged 10 Years,' and that decade we know was strictly correct.

While bestowing on the concert-giver all the praise she deserved, there were two factors which materially heightened the impression which she created. The one was the rich-toned London Symphony Orchestra, the other, the conductor, Herr Fritz Steinbach. The accompaniments to the Concertos were admirably rendered, while in the Symphonies in C minor of Beethoven and Brahms, the 'Tod und Verklärung' of Strauss, and the Vorspiel to 'Die Meistersinger,' Herr Steinbach caused his audience to feel the fullest power of the music. As an interpreter—for that is really the right term for him (and the orchestral instrument on which he played being of the best, he was heard under most favourable conditions)—of Brahms he is known to be supreme; he was also magnificent in the Beethoven Symphony. The Wagner Vorspiel was electrifying: in a word, Steinbach held his audience spellbound.

Mr. Joseph Monday, honorary conductor of the St. George's Glee Union (Pimlico), and Mrs. Monday have been presented, on the occasion of their silver wedding, with an album containing an address together with a handsome case of silver, subscribed for by upwards of 150 members and friends of the Society, as tokens of the esteem and regard of the donors. The ceremony took place on January 28 at the Holborn Restaurant, the occasion being the annual dinner of the St. George's Glee Union, a flourishing Society which Mr. Monday has ably served for thirty years.

London Concerts.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

No novelties were brought forward by Mr. Henry J. Wood at the Queen's Hall on January 26 or February 11, but at the former concert effective interpretations were secured of Dr. Strauss's Symphonic Poem 'Don Juan,' and Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony and Fantasia-Overture 'Romeo and Juliet'; and on the latter occasion there were revived M. Glazounoff's Fifth Symphony and Schumann's 'Overture, Scherzo, and Finale.' On January 26 the soloist was Mrs. Henry J. Wood; and on February 11 Herr Hugo Becker was heard in Haydn's Violoncello Concerto in D, when he played with his customary finish and brilliancy.

The appearance on February 17, at Queen's Hall, of a new orchestral organization—ambitiously entitled the International Symphony Orchestra—aroused some curiosity. The conductor is Herr Gustave Jaeger, who for twenty-six years was first trumpet-player in the Hallé Orchestra, but who has had some conducting experience in the Midlands. As the International Symphony Orchestra was only heard in a light overture by Erkel, and in accompaniments to the violin Hungarian solos played by Herr Karcsey, judgment on its capabilities must be deferred.

Two new Rhapsodies for Pianoforte by Sir Charles V. Stanford were played by Mr. Percy Grainger at his recital in conjunction with Mr. Herman Sandby, on February 13, at Bechstein Hall. The pieces produced on this occasion were Nos. 2 and 3 of a series having their inspiration in Dante's 'Inferno,' and are severally headed 'Beatrice' and 'Capaneo.' The former is graceful and serene music, and more pleasing than that of the succeeding movement, but both are effective and musically compositions.

Dr. Arthur Somervell's new song-cycle 'A Shropshire Lad' was produced by Mr. Plunket Greene at his recital on February 3 at Æolian Hall. The Cycle comprises a series of songs which would seem to relate memorable incidents in the career of a lad who starts life in a village and ultimately becomes a soldier. We are inclined to think the music is amongst the best Dr. Somervell has written; at any rate the work so pleased that Mr. Plunket Greene announces that he will repeat the Cycle on March 9 in the same hall.

M. Tančew's String Quartet in D minor (Op. 7) received its first performance in England at the hands of the Nora Clench Quartet Party, on February 6, at Æolian Hall. The work consists of two movements, an Allegro and a Theme and Variations, both testifying to inventive powers and intimate acquaintance with contrapuntal resource.

Mr. Lamond gave a striking exhibition of his powers as a pianist of high rank and as an interpreter of Beethoven's sonatas by playing five of these masterpieces at his recital, on February 4, at Bechstein Hall. In spite of the severity of this programme—or perhaps by reason of it—there was a large and appreciative audience.

Herr von Dohnányi showed decided advance in artistic control at his recital, on February 17, at Æolian Hall, and his interpretations were distinguished by vivacity and poetical feeling.

Madame Carrefio gave remarkable performances of Beethoven's 'Appassionata' Sonata and Chopin's Sonata in B minor at her recital at Bechstein Hall on February 18. Her masculine style and command of the keyboard have indeed never been more conspicuous.

Miss Marie Hall made her re-appearance, after her severe illness, at Queen's Hall on February 21, when the charm and brilliance of her artistic violin playing showed that her rare gifts remain unimpaired. She never played better.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Sir Edward Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations were performed at the Lamoureux concert of February 12 for the first time here, and it was also the first time that the composer's name has appeared on a concert programme in this city. Massenet's opera, 'Le Jongleur de Notre Dame'—though originally produced at Monte Carlo in 1902—was only given here at the Opéra Comique for the first time last May; it is therefore still somewhat of a novelty. 'Manon,' the best known of Massenet's works in England, and 'Hérodiade,' which under the name of 'Salomé' was performed last season at Covent Garden, were written more than twenty years ago, so that in comparison 'Le Jongleur' is quite modern. It is an extremely clever work, admirably scored, and the interest is well sustained throughout; the third and last act is indeed the strongest. The book, based on a mediæval legend, is concise, and it is treated by the composer quite in the right spirit. His score intensifies the story; the words never seem to be mere pegs on which to hang the quaint, characteristic music. The performance at the Opéra Comique on February 14 was a delightful one, the principal parts being impersonated by the well-known artists MM. Maréchal, Fugère, and Allard. It may be interesting to add that Madame Christine Nilsson was present.

The French papers have given long accounts of the production of M. Massenet's 'Chérubin' at Monte Carlo on February 13, and the opinion seems unanimous that the fortunate composer achieved a brilliant and well-deserved success.

In 1795 Beethoven, as is known, wrote twelve Menuets for orchestra, which were performed at the Vienna Redoute for the benefit of the musicians' fund. A young Frenchman, living in Paris, M. J. Chantavoine, went last year to Vienna to study, and at the Hofbibliothek he found twelve more Menuets by Beethoven which are not in the Breitkopf & Härtel critical edition of the composer's works; neither are they mentioned in Nottebohm's Thematic Catalogue. These twelve Menuets, written in 1799 for a similar purpose as those of 1795, have recently been published by Heugel & Co. Anything composed by Beethoven is interesting, even small pieces. A note in the edition mentioned by the editor (M. Chantavoine himself) states that they were not performed, others by Prince Lobkowitz having been preferred—a fact probably recorded on the manuscript, which, it should be stated, is not autograph. The music may for all that be genuine, but it is too simple to offer any really strong internal evidence.

Of concerts here, as in London, there is no lack. One of considerable interest was recently given by the Schola Cantorum at the Salle Pleyel, at which important excerpts from Monteverde's 'Orfeo' (produced at Mantua in 1607) were performed under the direction of M. Vincent d'Indy.

It is said that a new building is to be erected near the Bois de Boulogne in place of the old and none too commodious conservatoire in the Rue Bergère, a change which will rejoice the heart of the director, M. Théodore Dubois.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

February 15, 1905.

We have lately heard very many novelties. The Concert Society has specially distinguished itself in the matter of new works, for not only has it placed both old and new in the programme of its regular subscription concerts, but it gave a concert specially devoted to novelties. First was brought forward a Symphony in A, by Paul Juon, a composer of Russo-German origin. He lives in Berlin, and his works being of serious and noble character, Joachim has appointed him professor at the Royal High School of Music. For some years past the Society of Musicians has made known its chamber works. The Symphony is an inspiring, finely-scored work, and practically constructed on one highly original theme. It has been named the 'Fifth Brahms Symphony' because technically it follows the lines of that master; but it thoroughly deserves to be placed beside the four of Brahms. The work adds considerably to Juon's reputation. We next mention two works by the Munich composer, Max Schillings, given under his direction. The 'Seemorgen' is lively, though somewhat superficial symphonic poem, in which the mood during an excursion on the open sea is depicted. The music written to Wildenbruch's ballad 'Das Hexenlied,' proved however more serious and impressive. It is actually a melodrama, for the uncommon and striking ballad is spoken while the orchestra is playing; the text was admirably recited by Ernst von Possart. The whole is an interesting artistic experiment. By the side of these works Debussy's Prelude 'L'après-midi d'un faune' made no marked impression. It is a refined piece, but musically of no value; in it the mood-painting outweighs invention and form. With another novelty, Löwe, the Conductor of the Society, did not achieve success, i.e., with 'Das Gefilde der Seligen,' by Weingartner, in which the composer attempts to reproduce in tones the impression made by a picture of that name painted by the eminent artist Böcklin. The work must rivet the attention of every musician, but the public remained cold.

At the 'Vereinigung schaffender Tonkünstler' was performed the symphonic poem 'Die Sejungfrau,' after a fairy tale by Hans Andersen, composed by Alexander Zemlinsky, the worthy conductor of the 'Volks-Oper.' The three movements do not show much variety, yet they are based on plastic themes, and sound well. A symphonic poem, 'Pelleas und Melisande,' by Arnold Schönberg, composed after the drama by Maeterlinck, showed talent and skilful orchestration, but proved most complicated and overlaid with unpleasant harmonies.

At a chamber concert given by the same Society a number of songs by Viennese composers were sung; among the best were some by Erich Wolf and Robert Grund, two young and able musicians who have won favourable notice. As a composer of songs with orchestral accompaniment, Gustav Mahler won the greatest success: he has selected poems from folk collections, and from Rückert's 'Des Knaben Wunderhorn,' which bear such treatment.

The Hugo Wolf Society has given a kind of festival concert. The characteristic programme included the symphonic poem 'Penthesilea,' excerpts from 'Der Corregidor,' the 'Italian Serenade,' and various songs with orchestral accompaniment. Goldmark's 'Zriny' Overture, written for a national festival in the composer's native land, has been performed as a novelty by the Philharmonic Society, when the brilliantly written work pleased greatly.

Of chamber music novelties may be named a quartet by the young Italian composer, Sinigaglia, who studied here in Vienna, and a pianoforte quartet by Robert Fuchs, principal professor of composition at our Conservatorium; the former was introduced by the Brussels Quartet, the latter by Frau Röger-Soldat at one of her chamber music soirées.

The Court Opera having declined to give Siegfried Wagner's latest opera, 'Der Kobold,' the National Opera with far more modest resources resolved to do its best to render justice to the difficult work. The composer was present at the first performance, and conducted the second, when he was enthusiastically received. The opera, however, though containing much that is interesting, is not likely to remain in the repertoire.

MANDYCZAWSKI.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the fifth concert of the Queen's College Chamber Series the artists were Messrs. Needham, Reynolds, Mills, Schieder, and Marshall,—who formed an excellent quintet of wind players—Miss Winifred Burnett (violin), Miss J. Moore (vocalist), and Dr. Walker (pianoforte).

The third concert of the Philharmonic Society was the occasion of what was probably the first performance in Ireland of any large part of Wagner's 'Parsifal,' and, risky as the experiment was, the result must be considered one on which the Society deserves congratulation. The part selected was the Finale of the first act—just enough to fill the first half of a programme. The exquisite music had been prepared by chorus and orchestra with infinite pains and taste by Dr. Koeller, and the leading part of Amfortas was splendidly sung by Mr. Albert Archdeacon, while

Mr. Halliday, an amateur member of the Society, took very creditably the parts of Gurnemanz and Titurel. The rest of the concert consisted of songs by Madame Agnes Nicholls (accompanied by the orchestra) and Mr. Archdeacon, and Mr. Geo. A. Vincent, a clever local violinist, played two movements of Tchaikovsky's Concerto in D (Op. 35). The orchestra played the same composer's 'Casse Noisette' Suite and Berlioz's 'Carnaval Romain.'

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Halford Society's Concert of January 31 had a very interesting programme. New to Birmingham were Elgar's Overture 'In the South,' Rutland Boughton's Symphonic Poem 'Into the Everlasting,' and Mozart's Violin Concerto in E flat. Elgar's Overture made a great impression, and was finely played. Mr. Boughton conducted the performance of his composition, which went exceedingly well. It is impressionist music, very clever, but open to many interpretations. The soloist in the Concerto was Mr. Zacharewitsch, who achieved a great success. Beethoven's C minor Symphony opened the concert. At the seventh concert, on February 14, the 'Pastoral' Symphony was beautifully played, and a most realistic performance given of Tchaikovsky's Overture, '1812,' a peal of bells, lent by Messrs. Taylor, of Loughborough, being employed with tremendous effect in the Finale. A selection from 'Götterdämmerung,' including Siegfried's 'Rheinfahrt' and the 'Trauermarsch,' created a deep impression. Miss Gleeson-White sang Mozart's air, 'L'Amoro,' from 'Il Rè Pastore,' and Liszt's 'Lorelei.' Mr. Halford conducted.

At the Harrison Concert, the last week in January, the artists were Madame Clara Butt, Miss Louise Dale, Mr. J. Robertson, and Mr. Kennerley Rumford, vocalists; Miss Pauline Sant-Angelo, pianist, and Miss Gertrude Ess, violoncellist. A novelty was the introduction of organ solos, by Mr. C. W. Perkins.—The Broadwood Concerts were resumed at the Temperance Hall on February 4. The Queen's Hall Wind Instrument Quintet contributed a delightful programme, including Mozart's Quintet in E flat and a Sextet by Julius Rietz, Mr. Henry J. Wood being the pianist. Songs were given in polished style by Mrs. Henry J. Wood. On February 11 the function was a vocal and pianoforte recital by Miss Gleeson-White and Mr. Plunket Greene, and Mr. Howard Hadley. At the last concert, February 18, the Max Mossel String Quartet played Schumann's Quartet in A minor (Op. 41) and Borodin's Quartet in D, the latter creating something like a sensation. Miss Ethel Sharpe contributed pianoforte solos, and Mr. Gervase Elwes sang. At Mr. Max Mossel's third drawing-room concert, at the Grand Hotel, February 16, Madame Carreño made her first appearance in Birmingham, and gave the most remarkable performance of Beethoven's 'Sonata Appassionata' ever heard from a lady pianist. Miss Muriel Warwood, the young Birmingham violinist, made her reappearance after a period of study in Prague under Sevcik. In Corelli's 'La Folia' and other pieces she showed advancing powers, and a great future seems before her. Miss Evangeline Florence charmed the audience with her tasteful and refined singing. The Welsh Calvinist Methodist Church held their annual concert in the Town Hall on February 15. A miscellaneous programme was excellently sustained by Madame Sobrino, Miss Carrie James, Mr. Evan Williams, Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, and the Cymric Gleemen. At the Masonic Hall on February 20, a concert was given by Miss Hilda St. Angelis (vocalist), Mr. Edward Isaacs (pianist), and M. Hegedüs (violinist).

The Saturday evening concerts in the Town Hall deserve notice. On January 28 Mr. F. W. Beard's select choir—a fine body of thirty-two singers—gave a selection of madrigals and part-songs, ranging from William Byrd to Edward Elgar. Miss Gleeson-White, a great favourite here, was the solo vocalist, and instrumental items were contributed by Mr. Arthur Jahn (violin) and Mr. W. Lehmann (violoncello). Mr. Beard conducted. Several members of the choir were heard in solos and duets.—On February 4 the Choral and Orchestral Association, conducted by Mr. Joseph H. Adams, sang a number of choruses from popular operas. A feature of the concert was the fine performance of Beethoven's E flat Pianoforte Concerto, with Mr. Arthur Cooke, pianist. On February 18 the Midland Musical Society, under Mr. A. J. Cotton's careful direction, gave a first performance here of Elgar's 'Light of Life,' with Miss Amy Kendal, Madame M. Mitward, Mr. W. J. Orley, and Mr. J. Coleman, principals. The hall was crowded, and the concert was a great success.

Mr. Turner brought his opera season to a close on January 28. On January 27, Bennett's 'May Queen' was staged, and the performance was very good. The characters were represented by Miss Ethel Locker, Miss Beatrice Hill, Mr. F. J. Hargrave, and Mr. T. Griffiths. The chorus sang remarkably well, but the work is not suited to the stage.

The Festival Choral Society's performance of Horatio Parker's 'Hora Novissima' occurs too late for notice this month.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Knowle and Totterdown Choral Society, formed last autumn, gave, on January 23, their first concert under the direction of Mr. J. F. Nash, a lay-clerk at Bristol Cathedral. Some favourite glees and part-songs were creditably rendered and solos sung by Miss Eveline Gerrish and Mr. William Thomas. The violin solos executed by Miss Violet Bryant and pianoforte pieces played by Miss Parsons added to the interest of this initial music-making.

On January 25 the annual concert of the Bristol Excelsior Male-Voice Choir was held in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association. In addition to pieces for the choir, there were songs contributed by Miss Winifred Thomas, Miss Gertrude Winchester, and Mr. A. W. Parkman. Miss Maud L. Adams played violin solos and Miss Amy Adams acted as accompanist. The conductor was Mr. T. Slocombe.

At the third of the Clifton Chamber Concerts this season, held in the Victoria Rooms on February 2, the performers were Mr. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Mr. Maurice Alexander and Mr. Hubert Hunt (violins), Mr. Ernest Lane (viola), and Mr. Percy Lewis (violoncello). The principal works presented were Beethoven's Quartet (No. 2, Op. 59) and Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Trio, both being admirably played. Mrs. Henry J. Wood, the vocalist, was accorded an enthusiastic reception.

There was a crowded audience at the Victoria Rooms on February 6, when the Post Office concert in aid of the Postmen's Benevolent Fund was given. The vocalists were Miss Jennie Ellis (a prizewinner at the National Eisteddfod, 1904), Madame Hilda Wilson, Mr. Llewellyn Jones, and Mr. Montague Worlock. Mr. J. W. Duys played violin solos, Mr. Dezzo Kordy violoncello solos, and Mr. W. E. Fowler acted as accompanist.

The Western Ladies' String Orchestra, composed of ladies from different towns in the West of England, who meet for rehearsal in Bristol under the direction of Mr. J. W. Duys, gave a concert at the Victoria Rooms on February 11. There were fifty ladies in the orchestra, Miss Gertrude A. Wade holding the principal first violin. The programme included Mozart's Serenade, 'Eine kleine Nachtmusik,' a Concerto for three solo violins with string orchestra, arranged by Mr. Duys, from Antonio Vivaldi; Gilson's 'Melodies Ecosaisies'; Reinecke's Serenade in G minor (Op. 242); two Swedish Folk-Songs by Svendsen, and Jensen's 'Ländliche Serenade' (Op. 37). All these compositions were admirably rendered, to the evident satisfaction of the audience. Miss Carmen Hill was the vocalist.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Dublin Orchestral Society gave the second concert for the season on January 26. Signor Esposito conducted an interesting programme, including Saint-Saens's Fifth Pianoforte Concerto (soloist, Miss Annie Lord); Suite, Gluck; Mozart's Symphony in G minor; the Vorspiel to 'Tristan and Isolde,' and the 'Meistersinger' Overture.

On February 2 the Dublin Glee Singers, under the conductorship of Mr. Joseph Seymour, gave a concert in the Antient Concert Rooms, when the programme contained a choice selection of madrigals and part-songs, Miss Mabel Love being the solo violinist.

The University College Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Robert O'Dwyer, gave on February 8 a good performance of Gadsby's Cantata, 'Christopher Columbus' (Mr. Evan Cox singing the tenor solo). Mozart's Symphony in D was also performed, in addition to a miscellaneous selection.

The Orpheus Choral Society gave their second concert for this season on Tuesday, February 7. Dr. Culwick conducted five performances of John Ward's Madrigal, 'Hope of my heart,' Palestrina's Madrigal, 'When flow'ry meads,' and Attwood's Glee, 'To all that breathe the air of Heaven,' besides other part-songs and choruses. Miss Queenie Eaton and Mr. E. Gordon Cleather were the solo vocalists, the latter introducing a new song by the talented young composer Mr. Hamilton Harty, entitled 'The Devon Maid.' Miss Maud Fletcher contributed some violoncello solos.

On February 15 the lately formed Dublin Choral Society, conductor Signor Bozzelli, gave a performance in the Antient Concert Hall of Handel's 'Belshazzar,' with a small choir and band. The soloists, who, as well as the band and chorus, were drawn from local sources, included Madame Barbara McNevin, soprano, and Mr. Richard McNevin, bass.

The Feis Ceoil will be held in the week of May 22, and the following adjudicators have been appointed:—Choral Singing, Vocal Ensemble, Orchestral and Organ Playing—Mr. H. A. Fricker; Solo Singing—Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies; Strings, Harp, and Chamber Music—Herr Johann Kruse; Pianoforte—Miss Agnes Zimmermann; and Unpublished Irish Airs—Mr. Brendan J. Rogers, Mr. A. W. Darley, Mr. Robert Young, and Mr. P. J. McCall.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Mr. Henschel conducted the eighth Paterson Concert, and his readings of the 'Egmont' Overture, Brahms's Symphony in D, No. 2, and the Overture to the 'Meistersinger' were received with ovation. The ninth concert brought M. Jacques Thibaud as solo violinist in the first Violin Concerto of Saint-Saëns, and specially interesting and splendidly played was Borodin's B minor Symphony. The tenth concert, on February 6, was devoted to the 'Beatiudes' of César Franck—in which Mr. Moonie's choir were associated with the Scottish Orchestra in happy combination. Of the nine soloists in the work, the chief singers were Miss Thorburn, Mr. Coates, and Mr. Hughes. At the eleventh concert Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony was played, and Madame Antonia Dolores sang.

One of our best pianists, Miss May Elliot, gave her Annual Recital on January 26. She was particularly happy in the C sharp minor Scherzo and the Berceuse of Chopin. Another interesting recital was that of the brother and sister McGregor, pianist and violinist, who had the valuable association of Madame Neustadt as vocalist.

The exceedingly interesting lecture on 'Anton Bruckner, His Life and Works,' delivered by Madame Bach before the Musical Education Society of Edinburgh on January 18, calls for special notice, as it held the keenest attention of an interested and critical audience.

First among local choral societies comes the Bonnington Musical Association with 'Acis and Galatea,' and another item of interest was the concert given by some benevolent amateurs of music on February 21 in aid of a Musselburgh charity. At the latter function Lady Margaret Kerr, Miss Richardson, Mr. Dods, and others, gave valuable assistance.

The last of the four Historical Concerts, given in the University Music Class Room on February 16, was devoted to 'The Overture from Monteverdi to Wagner.' Professor Niecks conducted an excellent band of players, selected from the Scottish Orchestra, in the performance of an interesting selection of overture-masterpieces.

The Lincoln Musical Festival, announced to be held this year, has, we regret to learn, been unavoidably postponed till 1906 in consequence of the prevalence of typhoid in that city.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

One very conspicuous feature of this season's orchestral concerts has been the number of novelties performed by the Scottish Orchestra. With the exception of the concert conducted by Mr. Henschel on January 24, 'for the first time in Glasgow' has figured at least once on every programme, and as the novelties comprise works by old and modern composers, the varied tastes of our large musical public have been carefully borne in mind by Dr. Cowen, who is mainly responsible for the selection of the programmes. The novelties at the thirteenth concert on January 31 were Saint-Saëns's First Violin Concerto in A minor and Borodin's Symphony in B minor. The solo part in the Concerto was magnificently played by the distinguished French violinist, M. Thibaud, who on this occasion appeared for the first time before a Glasgow audience. On February 7 the Choral Union, under Mr. Joseph Bradley, gave a first-rate performance of Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius.' The refined singing of the semi-chorus deserves special mention, while the soloists—Miss Brema, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Montague Borwell—rendered their parts excellently. Mr. Henri Verbruggen, the accomplished leader of the Orchestra, appeared as soloist at the fourteenth concert on February 14, playing Max Bruch's Violin Concerto, No. 1, with great power. A first hearing of Tchaikovsky's Overture 'Le Voyevode' was acceptable, as was also a fine performance of Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony.

At the last of this season's Chamber Concerts, organized by Herr Denhof, two sonatas for pianoforte and violoncello (Brahms's in E minor, Op. 38, and Beethoven's in A major, Op. 69) were nicely rendered by the concert-giver and Herr Becker. A feature of the concert was the singing of Miss Mary Munchhoff, whose beautiful voice and perfect method were exhibited in songs by Schubert, Grieg, and Bach. The opening of the new organ in the City Hall is referred to on page 185.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Musical Festival Society, under the direction of Mr. J. A. Matthews, gave a creditable performance of 'Elijah' at the Town Hall, Cheltenham, on February 7, the soloists being Madame Emily Squire, Miss Jessie King, Mr. Wilfred Kearton, and Mr. Andrew Black. The minor parts were satisfactorily filled by Miss Susanna Palmer (a pupil of Mr. Matthews), Mr. C. Eynon Morgan (Gloucester Cathedral), and Mr. E. Davies (Worcester Cathedral), while Miss Lane and Mrs. Gridley (members of the Society), and Miss Fluck and Mr. G. Matthews rendered help in the double quartets. The performance was thoroughly successful from every point of view.

The annual concert given by the Gloucester Orpheus Society in the Guildhall on February 21 was a complete success, the audience including the Lord Chief Justice of England. The programme consisted of 'What ho!' (Beale), 'Nymphs of the Forest' (Horsley), 'I wish to tune my quivering lyre' (S. S. Wesley), 'Bind my brows' (Stainer), 'Orpheus'—the humorous part-song written by the President of the Society, Sir Hubert Parry, and conducted by him—'Three men of Gotham' (C. H. Lloyd), 'A Franklyn's Dogge' (Mackenzie), and 'Thou art gone to the grave' (C. Lee Williams)—sung standing, to the memory of a departed member of the Society—in addition to a new and tuneful part-song 'Love for such a cherry lip,' by Mr. John E. West. As regards tone, tune, vigour, and delicacy, the choral music left nothing to be desired, and the performance reflected much credit on the conductor of the Society, Mr. A. Herbert Brewer. The solo vocalist was Mr. Plunket Greene, who rendered Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea' and other songs in excellent style.

A County Orchestral Festival was given at the Town Hall, Cheltenham, on February 21, under the auspices of the Philharmonic Society, of which Mr. C. J. Phillips is the energetic and successful director. Mr. Phillips always manages to get together a very competent band, drawn from Birmingham, Worcester, Gloucester, Bristol, &c., and on this occasion the results were admirable. The programme included Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, the 'Rienzi' Overture, and Liszt's 'Hungarian Rhapsodie' (No. 2). A great attraction was the engagement of the boy violinist and composer, Florizel von Reuter, who played Mendelssohn's Concerto, and conducted the orchestra in his (Reuter's) Funeral March and descriptive Fantaisie. The vocalist was Miss Gertrude Griswold, and the solo pianist, Mdle. Maria Seguel. Mr. Phillips's concerts are always popular and attractive, and this one proved exceptionally so.

Lady Hallé gave a fine example of her powers at the eighth Philharmonic concert on January 24, when she played Dvůřák's Violin Concerto in A. Mr. Andrew Black was the vocalist, and the orchestra, conducted by Dr. Cowen, played Tschaiakovsky's 'Mozartiana' Suite, Saint-Saëns's 'Danse Macabre,' and Grieg's characteristic Overture 'In Autumn.'

No previous concert this season proved so attractive as the Philharmonic on February 7, when Dr. Cowen's humorous cantata 'John Gilpin' was given for the first time in Liverpool. Produced at the last Cardiff Festival, the favourable impression the work then made was fully confirmed on this occasion, and its interpretation must have delighted the composer as much as it pleased the audience, and the chorus entered whole-heartedly into the spirit of Dr. Cowen's cheery strains. 'The Swan and the Skylark' (Goring Thomas) was also in the programme, the principal vocalists being Miss Lydia Nevill, Miss Mabel Braine, Mr. Anderson Nicol, and Mr. Ivor Foster. Kimsi-Korsakov's 'Capriccio Espagnole' was another feature in one of the most elaborate programmes recently provided by the Philharmonic Committee.

At the Orchestral Society's concert on January 21, Mrs. Henry J. Wood sang, and Mr. Wood conducted a good performance of Tschaiakovsky's D minor Suite. Mr. Granville Bantock directed excellent renderings of 'The Flying Dutchman' Overture and Josef Holbrooke's 'Queen Mab' tone-poem. At the fourth Ladies' concert, Tschaiakovsky's F minor Symphony was given with particular effect, and Miss Pauline Sant-Angelo ably played Liszt's Fantaisie of Hungarian Folk Melodies. Miss Margie Bennett made a welcome reappearance at Mr. Schiever's third concert on January 28, and Dvůřák's Quartet in G (Op. 106), Terzetto (Op. 74), and the Pianoforte Quintet (Op. 81) were the chief features.

Mr. Kenneth Carne-Ross and Miss Eveline Barry were the successful soloists at the Societa Armonica concert in the Small Room, St. George's Hall, on January 27. An instructive address on 'Welsh Melodies,' by Dr. R. D. Glynn-Roberts, was given before the members of the Anfield and Everton Young Wales Society; and mention must be made of a lecture given by Mr. Isidor Cohn, on 'Schumann,' before the members of the local branch of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, at the Royal Institution, on February 11, when he played several pianoforte compositions by Schumann.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Dr. Hans Richter conducted very sympathetically a performance of 'Elijah' at the Hallé concerts on January 26. The choir sang extremely well. The principals were Miss Helen Jaxon, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Santley. The succeeding concert, on February 2, was in memory of Anton Dvůřák. It opened with an excellent rendering of the 'Otello' Overture, and something like an ideal performance was secured of the virile composer's Symphony, 'From the New World.' Mr. Hugo Becker continued the reference by playing Dvůřák's later-composed Concerto for Violoncello. Mr. Harold Wild, who is a native of Manchester, had nothing more Bohemian in any way to sing than 'Now is the hour of soft enchantment,' and 'Il mio tesoro.' February 9 brought the very rare experience of a programme without a Symphony. Mr. Leonard Borwick gave a consistent and thoroughly interesting performance of Brahms's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor. Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations came to a third hearing at these concerts. Dr. Richter introduced them in London in 1899; and his conducting showed that his faith in them, and his love for them, are unabated. Fine performances of the 'Benvenuto Cellini' and 'Tannhäuser' Overtures opened and closed the concert. At the concert of February 16, Brahms's German 'Requiem' and Wagner's 'Faust' Overture, and the 'Parsifal' Vorspiel were performed. The 'Requiem' was excellently rendered.

At the Gentlemen's Concerts on the afternoon of February 8 all the artists were, in a sense, local. There was a vocal quartet of our Royal College students—Miss Minnie Williams, Miss Annie Worsley, Mr. William Wild, and Mr. Fowler Burton. The capable accompanists, Mr. Forbes and Mr. Worsley, owed their training to the College. Amongst other selections, the vocalists sang Brahms's 'Liebeslieder' and three of Mendelssohn's part-songs. Mr. De Jong's appearance was specially welcomed. Mr. De Jong was a member of the original Hallé Orchestra of 1857, but his skill as a flautist seems undiminished. His ventures here are not forgotten in connection with the popular concerts, furnished with an adequate orchestra, which he conducted for many years. Mr. De Jong's solos were two movements from a Suite by Godard, and his own 'Fantasia on Plantation Melodies.'

The programme of the fourth Brodsky Quartet Concert, on February 15, contained the names of three favourites, blest with health and born in sunshine—Mozart's Quartet in D minor, Schumann's Quintet in A minor (No. 1, Op. 41), and Dvůřák's Quintet in A major (Op. 81) for Pianoforte and Strings. In the Quintet Dr. Brodsky and his colleagues were joined by Mr. Egon Petri. Mr. Petri, who is the son of a Dutch violinist not without honour in his own country, greatly distinguished himself, and his exhibition of combined technical facility, zest, judgment, and good taste, contributed much in securing an excellent interpretation of the work, upon whose joyous energies the 'Dumka' movement lays its momentarily sobering hand.—For Mr. Brand Lane's sixth Subscription Concert, on February 11, a concert party had been secured consisting of Miss Alys Bateman, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Gregory Hast, and Mr. Watkin Mills (vocalists); Miss Nadia Sylva (violinist), and Mr. Archy Rosenthal (pianist). Special mention must be made of the excellent rendering of part-songs and madrigals by the large choir of Mr. Lane's Philharmonic Society.—The chief piece in the Vocal Society's programme at their concert of February 1 (conductor, Dr. Henry Watson) was Goring Thomas's posthumous cantata 'The Swan and the Skylark,' in which the soprano and tenor solos were successfully taken by members of the choir.—At his chamber concert on February 13, Mr. Max Mayer had as his distinguished colleagues Professor Halir (violinist, one of the Joachim Quartet) and Mr. Hugo Becker, the famous violoncellist. The pieces played were Richard Strauss's Sonata for Violin and Pianoforte (Op. 18); Beethoven's Sonata for Pianoforte and Violoncello (Op. 5); and Brahms's Trio (Op. 8). Mrs. Max Mayer contributed songs, four of them composed by Mr. Max Mayer. The concert was a great success.—For the Ladies' Concerts (afternoon), Mr. Percy Grainger (pianoforte) and Mr. Herman Sandby (violoncello) were engaged on January 24. Mr. Ernst von Dohnányi played on February 7.—Miss Millicent Holbrook, of this city, a student of the Royal College of Music, gave her first concert here on January 29. Her voice is a pleasant soprano, which has evidently been carefully trained. The Lord Mayor and the Deputy Lord Mayor were both present to help in the kindly send-off.

'Confort of vocal music with ye accompaniments of ye cheft of viols and eke ye Virginals under ye direction of Maister Henry Watson, Doctor in musick (Cantab.) will bee given by ye Quire of ye Manchester Gentlemen's Glee Club holden at ye antient tygne of ye "Albion" inne Piccadilly, Manchester, on ye seventh daye of Februarie, in ye yeare of grace 1905.' Thus ran the title of an interesting programme forming one of the delightful evenings of an old Society. The illustrations and general get-up of the programme were excellent in their old-world attractiveness.

The death is recorded, at the age of fifty-three, of Mr. F. H. Dale, a music teacher who made several only partially successful efforts to establish a series of popular concerts here.

NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

The second of the orchestral concerts arranged by the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union was given on February 15 by the Scottish Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. F. H. Cowen. Elgar's 'In the South' Overture and the conductor's 'Indian Rhapsody' received their initial performance on Tyneside; Beethoven's Fifth Symphony was heard again after a lapse of eleven years, and short dance pieces by Mozart, Bach, Rameau, and Grieg added greatly to the enjoyment of an appreciative audience. Unfortunately, these orchestral concerts are not well supported by the public at large, a fact disappointing to lovers of orchestral music in general, and in particular to the committee, who are disinterestedly endeavouring to place them on a substantial basis.

A vocal and instrumental recital was given on February 1 by Miss Marie Bellas and Miss Agnes Cochrane, when the violoncello playing of Miss Cochrane exhibited taste and refinement. At a similar music-making on February 4, Mr. Frederick Hosking and Mr. Edgar Bainton were associated, when the latter's pianoforte playing exhibited an ease of command over keyboard-difficulties and considerable intellectual power. Miss Myrtle Lumsden, acting as a substitute at an hour's notice, co-operated with Mr. Bainton in an excellent rendering of Beethoven's 'Kreutzer' Sonata.

The Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society gave their second subscription concert on February 9, when the programme consisted of Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron,' Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and Cowen's 'John Gilpin.' The soloists were Miss Fanny Chetham, Mr. Harold Wilde, and Mr. Harry Dearth. The chorus did not come up to their usual standard of excellence in the two first items, but retrieved their position in Cowen's hilarious cantata. Mr. Allen Gill conducted, and Mr. Lyell Taylor led the orchestra.

On February 12 the Stapleford Choral Society gave a performance of Gaul's 'Holy City.' The principals were Miss Maud Towlson, Madame Holbrook, Mr. Shimmell, and Mr. Harold Howett. Mr. Hemingway was pianist, and Mr. G. Spencer conducted.

Miss Cantelo's chamber concert on February 16 was well attended, and a fine programme, including Beethoven's Violin Sonata (Op. 30, No. 2), Rubinstein's Violoncello Sonata (Op. 18), and Mendelssohn's Trio in C minor was well rendered. The soloists were Mr. Louis Pecskaï, Mr. Whitehouse, and Miss Cantelo.

Miss Constance Essex gave a very enjoyable Pianoforte Recital at Carlton on February 9, when her programme included works by Chaminade, Chopin, Henselt, Moszkowski, Schubert, and Godard.

The Melbourne Glee and Madrigal Society, a body which has carried on a quiet, steady work since 1866, recently gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.' The soloists were Miss Honeybone, Mr. G. F. Sands, and Miss Dunncliffe, who were supported by a band and chorus of seventy performers. Miss Wilson led the orchestra, and Mr. E. M. Barber conducted.

The Nottingham St. Cecilia Choir, a chorus of ladies' voices, under the direction of the Hon. Mrs. Handford, rendered, on January 24, a programme culled from the works of Brahms, Elgar, Schumann and Wagner. Mrs. Kendal gave four recitals, Madame Marie Fromm was the solo pianist, and Mr. William Higley the vocalist.

The West Bridgford Choral Society introduced Gaul's new sacred Cantata 'The Prince of Peace' to a Nottingham audience on January 26. The soloists were Madame Wilson-Moulds, Miss Nellie Major, Mr. Lacey Parker, and Mr. Charles Keywood, who were keenly appreciated, and the work as a whole appears to have come to stay.

On February 16 the Louth Choral Society gave a very successful concert, when the first portion of the programme was devoted to Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast.' The solo part in the choral work was sustained by Mr. Henry Brearley, who scored a great success with 'Onaway, awake.' Miss Lily Jeffrey was the only other soloist; Miss Elsie Hall was accompanist and Mr. Owen Price conducted.

The annual Children's Festival at the Albert Hall has proved what an excellent work is being done among the day-schools of the city. An elevation in the standard of music used for school purposes, a marked advance in the teaching and performance of vocal music, and the stimulation of a healthy rivalry among the various schools are the chief fruits of the interesting venture. It is suggested that some of the concerts should be on competitive lines.

The Milhouses Choral Society gave a creditable performance of 'St. Paul' on February 9, under the direction of Mr. W. Powell. The Society is only a young body, but it is enterprising and very much in earnest.—Among the other events of the month has been the fifth concert of the Chamber Music Society, at which the Kruse Quartet played Beethoven's Op. 59 (No. 3), and Schubert's posthumous Quartet in D minor. Mr. Kruse played Tartini's Violin Sonata in D major, Mr. J. A. Rodgers accompanying him.

The programme of the forthcoming triennial Festival has been issued. The choral works are the 'Messiah,' Mozart's 'Requiem,' Bach's Mass in B minor, Schumann's 'Paradise and the Peri,' Brahms's 'Naenie,' Max Bruch's 'Fritzhof,' Berlioz's 'Faust,' two eight-part choruses, 'The house of dreams' and 'The song of the storm,' by Felix Weingartner, the conductor, of the Festival, 'Fly, envious Time,' by Nicholas Gatty, and 'Ode to the North-East Wind,' by Frederic Cliffe. The last four are absolute novelties. The orchestral works are Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony, Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations, and a Symphony by Weingartner.

LEEDS.

At the Municipal Concert on January 21 Mr. R. Vaughan Williams conducted his 'Heroic Elegy,' a well-written piece, melodically interesting and sympathetic in feeling. Another novelty was a symphonic poem, 'Chakta,' by Mr. H. van Dyk, a clever young musician who is settled at Halifax. It is a work showing considerable musicianship, and an apparent lack of breadth of style was very probably owing to the imperfections of a performance that was creditable, but would have been better for more rehearsal. Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony was ably played under Mr. Fricker's direction. At the concert on February 4 only the string orchestra was employed, but this did not diminish the interest of an excellent programme, which included Serenades by Volkmann, Elgar, and Tschaiakovsky, and Handel's broadly effective Concerto Grosso in G. On February 18 a Wagner programme was given, and attracted by far the largest audience of the season. At the Subscription Concert on January 25 an exceptionally fine performance was given by the Hallé Orchestra, under Dr. Richter, of Brahms's Second Symphony, the genial charm of which was most happily realized, while ample justice was done to Strauss's 'Don Juan' Fantasia. Beethoven's 'Weihe des Hauses' and Elgar's 'In the South' were the two Overtures included in a thoroughly enjoyable concert. The next concert of the Subscription series, on February 15, was of chamber music, the Kruse Quartet, with Miss Fanny Davies as pianist and Mr. Plunket Greene as vocalist, supplying the programme.

Two Leeds musicians, Mr. Noel Bell and Mr. Percy Richardson, have made a specialty of duets for two pianofortes, and gave a recital of such music on February 7, at which original works by Mozart, Brahms, Huber, Schütt, and Saint-Saëns were played with capital spirit and sympathy. Chamber concerts are not too numerous in this district, so it was unfortunate that the Broadwood concert on February 8 clashed with the Bohemian concert. At the former the Cathie Quartet was heard in works by Beethoven, Haydn, and Glazounov, and the vocalist was Mr. Gervase Elwes, whose refined singing was much enjoyed. At the Bohemian concert a highly-interesting feature was Vincent D'Indy's Quartet in E, a most original and powerful composition, remarkable for its freedom, variety, and complexity of rhythm. It presents exceptional difficulties to the executants, and Messrs. Elliott, Moxon, Hatton, and Bolton deserve hearty praise for their success. On February 14, Mr. Frederick Ellis, a very able Leeds pianist, gave a recital, with a programme of a most exacting nature, beginning with Beethoven's latest Sonata (Op. 111), and covering pretty nearly the entire range of modern pianoforte music.

BRADFORD.

Two concerts of the Permanent Orchestra, on January 28 and February 11, fall to be recorded. At the former Mr. J. S. Bridge gave a musically reading of Max Bruch's favourite G minor Violin Concerto, and the most noteworthy orchestral piece was Mr. Edward German's 'Welsh Rhapsody,' played with spirit under Mr. Allen Gill's conductorship. At the latter concert the most important feature was a symphonic poem, 'Tasso,' conducted by its composer, Mr. York Bowen. Though still a youthful musician, he handles the orchestra with ease, and his materials are well chosen and discreetly put together. He also gave evidence of an exceptionally sensitive nature by his playing of Chopin's F minor Fantasia. Miss Evangeline Florence's birdlike vocalization was another pleasing feature of the concert. On February 3 the Festival Choral Society, under Dr. Cowen, gave a good account of Schumann's 'Paradise and the Peri,' with Miss Emily Squire, Miss Hilda de Angelis, Miss Mabel Braine, and Messrs. Lloyd Chandos, W. E. Heap, and Herbert Brown as vocalists. The concert ended brightly with Dr. Cowen's 'John Gilpin,' and the choice of his Cardiff work was a fitting compliment to the conductor. A concert was given by Mr. C. Henrich, on February 6, possessing more than local interest, since it introduced several compositions by Mr. Ernest Blake, a young composer who is distinguished by his thoughtfulness and originality. His songs—settings of Shelley, with the exception of three which are to Mr. Blake's own words—show a keen realization of the poetic idea, while in a violin solo from the 'Alastor' Symphony there is melodic inspiration of a high type. An Overture, 'Bretwalda,' reduced to a duet for two pianofortes, has unmistakable power and passion, though a first hearing leaves the impression that it would be better for a little compression. Mr. Higley was the vocalist, and in Brahms's Sonata in G the concert-giver was associated with Mr. Francis Macmillan in a performance full of vitality. At the Subscription Concert on February 10 Schubert's Octet was the chief attraction. It was admirably played by Dr. Brodsky and Messrs. Rawdon Briggs, Speelman, Fuchs, Hoffmann, Mills, Paersch, and Schieder. Mr. Egon Petri's clear and powerful pianoforte-playing was another specially enjoyable feature of the concert. At the first of Mr. Midgley's concerts, on February 17, the Rawdon-Briggs Quartet came from Manchester to play quartets by Beethoven and Dvorák, and made an excellent impression by the refinement and warmth of their playing. Mr. Midgley took the pianoforte part in Schumann's D minor Trio.

OTHER YORKSHIRE TOWNS.

The Wakefield Chamber Concert on February 2 was more vocal than is customary, the Folksingers Quartet singing Schumann's 'Spanisches Liederspiel,' some fine songs by Dr. Ernest Walker, and some arrangements of old songs very agreeably, while Mr. Herbert Walenn's violoncello solos represented the instrumental element of the programme. The concert was signalized by being made the occasion for a presentation to Miss A. C. Clarkson, who has been associated with these excellent concerts ever since they were begun fifteen years ago, and has carried them on single-handed for some time. Her arduous labours for the single purpose of encouraging a taste for the best music in the city of Wakefield well deserved this recognition.

The Hull Vocal Society gave, on January 24, a concert in which the share of the choir consisted of part-songs, of which Elgar's 'Bavarian Highlands' Suite was the most important feature. Their singing, under Dr. G. H. Smith, was characterized by welcome refinement, and Mr. John Dunn's brilliant violin playing also deserves mention.

The following awards have been made at the Royal Academy of Music: The George Mence Smith Scholarship (male vocalists) to Joseph Melvin Nightingale (of Hull). The Sainton Scholarship (violinists) to Elsie Winifred Owen (of Llanelli).

Under the auspices of the Literary Society of Regent's Park Church, Mr. T. R. Croger, on February 6, delivered a lecture entitled 'The Wood-wind Instruments used in the Modern Orchestra,' each instrument being exhibited and explained. The lecture, partly historical, and throughout most interesting, closed with a selection of solo and concerted music, in which Mr. Croger was ably assisted by Messrs. Edward Buttar, A. M. Donald, and F. G. Sneath, while Mrs. Huxtable rendered valuable aid at the pianoforte.

Mr. William Stuartson Collard, a former member of the celebrated firm of pianoforte makers, died, we regret to record, on January 23, at his residence, 159, Sutherland Avenue, aged sixty-two. Mr. Collard had held the office of Master of the Worshipful Company of Musicians on three occasions, and he was treasurer of that Guild for about a quarter of a century.

An interesting lecture on 'Ambidexterity in Music' was given by Dr. W. H. Cummings at the Guildhall School of Music on February 16. Illustrations were given by Miss Minnie Crouch and Miss Jenny Hyman (pianoforte) and Miss Dorothy Bull (violin).

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society gave an excellent performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' in the Crystal Palace Concert Room on February 18. The band and chorus numbered 300, and the solo vocalists were Madame Clementine de Vere, Mr. Joseph O'Mara, and Mr. Robert Radford. Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted with his accustomed skill and care.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

ABERDEEN.—The third Choral Union Concert this season took place in the Musical Hall on February 9, when the Scottish Orchestra, directed by Dr. F. H. Cowen, provided the programme, which included the conductor's Choral Ballad 'John Gilpin,' the Overtures to 'Egmont,' 'Tannhäuser,' and 'William Tell,' and other well-known orchestral items. The choir sang Dr. Cowen's popular ballad with great spirit, and the work was received with enthusiasm.

BASINGSTOKE.—The Choral Society gave a concert in the Town Hall on February 14, under the direction of Mr. H. E. Powell. The programme included Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer,' Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' Elgar's part-songs 'The Snow' and 'Fly, singing bird,' and Pinsuti's 'In this hour of softened splendour.' The solo vocalists were Miss Kate Cherry and Mr. Dalton Baker, and Miss Gwendolen Griffiths contributed violoncello solos.

BRIGHTON.—The second Subscription Concert of the Sacred Harmonic Society took place at the Dome, on February 9, when Costa's Oratorio 'Eli' was successfully performed under the direction of Mr. Robert Taylor. Both choir and orchestra acquitted themselves with much credit, and the solo vocalists were Miss Kate Cherry, Miss Greta Williams, Mr. Charles Saunders, Mr. W. Coleman, and Mr. Charles Knowles. Mr. Robert Taylor conducted the performance with a baton presented to him by Sir Michael Costa, and used by the composer of 'Eli' when he last conducted the oratorio at Brighton.

CHRISTCHURCH (N.Z.).—The fifth subscription concert of the Musical Union, which took place at the Canterbury Hall on December 20, brought to a fitting conclusion the professional career of Mr. F. M. Wallace, who, since 1888, has conducted both this Society and the Liedertafel. The programme included Mozart's 'Figaro' Overture, the Larghetto from Beethoven's Symphony in D, the Andante from Haydn's Symphony No. 4, and various part-songs. Mr. Wallace played Rust's Violin Suite in D minor, in addition to appearing as conductor. In the interval an illuminated address, together with a gold watch and chain, were presented to Mr. Wallace in recognition of his valuable services to the two societies named.

FORFAR (N.B.).—The Philharmonic Society gave a most successful performance on February 6 of Elgar's 'King Olaf' and the choruses from Bach's church cantata, 'Sleepers, wake!' under the able direction of Mr. M. B. Kidd. A small orchestra from Glasgow, with Mr. Cole as principal violinist, supplied the accompaniments, and the soloists were Miss Eva Rich, Mr. Henry Brearley, and Mr. McLean Borthwick.

GREENOCK.—The Choral Union resumed their concerts on February 3 after an interval of five years, necessitated by insufficient public support, and the result fully justified their reappearance. The works chosen were Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha' and 'Hiawatha's Departure,' in which the choir sang with confidence and displayed excellent tone. They were assisted by the Scottish Orchestra, who also played a Suite by Saint-Saëns admirably. The solo vocalists were Miss Retta Macallister, Mr. Henry Brearley, and Mr. Walter Harvey, while Mr. W. T. Hoock once more proved himself a skilful conductor.

HORSHAM.—The Musical Society gave their first concert of the season on February 8, when Coleridge-Taylor's 'Song of Hiawatha' was performed for the second time in Horsham. The principal vocalists were Miss Edith Evans, Mr. Henry Plevy, and Mr. Arthur Walenn, who were all excellent. Miss D. Lintott was the leader of an efficient orchestra, and Mr. A. P. Whitaker conducted.

HYTHE.—The Choral Society gave a concert performance of Gluck's 'Orpheus' on January 25. The soloists were Miss Florence Shee (Orpheus), Miss Gertrude Wood (Eurydice), and Mrs. Montgomery (God of Love). Dr. A. T. Froggatt conducted.

KILMARNOCK.—A concert was given on February 10 by the choir of St. Andrew's Church, Kilmarnock, under the able conductorship of Mr. A. Dinsdale. The principal items were 'The Forging of the Anchor,' by Sir F. Bridge, and the Choral Ballad 'The Charge of the Light Brigade,' by Dr. Arthur Somervell, both of which were sung with orchestral accompaniment. The part-song 'There is music by the river' (Pinsuti) was rendered without accompaniment. The baritone solos in 'The Forging of the Anchor' were well rendered by Mr. P. Howie. Miss Jeanie B. Reid contributed songs with much acceptance, and Mr. Richard Daebnitz was leader of the orchestra and solo violinist.

LEYTONSTONE.—Dr. W. Lemare gave a Jubilee Concert on February 16 at St. Catherine's Church Room, assisted by members of his Choral Society and a small orchestra. The programme consisted of Bridge's 'Cradle of Christ,' Cowen's Choral Ballad, 'John Gilpin,' and Lane Wilson's Song-Cycle, 'Flora's Holiday.'

LLANELLY.—A performance of Mendelssohn's oratorio 'St. Paul' was given by the Tabernacle Choir on February 7, under the leadership of Mr. C. Meudwy Davies. The solos were taken by Madame Bertha Rossow, Madame Nelli Davies, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. Jno. Walters. An excellent orchestra assisted, and Miss Blodwen Davies presided at the organ. This was the twenty-sixth annual oratorio concert given by the choir.

LUTON.—The Choral Society gave their second Subscription Concert in the Plait Hall on February 8, when the occasion was distinguished by the appearance of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, who conducted his Three Dances from the 'Little Minister,' Scottish Concerto (pianoforte part played by Mr. F. Gostelow), Overture 'Britannia,' and Pibroch Suite (Mr. Rowsby Woof, solo violinist). The programme also included Stanford's 'The Revenge' and Mendelssohn's Psalm 'Why ragest fiercely the heathen?' conducted by Mr. Gostelow. Madame Alice Esty was the solo vocalist. During the interval Sir Alexander was presented with a handsome silver cigar box by the Mayor of Luton on behalf of the members of the Society.

NEWPORT (Mon.).—The Choral Society gave an excellent performance of 'Elijah' at Tredegar Hall on February 16. An admirable cast of principal vocalists was provided in Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies—the last-named artist giving a magnificent interpretation of the title-rôle. The band and chorus of 180 were more than efficient, and Mr. Arthur Sims, who has been connected with the Society since its formation, and who made his first appearance as its conductor on this occasion, should be encouraged to further efforts by the success of his initial performance.

READING.—The Orpheus Society's programme on February 1 secured a very large and enthusiastic audience. Sir Charles Stanford conducted his 'Songs of the Sea,' which were magnificently sung by Mr. Plunket Greene, supported by the choir of over 100 men, who entered into the spirit of them with great vigour. Mozart's 'Figaro Overture,' Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony, and two of Godard's Scènes Poétiques were excellently played by the orchestra—of which Mr. Alfred Burnett was the principal violinist—under Dr. F. J. Read.

SCUNTHORPE (DONCASTER).—The Choral Society gave a concert in the Public Hall on February 7, when the chief features of the programme were Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen,' Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and Dudley Buck's 'Hymn to Music.' The choir sang with much spirit, and the orchestra were excellent, although they occasionally overpowered the choir. The solo vocalists were Miss Lillie Wormald, Miss Gertrude Robinson, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. Herbert Brown. Mr. F. C. Nicholson conducted with care and skill. The Society will next season complete its twenty-fifth year, when it has been decided to hold a two-days' Musical Festival.

STOCKPORT.—The Vocal Union gave their third concert (thirty-second season) in the Mechanics' Institute on February 6, when the programme included Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' and the following part-music: 'Come, let us join the roundelay' (Beale), 'The Voyagers' (Facer), 'The fisherman's good-night' (Bishop), 'The Troubadour' (Macfarren) and the 'Country fair waltz-song' (Abt). Dr. Henry Watson conducted as usual.

Answers to Correspondents.

A. H. (Sydney).—To give the history of 'Auld lang syne' would occupy too much space in this column; but we will endeavour to give you the chief facts in a few words: 'Auld lang syne' is a true folk-song, both words and music. Robert Burns is often credited with the authorship of the words, but he merely polished the native pebble and fashioned this Scottish gem into its present beautiful form. The earliest known origin of the song is an anonymous 15th century poem, entitled 'Auld kyndness forgett,' in modern parlance, 'Should auld acquaintance be forgot.' The first record of the present version is found in Burns's well-known letter to Mrs. Dunlop, dated December 17, 1788, which contains the song 'Auld lang syne,' the second, third and fourth verses of which Allan Cunningham attributes to Burns. In regard to the music of this famous song, there are two tunes—an old one which Burns knew, and another strain, first printed with the Burns version of the words in July, 1799, three years after the poet's death. Although the more modern tune has undergone a process of evolution, it is really a folk-song, and cannot be traced to any particular composer. To show the extent of the changes this melody has undergone, we have before us no fewer than thirteen variants, ranging from 'Apollo's Banquet,' sixth edition, 1690, to Thomson's 'Select Collection of Scottish Songs,' published in 1779. The latter collection contains the tune as we now know it—a melody dear to the heart of every Scot the wide world over.

1ST VIOLIN.—In a work so full of subtleties as 'The Dream of Gerontius' it is impossible to suggest cut-and-dried interpretations of the various expression indications with which the score is enriched. In all cases such signs as sf, ff, sfz, &c., must be governed by the context—for instance, sf in a pianissimo passage would not have the same intensity as in a phrase marked ff. But the great thing is to get behind the mere signs, and even the crotchets and quavers, in order to obtain an ideal interpretation of all music that is good and true.

G. G. B.—You will find brief biographies of the Italian composers Umberto Giordano, Alberto Franchetti, and Pietro Florida, in Baker's 'Biographical Dictionary of Musicians' (G. Schirmer, New York, and C. Woolhouse, London). Signor Cilea, the composer of 'Adriana Lecouvreur,' was born at Naples in 1867. He studied at the Conservatorio of his native city, and is now a professor of harmony at the Conservatorio of Florence. His operas are as follows:—'Gina' (Naples, 1889), 'Tilde' (Florence, 1892), 'Arlesiana' (Milan, 1896), and 'Adriana Lecouvreur' (Milan, November, 1902). The last-named was first performed in England at Covent Garden Theatre on November 8, 1904.

L. R. A. M.—(1) In playing 'a chromatic scale in major 6ths from A,' begin on A in the right hand and on C in the left. (2) The turn in Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata in A (Op. 2, No. 2), first movement, should be played thus:

B. H.—Yes, it is quite true that Mendelssohn did not compose the familiar tune specially for Charles Wesley's Christmas Hymn, as it formed part of the Festgesang, which he composed for the Gutenberg Festival of 1840 held at Leipzig. In our issue of December, 1897 (p. 810), we gave some historical notes on the tune. To this we have only to add, by way of correction, that its earliest appearance in a hymnal was in the Rev. R. R. Choppe's 'The Congregational Hymn and Tune Book,' published in 1857, and not in 'Hymns Ancient and Modern,' issued in 1861, as stated in the article.

R. W. K.—The subject of 'worship music, or the singing of praises to the particular deities worshipped by the different people of the world, such as the ancient Greeks, Arabs, North American Indians,' even without the 'etc.,' opens up a vast field for study. It is one that should be taken up in instalments, with visits to the various localities where the worshipped deities have their abodes. The evolution of the English hymn-tune is a much more practical subject, which, in the absence of any exhaustive treatise on the subject, can best be studied by examining actual psalters and hymnals of ancient and modern times.

HUNTINGDON, U.S.A.—When a hymn-tune is arranged for men's voices the melody is usually retained in the uppermost part. In the example you submit to us, the placing of the melody in the tenor part, with parts above and below, may have been for some special effect—the tenor singer of the quartet party making his part prominent, while the other voices were much subdued. Your transposed version of the tune is good.

E. M. S.—The Rev. Dr. J. B. Dykes composed a tune to 'Hark! the herald angels sing': it is No. 28 in the volume of hymn-tunes by him (Novello). In nearly all the hymnals Mendelssohn's tune, adapted by Dr. Cummings, is associated with the hymn. See answer to B. H.

J. S. G.—There are Strads and Strads, and 'Strads' that are not Strads. Any doubts you may have as to genuineness, value, &c., will be set at rest if you submit your instrument to Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, who, in return for a fee, will give you an expert opinion upon which you may safely rely.

A. R. C. O.—(1) For aids to playing from vocal scores with the alto and tenor clefs you might use the 'Examples in Counterpoint' primers by Dr. Gordon Saunders. (2) We do not know of any work on accompanying the Psalms other than Sir Frederick Bridge's primer.

J. S. S.—In order to pass the examination you name we should advise you to pursue a course of theoretical study under a good teacher. Why not take some harmony and counterpoint lessons by correspondence?

G. F. K.—Try the violoncello primer of Jules de Swert, and embrace every possible opportunity of listening to good players on the instrument of your choice.

W. Q. P.—To suggest alterations in the nomenclature of intervals is almost as futile as attempting to improve the staff notation. Time and energy can be so much better spent: more art, less machinery.

J. V. B.—The carol 'Born in the winter hoary,' by W. Howell Allchin, is probably out of print. The business of Mr. W. R. Bowden, of Oxford, the publisher of the carol, has long ago been given up.

H. C.—For duets composed for contralto and baritone voices try 'False love and true' (Pinsuti), 'Gardener, thy tree am I' (Schumann), and 'Spring of Love' (Sieber).

L. H. H.—The piece you inquire about is probably entitled 'The Silver Trumpets,' composed by Viviani, and published by Messrs. Chappell.

A READER.—Dr. G. B. Arnold's setting of 'The Lord is my Shepherd' is published by Messrs. Weekes & Co.

G. G. R.—Messrs. Novello will send you a list of Toy Symphonies on application.

M. U. (Dülken).—Please see the reply to J. S. G.

"ELIJAH" (ABINGDON).—"Mr. Henry Sunman sang with all his old vigour and artistic finish in the title-role, which made that impression it always will under the treatment of an able exponent. The part, with its somewhat high range, suited Mr. Sunman's resonant voice admirably. In the more dramatic passages, especially in those preceding the Baal choruses, as also, in a quieter but equally dramatic strain, before the noble chorus, 'Thanks be to God,' he achieved a brilliant success, and worked up the situation to a climax in realistic style. He declaimed the recitatives very powerfully, and we need only cite the best-known solos, 'Is not His Word like fire?' and 'It is enough, as instances of Mr. Sunman's ability to interpret both words of the Prophet as expressed in music."—Abingdon Herald, Feb. 11, 1905.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S PASSION SERVICE

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul has to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

CHURCH HYMNS

NEW EDITION

CONTAINING 658 HYMNS.

Although published at so recent a date, the New Edition has already been adopted in nearly 200 churches, including the Chapel Royal, Buckingham Palace.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

The Guardian says: "The book in every way has been very much enriched and improved. It is worthy of the great Society which issues it, and will no doubt obtain the circulation that it deserves. The musical value of the present collection must be rated high."

The Church Times says: "Judging the collection as a whole, we consider it a fine tune-book, ably edited, and worthy of a very high place among our English hymnaries."

Dr. C. W. PEARCE, in The Organist and Choirmaster, says: "One is compelled to say, upon closing this book, that in many ways the new edition of 'Church Hymns' surpasses the other collections now in use in the Church of England."

The Musical Times says: "The copious indexes are all that could be desired, and Dr. Lloyd has discharged his editorial duties with conspicuous success. The book is a welcome contribution to the worship-song of the Church."

The Record says: "A hymn-book worthy to take its place as a representative of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge."

The Countess of Jersey, in 'The Nineteenth Century and After,' says: "The names [of the Committee] are in themselves a guarantee of the high standard, devotional and poetical, maintained in this volume. Exceptionally good is the selection of Children's Hymns."

IN ORDER TO FACILITATE THE INTRODUCTION OF THE BOOK, CERTAIN EDITIONS WILL BE SUPPLIED AT ONE HALF THE FULL PRICE.

For purposes of comparison of "Church Hymns" with other compilations, a copy of the Musical Edition will be sent to any applicant at half-price, 1s. 2d., and postage 4d.

A List of Editions, Specimen Pages, and Prices of Hymn Books (Words only), Prayer and Hymn Books in one volume, and Hymn Books with Music, will be sent on application.

THE

PRINCE OF PEACE

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE

AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Is well ahead of all Mr. Gaul's previous efforts. . . . Special mention may be made of the treatment of the parable of the Prodigal Son, which occupies a conspicuous place."—Daily Star.

"The Victoria Hall, Hanley, was well filled by an audience who gave enthusiastic evidence of their approval of Mr. Gaul's music. The chorus and band numbered 350 performers. . . . A striking feature in the form of a delightfully instrumented Eastern dance in itself is sufficient to enhance Mr. Gaul's reputation."—STAFFORDSHIRE CORRESPONDENT, The Musical Times.

"Judged by the appreciative reception accorded it by the crowded audience at Griffithstown, it bids fair to eclipse the popularity of the same composer's 'Holy City.' . . . 'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment. . . . Already we understand numerous requests have been made for an early repetition."— Fountains Free Press.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . .
"Thou art the King of glory, a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composet, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontane-ousness, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm.
This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it prove less popular than the composer's 'The Holy City,' we shall be surprised."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . It indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."— North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

SONATA IN E MINOR

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

COMPOSED BY

JOHN B. McEWEN.

"A work which will undoubtedly enhance the composer's reputation, since it is interesting to listen to and to listen to, the themes are individual and striking (they have a curious interconnection, at least rhythmically, in three of the four movements), and the whole should be very effective.
It is a pleasure to see a new sonata that is not merely a laboured effort to adopt an unfamiliar style, but a work cast in that form because it has been spontaneously imagined in it."—The Times.

Musical score for the song "The Day After Tomorrow". The score is written for voice and piano. The vocal part consists of five staves, each with a treble clef and a key signature of one sharp (F#). The lyrics are: "way, Crying, a wake! it is the day and hurried landward far a". The piano accompaniment consists of five staves, each with a bass clef and a key signature of one sharp (F#). The piano part includes dynamic markings such as mf (mezzo-forte) and cres. (crescendo). The score is arranged in a system of five staves, with the vocal part on the top three staves and the piano part on the bottom two staves.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

SET TO MUSIC BY

G. F. HANDEL.

EDITED BY

EBENEZER PROUT.

THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY THE REV. J. TROUTBECK, D.D.

ABRIDGED FOR CHURCH USE BY THE REV. JAMES BADEN POWELL.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

THE present publication—an abridgment of the complete edition to about one fourth of the original work, but including most of its gems—is an attempt to make it available for Church purposes. The arrangement is planned with a view to bring out (i) the Institution of the Holy Communion, and (ii) the most important points in the Trial before Pontius Pilate, with the reflective (solo) meditations upon it, closing with the “Calvary” Chorus (“Haste, ye souls”), and the last Choral. This gives a more complete and consecutive selection than any other portions of this long oratorio.

For the sake of the Congregation, by way of giving them a response to what has been sung by the Choir, two or three Hymns may with advantage be introduced.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

Words only, 10s. per 100.

THE STORY OF THE PASSION

WITH REFERENCES FOR HOME STUDY

BY THE

REV. JOHN H. MATTHEWS, M.A.

Music and Words, 3d. Words only, 3s. per 100.

THE BISHOP OF LONDON “is much pleased with ‘The Story of the Passion.’”

THE BISHOP OF LICHFIELD: “Both the words and the music give good expression to the thoughts which should be uppermost in the mind of Christ’s disciples when Passiontide comes round.”

THE BISHOP OF CARLISLE: “It seems . . . very suitable for use in Passion Week, and I trust that it may have a large circulation.”

THE BISHOP OF MANCHESTER: “It has the great merit of being reverent in phrase, and sound in doctrine.”

THE BISHOP OF OXFORD: “The references at the end seem to me a valuable addition, such as I have not seen before.”

CHURCH BELLS: “A smoothly-written composition, and devotional in effect. ‘The Story of the Passion’ will be found useful at Good Friday Services, and the ‘References for Home Study’ will prove a help in private devotion.”

THE CHURCH FAMILY NEWSPAPER: “This Hymn is beautifully set to music, and describes graphically the Story of the Passion. The opening verses are set to a simple but most effective air, which changes for one equally beautiful, but with a deeper note of sadness as the Betrayal is described. We wish this Hymn all the success it certainly merits, and feel confident it will be warmly commended by all who try it.”

THE RECORD: “The words are of a deeply devotional character, and are set to music at once solemnising and impressive. We doubt not that ‘The Story of the Passion’ will become, as soon as it is known, deservedly popular.”

CHURCH TIMES: “A poem . . . of the ‘Story of the Cross’ type, but superior in quality both as to versification and musical composition.”

THE STORY OF THE CROSS

A FIVE-FOLD MUSICAL SETTING. By the same Composer.

STANDARD (London), August 1, 1904.

Mr. Maunder has long since proved his ability to write melodiously without becoming secular, and to meet the requirements of average choirs and congregations while preserving the dignity and solemnity of English Church Music. His Cantata is a happy example of his talents in these respects, and the work may be warmly recommended to the clergy and choirmasters.

DAILY TELEGRAPH (London), April 2, 1904.

The Cantata is of devotional character. Not a few of the composer's pages are effective, and show a skillful hand.

CHURCH TIMES, March 26, 1904.

The work is decidedly attractive, and should be a welcome addition to the growing stores of Passion Music. The writing is melodious, and there is considerable vigour in the chorus work.

MUSICAL OPINION, June 1, 1904.

The work is remarkably clear and effective. A feature of the Cantata is the choral writing, throughout plain and straightforward yet invariably impressive and beautiful. The solo portions reveal many points of melodic beauty and musicianly interest, and are quite in keeping with the general high tone and character of the Cantata. One does not need to be a prophet to foretell the ultimate popularity of "Olivet to Calvary" in Church singing circles.

MUSICAL NEWS, April 2, 1904.

The music which Mr. Maunder has written is marked by those qualities of appropriate expression, melodiousness, and absence of great difficulty which have made his compositions in the past so acceptable, and we are sure that this Cantata will prove very welcome. We cordially recommend it to the notice of choirmasters.

MUSICAL TIMES, March 1, 1904.

The composer has approached the subject with a full sense of responsibility and in a devotional spirit. The music is charged with that melodious attribute with which Mr. Maunder's name is favourably associated, and is free from interpretative difficulty. The Cantata is one that may be welcomed, not only for its appropriateness to the Lenten Season, but upon its own merits.

BIRMINGHAM POST, April 1, 1904.

The musical treatment is reverent, and the Cantata should be impressive.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH, March 28, 1904.

The music is impressive throughout, and the work forms a notable addition to its class.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY MAIL, March 9, 1904.

A glance at the vocal score reveals a style of composition calculated to please, the various sections betraying facile and scholarly workmanship. The soli are lyrical and effective, and the Cantata throughout is written in a popular vein.

THE LADY, April 21, 1904.

Organists and choirmasters will find the Cantata excellent for uniting the choir and congregation in a common interest. . . . "Olivet to Calvary" is an excellent work for a special service of song.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)

FOR

SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

ANTON DVOŘÁK.

(OF. 58.)

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY

FRED. J. W. CROWE

(Organist of Chichester Cathedral).

THE ACCOMPANIMENTS ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN BY

H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

NOTE.

This English version of Dvořák's "Stabat Mater" brings the beauties of the work within the reach of those who, for various reasons, prefer not to use the original Latin. The adaptation avoids the use of any passages of a controversial nature, thus making it available for use in any English place of worship; and, whilst preserving as far as possible the original rhythm, no pains have been spared to make this English version both vocal and practical.

Chichester, 1904.

F. J. W. C.

The accompaniment, while not professing to be purely an organ arrangement (which would necessitate the use of three staves) will, it is hoped, be found useful at the organ and at the same time easily playable on the piano at rehearsals.

Very few suggestions as to stops have been made, but the plain indication of the pedal part throughout the work and of the instrumentation (marked in brackets) will be a useful guide to the organist in his interpretation of this complex score.

H. E. B.

If there is one choral work of the past twenty years that can claim to have been universally and thoroughly accepted as a masterpiece by all who have any right to express an opinion, it is this most beautiful composition. Its position among the masterpieces of music is too assured to need any defence, and it may suffice to recall the fact that since it made the country's reputation in this country, it has been heard at the Cathedral Festivals of Worcester, Hereford, Gloucester, Chester and Lincoln, at the Birmingham, Norwich, Leeds, Sheffield, and Hovingham Festivals, and, of course, in countless churches and concert-rooms, one memorable occasion being in 1891, when the composer conducted it at Cambridge, on the day when he received an honorary degree from the University. . . . The version, which is by the organist of Chichester Cathedral, Dr. Crowe, is at a transition of the original, and not an irrelevant and absurd concoction like the unsectarian libretto, entitled "Tribulation," which one William Ball provided for Rossini's "Stabat Mater."—Yorkshire Post.

(STABAT MATER DOLOROSA)

ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY

REV. J. MONSELL

MUSIC BY

F. ROLLASON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

"A second performance of Rollason's beautiful setting of the 'Stabat Mater' was given in St. Michael's Church on Wednesday evening. . . . A second hearing confirms first impressions that it is a work of genius—as Canon Atkinson said at the close—a deeply reverent, sympathetic, and expressive setting of very beautiful words."—Coventry Herald.

"A feature of the service at St. Andrew's Church last evening, and which attracted a large congregation, was the rendering by the choir of F. Rollason's 'Stabat Mater Dolorosa.' In the solemnity of such surroundings and to an audience already impressed by the sacredness of the day, the beautiful music of this work, so touchingly descriptive of events connected with the Crucifixion, appealed with much force."—Newcastle Daily Journal.

OLD ENGLISH ORGAN MUSIC

EDITED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has, or some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day.

Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance. The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs. J. W.

THE PARISH CHOIR MANUAL

CONTAINING

THE CANTICLES AT MORNING AND EVENING PRAYER

SET TO APPROPRIATE CHANTS

FERIAL AND FESTAL RESPONSES, LITANY, RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS, FINAL AMENS, VESPER HYMNS AND VESTRY PRAYERS

TOGETHER WITH

ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS TO THE LORD'S PRAYER, APOSTLES' AND NICENE CREEDS.

The Canticles, with the Cathedral Psalter Pointing, have been set to appropriate Chants by Sir John Stainer, Sir George C. Martin, Sir Joseph Barnby, Sir George Elvey, and other well-known church composers.

The Responses to the Commandments have been selected from the Services of the above composers as well as those of Myles B. Foster, Dr. Garrett, Ch. Gounod, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Dr. C. H. Lloyd, Merbecke, H. Smart, John E. West, S. S. Wesley, and others.

Sir John Stainer's Sevenfold Amen is also included, as well as Vesper Hymns by Beethoven, Sullivan, and others; concluding with two Vestry Prayers by S. S. Wesley and the Rev. Canon Hervey.

PREFACE.

Organists, choirmasters, and librarians of choirs often have occasion to wish for a choral service-book of a comprehensive nature. This desideratum the "Parish Choir Manual" seeks to meet by supplying within one cover the Canticles for Morning and Evening Prayer, Responses (Ferial, Festal, and to the Commandments), Final Amens, Vesper Hymns and Vestry Prayers, in addition to organ accompaniments to the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds.

The constant usefulness and the practicality of such a compilation are obvious, and a glance at the names of the composers will assure confidence in a publication that should commend itself for use "in quires and places where they sing."

"This publication marks an epoch in musical pedagogics. . . . Professor Matthay's book must introduce system and order into what has been practically chaos. . . . No piano student can afford to dispense with a diligent study of this masterly work."—Daily Chronicle.

"Deserves the attention of all intimate students of the subject."—Scotsman.

"Mr. Matthay has struck out a new path. His aphoristic sayings go to the very root of the matter."—Glasgow Herald.

The most important contribution to pedagogic literature that has appeared for many years."—Manchester Guardian.

"The professor has dealt with the question from its fundamentals upward."—Liverpool Post.

"His explanations of success and failure in piano-playing will commend themselves to every thinker."—Belfast Whig.

"Every page has its deep, pregnant idea expressed in carefully chosen language. The influence of this extraordinary book should be deep and widespread."—Musical Times.

"It is a book no pianist—whether artist, teacher, or amateur—can afford to be without."—Musical Herald.

"Full of meat" from beginning to end."—Musical News.

"Nothing like it has ever been attempted before."—Musical Courier.

"This is indeed a wonderful book which lies open before us."—Organist and Choirmaster.

SIX OCTAVE STUDIES
FOR THE PIANOFORTE
BY WILLEM COENEN.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

"The musical value of some of the pieces is not inconsiderable."—The Times.

"Must needs prove most useful, and are not at all dry."—Daily Telegraph.

"The studies are quite as entertaining to the listener as they are serviceable to the performer."—Musical Opinion.

"Six clever and useful 'Octave Studies.' They are more than usually interesting."—Musical Standard.

"Excellent for practice."—Christian World.

"They afford a very complete course of study. The different numbers are tuneful and attractive, and the variety is great."—The Lady.

"Almost every branch of octave-playing is represented in these tuneful studies."—Church Bells.

"These studies are very melodious, and will make the irksome study of octaves quite interesting to the hard-working student."—Church Family Newspaper.

"Admirably adapted to formulate touch as well as style in this special branch of pianoforte technique."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"Fitted for advanced students. For wrist work No. 2 is excellent, and No. 6 is good enough for a concert piece. In all there is pretty equal work for both hands."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Six excellent octave studies (legato and staccato)."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

"Can safely be recommended to players who possess the laudable ambition of keeping up their technique."—Western Daily Press.

Hymns only, medium 32mo, diamond type, cloth, 4d. ; paper, 3d.

Complete edition, bound with HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN (Quarto), 7s. 6d. net.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern (Old Edition), so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

"DREAM OF GERONTIUS."

GLASGOW CHORAL UNION, February 7, 1905.

Soloists: Miss MARIE BREMA, Mr. JOHN COATES, and

Mr. MONTAGUE BORWELL.

"The soloists of last night did much for the performance. . . . The strong telling voice of Mr. Montague Borwell came out well against the chorus in the priestly music of the first part, and as the Angel of the Agony, he was also eminently satisfactory."—Glasgow Herald, February 8, 1905.

"Mr. Borwell gave a good account of himself in the dramatic music of the Priest, and the Angel of the Agony."—Scotsman, February 8, 1905.
"Mr. Montague Borwell, who hails from Westminster Abbey, delivered the words of the Priest with much force and feeling."—Glasgow Evening Citizen.

"Mr. Montague Borwell delivered effectively the bass solos, as the Priest in the first part, and the Angel of the Agony in the second."—Glasgow Daily Record.

"Madame Marie Brema, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Montague Borwell merit great praise for a studied and eloquent performance of the oratorio."—Glasgow Evening News.

BELFAST PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

OCTOBER 14, 1904.

Artists: Madame S. ANNE ADAMS, Herr KREISLER, and

Mr. MONTAGUE BORWELL.

"Mr. Montague Borwell, who is a baritone of exceptional merit, was also accorded a very favourable reception. He had chosen high-class songs, markedly in contradistinction to the ballad music which usually forms the principal feature of miscellaneous concerts, and all his contributions proved most acceptable. He first sang three of Rubinstein's delightful songs, which, airy and trifling as they may be, gave him an opportunity of showing his splendid command of expression: (a) 'The dewdrops shine,' (b) 'The Azra,' and (c) 'The Woodwitch.' Later on, Schubert's dramatic song, 'The Erl King,' found in Mr. Borwell a most efficient exponent, and his spirited character was splendidly manifested. There naturally followed an undeniable encore."—Belfast News Letter, October 15, 1904.

"Mr. Montague Borwell, a very promising baritone, whom I heard sing last year in the 'Elijah' with great distinction, made a most favourable impression on Friday evening. His items deserve, from a musical point of view, very hearty commendation. Schubert's 'Erl King' and three songs by Rubinstein, 'The dewdrops shine,' 'The Azra,' and 'The Woodwitch,' of which the second is a gem, pleased the audience. 'The Erl King' went magnificently, and 'The Azra,' a setting of a wonderful poem by Heine, had quite an electrical effect—that significant close was fully realised. Mr. Borwell's voice is exceptionally clear for a baritone, clearer, in fact, than most tenors. He uses it with great judgment and ease, and where contrast in tone quality was demanded, as in the 'Erl King,' where the three actors' voices are heard in succession, this was most tastefully accomplished, and with all due reticence. He had a good reception."—Belfast Evening Telegraph.

St. James's Hall, Queen's Hall Symphonies, Promenade, and Choral Society's Concerts, Crystal Palace, Alexandra Palace, Royal Albert Hall, and St. George's Hall Concerts.

ST. GEORGE'S HALL.

"Quite excellent too was the rendering by Mr. Charles Knowles of Sullivan's 'Thou'rt passing hence.'"—Daily Telegraph, March 9, 1905.

GLASGOW—SCOTTISH ORCHESTRA.

LAST CONCERT OF THE SEASON.—"Of the performance of these pieces, and the renderings of songs by Gounod, Henschel, and Wallace, it need only be said that they were of the best, of precise quality. Bach's 'Hourre' had to be repeated, and Mr. Knowles had to add to his selection Cowen's 'Border Ballad' and Haydn's 'To Anthea.'"—Glasgow Herald, February 27, 1905.

LIVERPOOL.—"GOLDEN LEGEND."

"The part of Lucifer is one which requires peculiar qualifications, just as does that of Mephistopheles either as conceived by Berlioz or Gounod. It is not every singer who possesses them, but Mr. Charles Knowles, the baritone of the evening, it may be said that he is well equipped with these attributes. His Lucifer had just the sarabanes, touch requisite to the assignment, and this was enhanced by the manly tones of his fine voice."—Liverpool Courier, March 18, 1905.

PLYMOUTH.—"GOLDEN LEGEND."

"Mr. Charles Knowles, the eminent baritone, who is considered one of the finest exponents of the great part of Lucifer now before the public. A fine conception of the part of Lucifer in the manifold disguises and typical musical humour, was that given by Mr. Charles Knowles, who excelled in giving point to the sardonic raillery of Father Angelo's soliloquy, his mocking chanting and disdainful sneers obtaining prominence by clever vocalisation. His fine voice was well suited for the work he performed with consistent excellence."—Western Morning News, March 6, 1905.

SHEFFIELD.—"KING OLAF."—(ELGAR.)

"Mr. Charles Knowles won further honours in a city that has not been tardy in its appreciation of his vocal endowment. . . . In the Conversion Scene he sang with dramatic fire, and throughout won for himself and the composer of the work added fame."—Sheffield Independent.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—"DREAM OF GERONTIUS."—(ELGAR.)

READING.—"LIGHT OF LIFE."—(ELGAR.)

"Mr. Charles Knowles was the baritone, and he charmed the audience with his beautiful rendering of the air 'I am the Good Shepherd,' which was one of the successes of the evening."—Reading Observer, Jan. 28, 1905.

ROCHDALE.—"CARACTACUS."—(ELGAR.)

"The success of the evening was however undoubtedly Mr. Charles Knowles. He possesses a splendid baritone voice, and in his work on the higher register was really splendid, there being not the slightest straining apparent even in the heaviest passages. On the lower notes he was most effective, and altogether his performance must be accounted a magnificent one. A hearty round of applause greeted his rendering of 'Leap to the light,' which was given with fine dramatic force and fervour, and his vocalisation of 'The Lament' roused the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm, the applause breaking forth again and again."—Rochdale Times, November 16, 1904.

LEEDS—WAGNER CONCERT.

"Mr. Knowles put unwonted suavity into Wolfram's Romance, and entered with spirit into the scene with Tannhäuser."—Yorkshire Post, December 8, 1904.

"Mr. Charles Knowles was quite at his best, and both as the King in 'Lohengrin' and Wolfram in 'Tannhäuser' his fine, broad tone and dramatic strength of expression called for the warmest praise."—Leeds Mercury, December 8, 1904.

DONCASTER.—"HJAWATHA."

"Mr. Charles Knowles' performance of two years ago is still a pleasant memory with us, and his appearance of last Thursday serves to enhance—if that were possible—our appreciation of him. He did his part nobly, portraying with exceptional dramatic power the various emotions, the exquisitely pathetic lament of the bereaved husband, his grief and dignity withal, his fortitude in his most trying hours, and the expression of his farewell."—Doncaster Gazette, January 21, 1904.

ACCRINGTON.—"THE SPECTRE'S BRIDE."

"Still confining the remarks to the Cantata it may be said that Mr. Charles Knowles, who took the very trying narrative parts falling to the baritone, fairly shared the honours with Madame Sobrino. The baritone solos and choruses were amongst the best features of the performance. Mr. Knowles' dramatic fire and declamation, and the admirable way in which he took the higher notes, brought down the house, and made him a first favourite. Who could fail to be captivated by his singing of 'And on he went with rapid gait' aided by the excellent work of the chorus; or the no less effective 'At the door there came a knock' with its strongly marked rhythm."—Accrington Observer and Times, March 12, 1904.

WARRINGTON.—"ELIJAH."

"Mr. Charles Knowles, the second Elijah, took up the part, and gave an interpretation that would not have disgraced Mr. Andrew Black himself. His dramatic instincts are fine. This was evident in the recitative and duet between Elijah and the Widow; when the duet between Elijah and the Widow after the sacrifice was excellent. Mr. Knowles gave a splendid rendering of 'Is not His Word like a fire,' his best effort in our opinion. In fact it may justly be said that it was indeed fortunate for all concerned that there should be present at such short notice a substitute so excellent as to turn what promised to be a source of disappointment into a splendid success."—Warrington Observer.

Now booking for next season. For terms, &c., address, Mr. Charles Knowles, 24, Acacia Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.; or leading Agents. Telegrams: "Singspiel, London."

MR. JAMES COLEMAN

(BASS)

(Vicar-Choral, Lichfield Cathedral, of the Birmingham Festival Choral Society, and Principal Provincial Concerts).

YORK SYMPHONY CONCERT.

"Mr. J. Coleman, who was the vocalist, possesses a fine, sonorous voice, and sang with great dramatic expression Coleridge-Taylor's 'Beat, Beat, Drums,' and 'Shoshone's Adieu' (the composer conducting). He also gave Wagner's 'O Star of Eve' with artistic expression, and the audience were not content until he had repeated it."—The Yorkshire Post, March 8, 1905.

"Mr. J. Coleman gave most dramatic renderings of Coleridge-Taylor's songs, and it would be impossible to hear a more expressive rendering of 'O Star of Eve.'"—The Yorkshire Herald, March 8, 1905.

"AN ELGAR NIGHT."

"'LIGHT OF LIFE.'"—The soli are short, one of the finest being 'I am the Good Shepherd,' the penultimate number of the work, which was finely sung by Mr. Coleman. . . . He also secured a popular success with 'A War-Song.'"—Birmingham Daily Mail, February 20, 1905.

"'GLORIA DOMINI.'"—Mr. Coleman did full justice to the music allotted to him. His fine voice was used with telling effect, and the amount of emotional feeling which he displayed was really a passionate appeal to the congregation. This was especially noticeable in the solo 'O Lord God of Israel.' . . . The performance was conducted by the composer, T. N. Noyce, at St. Mary's Strand, February 17, 1905.

"'FAUST' (Gounod)."—"Mephistopheles' serenade gave Mr. Coleman every opportunity of displaying his well-matured vocal powers, and 'Clear the way for the Calf of Gold' was admirably rendered."—Sutton News, March 11, 1905.

"Mr. Coleman again demonstrated the perfect command he possesses over his rich, powerful bass voice. He is one of the few artists who not only sings well, but who so enunciates the words that they can be heard distinctly in every part of the hall. His first song, 'Stars of Night' (MS.), fairly carried away the audience, who continuously applauded, and would not be denied an encore. Mr. Coleman's second song was also greeted with thunderous applause, and although he bowed his acknowledgments again and again, the audience would not be satisfied until he had sung another song."—High Peak News, March 11, 1905.

SIGHT AND PART SINGING EXERCISE BOOK

BY

T. B. KNOTT.

In these excellent studies, as used by the Author in his classes at the Royal Academy, Ear Training and the reading of music are thoroughly taught on a definite and systematic plan. The studies are specially designed to aid those who find themselves deficient in the perception of either Tonality or Time. They are strongly recommended to Vocalists and those students of keyed instruments, such as the Pianoforte, who do not accustom themselves to hear "mentally," and are consequently often unable, away from an instrument, to imagine the effect of the simplest phrase.
To such, this work should prove a boon.

Conductors of Singing Classes, and Tonic Solfaists, who wish to apply that excellent system to the reading of the old notation, will do well to make a note of Mr. Knott's book, which is divided into two main sections:—

PART I.—ON TONALITY.

PART II.—TIME AND INTERVAL STUDIES.

Vacant staves are appended to the Studies on Tonality for the purpose of transposition.

MANUEL GARCIA.

THE CENTENARIAN.

St. Patrick's Day, 1905, has become red-lettered in the annals of music. On the 17th of March Manuel Garcia celebrated his 100th birthday, or, to be more accurate, it was celebrated for him. His extraordinary vitality was put to the test in the two functions held in honour of the occasion, and to which reference will subsequently be made, but he passed through them both with wonderful fortitude and genial courtliness. It is difficult to realise that, when Manuel Garcia entered the world, Haydn was living, that Beethoven had not completed his thirty-seventh year, that Weber was a young man of twenty, and Schubert a boy of eight; and that Mendelssohn, Chopin, Schumann, Verdi, Wagner, and Brahms were yet unborn.

The Garcia family has strong claims to distinction. The father, Manuel del Popolo Vicente Garcia (born at Seville in 1775, died at Paris, 1832), was a celebrated tenor singer for whom Rossini wrote the part of Almaviva in his opera 'Il Barbiere di Siviglia.' Moreover, the elder Garcia composed no fewer than 17 Spanish, 19 Italian, and 7 French operas, in addition to a symphony and other products of his pen. A man of 'rugged discipline,' Garcia père made his mark as a teacher of singing; but so varied were his gifts that he excelled in the rôles of composer, singer, actor, and conductor. His genius-endowed daughter, afterwards Madame Malibran (born at Paris in 1808), was one of the most remarkable women of her day. She received her early education in England, and died in this country—at Manchester—in 1836, at the early age of twenty-eight. The versatility of Madame Malibran was manifested in her extraordinary vocal and histrionic achievements; in her powers as a linguist and as an artist, her sketches being very good and sometimes amusing;* while her vivacious temperament and ready wit found an outlet in a love of fun and mimicry. An instance of her drollery is related by John Parry, the composer and singer of refined comic songs, in an incident which occurred at an evening party given at Naples. Parry says:

Such a merry-making, frolicsome sort of party I never witnessed. We had much good singing, as you may suppose; but Mazzinghi's comic duet of 'When a little farm we keep'—which I had the honour of singing with Malibran—carried all before it, in consequence of the exquisite manner in which she sang the do, re, mi part of it; and when she repeated it she executed the florid divisions so delightfully and so brilliantly, yet quite different from the first time, that the company was enraptured. . . . The prima donna (Malibran) requested Lablache to sustain the low F, me to sing B flat, and others the harmonic intervals above, and to place the finger on the side of the nose, so as to form a drone, while she imitated the squeaking tones of the bagpipes in such a manner as to cause the loudest laughter, especially when we sank our voices very slowly together, as if the wind in the bellows was nearly exhausted.

Another member of the family—one who has also obtained fame as a singer and teacher of the vocal art—is Madame Pauline Viardot, who resides in Paris and bears her eighty-five years with charm of manner and geniality of disposition. But we have now to speak of her distinguished brother—Manuel Garcia, the recipient of so much honour on the attainment of his 100th birthday.

Manuel Patricio Rodriguez Garcia was born at Madrid on March 17, 1805.† He received his first lessons in music from his father and from different masters during the sojourn of his father at Naples, 1811 to 1816. As a boy of fifteen he took some harmony lessons of Fétis, at Paris. He came to England in 1825 (aged twenty) with his father and sister Maria (Malibran), when the latter, a girl of seventeen, made her first appearance in opera in this country, and achieved a triumphant success. At the end of the London season the family sang at concerts given in the provinces, their names appearing in the programmes of two of the Gentlemen's Concerts, Manchester (in September, 1825), the subject of this article being described as 'Signor Garcia, Junior.'

In the autumn of 1825 the family went to New York as the pioneers of Italian opera in America. The company which Garcia père took with him across the Atlantic consisted of himself and the younger Crivelli (tenors), his son Manuel, Angrisani and Rosich (basses), Mesdames Garcia (wife of Garcia, Senior) and Barbieri (sopranos), and Maria Garcia (Malibran) was the contralto of the party. From a New York paper called The Albion, of November 19, 1825, we give an extract from the prospectus of this first Italian operatic venture in the New World:

Signor Garcia respectfully announces to the American public, that he has lately arrived in this country with an Italian troupe (among whom are some of the first artists in Europe) and has made arrangements with the managers of the New York Theatre to have the house on Tuesdays and Saturdays; on which nights the choicest Italian Operas will be performed in a style which he flatters himself will give general satisfaction.

The price of the box places will be two dollars; of pit one dollar; and of gallery twenty-five cents.

The Opera of 'Il Barbiere di Siviglia,' by Rossini, is now in rehearsal, and will be given as soon as possible.

Later advertisements stated that the best operas of Cimarosa, Mozart, and Paisiello, with others by Rossini, would be immediately put in rehearsal. The orchestra consisted of seven violins, two violas, three violoncellos, two double-basses, two flutes, two clarinets, one bassoon, two horns, two trumpets, and drums—twenty-four performers in all, while a M. Etienne 'presided at the pianoforte'! The first performance took place, at the Park Theatre, on November 29, 1825, the opera being 'Il Barbiere.' Garcia, his wife, son and daughter sustained the principal parts, Garcia Junr. (now the centenarian) impersonating that of Figaro, the other characters being Almaviva, Garcia Senr.; Rosina, Maria Garcia (Malibran); Bertha, Madame Garcia (wife of the impresario); Bartolo, Rosich; Basilio, Angrisani; and Fiorello, Crivelli. The Albion (from which we have already quoted) gave the opera company an encouraging send-off in the following naive announcement:

We have been disappointed in not receiving a scientific critique, which we were promised from a professor, on the Italian Opera of Tuesday night; we shall, however, have something to say that the experiment has proved completely successful and the Troupe may be assured of making a fortunate campaign.

It is recorded, that 'an assemblage of ladies, so fashionable, so numerous, so elegantly dressed, had probably never been witnessed in an American theatre,' while another account refers to the representation in these terms:

We were last night surprised, delighted, enchanted; and such were the feelings of all who witnessed the performance. The repeated plaudits with which the theatre rung were unequivocal, unaffected bursts of rapture. The signorina seems to us as being a new creation—a cunning pattern of excellent nature, equally surprising by the melody of her voice, and by the propriety and grace of her acting. The best compliment that can be paid to the merit of the company was the unbroken attention that was yielded throughout the entire performance; except that every now and then it was interrupted by judiciously bestowed marks of applause, which were simultaneously given from all parts of the house. In one respect the exhibition excelled all that we have ever witnessed in any of our theatres—the whole troupe were almost equally excellent; nor was there one whose exertions to fill the part allotted to him did not essentially contribute to the success of the piece.

When 'Tancredi' was given, one of the company discharged the duties of scene painter, and, according to The Albion, with success:

The scenery, painted by one of the troupe, is of matchless vigour and beauty, displaying magnificent ruins, paintings, &c., so peculiar to modern Italy.

At a performance of 'Otello' Edmund Kean, then appearing at New York, was behind the scenes and congratulated Garcia on the performance. 'Don Giovanni' was given for the first time in America by the Garcia company on May 23, 1826, when Manuel appeared as Leporello. In this connection The Albion must again be quoted:

In Leporello the younger Garcia exhibited more musical ability than he has been generally thought to possess. His duet with Giovanni in the banquet scene was spirited enough.

This initial season of Italian Opera in America lasted from November, 1825, to September, 1826, the representation on the 16th of the latter month being a benefit for 'Garcia Junr.' and the last performance taking place on the 30th.

At the close of his opera venture in New York, Garcia Senr. took his company—except his daughter, Madame Malibran—to Mexico. Upon arriving there he soon found that the duties of impresario, composer, conductor, chorus-master, and even machinist and scene-painter, must all centre in himself. After eighteen months of hard work he decided to return to Europe. Owing to disturbances between the natives and the Spaniards, he had great difficulty in obtaining passports; but he at last succeeded, and set off for Vera Cruz provided with a guard of soldiers, which, however, proved to be too weak, or too faithless, to protect his goods. At a place called Tepeyagualco his convoy was attacked by brigands, and he himself was obliged to lie flat on his face while his baggage was plundered of 1,000 ounces of gold—the savings of his industry in Mexico. Garcia and his family escaped with their lives, and returned to Paris, where he determined to quit the operatic stage and devote himself to the teaching of singing.

An interesting period in the life of Manuel Garcia, the centenarian, to which allusion has not hitherto been made in any biographies of him, is mentioned in a recent article in Le Guide Musical. In order to escape from the somewhat overbearing manner of his father, Manuel, through the influence of his sister Maria with the Commander-in-Chief, obtained an appointment in the commissariat of the French army at that time engaged on an expedition for the conquest of Algeria. Thither Garcia went, embarking at Toulon on May 11, 1830. After the taking of Algiers he returned to Paris and was attached to the military hospitals in the French capital. He then took up medicine, his classical studies embracing the physiology of everything appertaining to the voice and the anatomy of the vocal cords. Upon joining his father as a teacher of singing, Manuel Garcia applied his medical knowledge to the greatest possible advantage, and his fame as a scientific teacher speedily became established.

and widely known. In the year 1840 he presented to the Institut de France his 'Mémoire sur la voix humaine,' a dissertation which obtained for him the congratulations of the Academy. This important treatise laid the foundation of all subsequent investigations in vocal-tone production.

The reputation which Manuel Garcia rapidly made caused Mdlle. Jenny Lind to journey to Paris for the purpose of studying singing under the distinguished maestro di canto. The 'Swedish Nightingale,' then in her twenty-first year, had strained her voice by over exertion and a faulty method of production. Upon her arrival in Paris, Signor Garcia,* after hearing her sing, said: 'Mademoiselle, vous n'avez plus de voix.' We have underlined the word 'plus' because this verdict has often been misquoted and distorted into 'Mademoiselle, vous n'avez pas de voix,' which is not what Garcia said. Under his skilful training and tender care that glorious organ soon regained its natural power and beauty, and Mdlle. Jenny Lind became one of the greatest of the great Queens of Song. Three extracts from her letters written from Paris during her studies in 1841 may be quoted; they are taken from the interesting 'Memoir of Madame Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt,' published in 1891:

I have already had five lessons from Signor Garcia, the brother of Madame Malibran. I have to begin again from the beginning; to sing scales up and down, slowly and with great care; then to practise the shake—awfully slowly; and to try and get rid of the hoarseness, if possible. Moreover, he is very particular about the breathing. I trust I have made a happy choice. Anyhow, he is the best master, and expensive enough—twenty francs for an hour. But what does that signify, if only he can teach me to sing?

I am well-satisfied with my singing-master. With regard to my weak points, especially, he is excellent. I think it very fortunate for me that there exists a Garcia; and I believe him also to be a very good man. If he takes but little notice of us, apart from his lessons—well!—that cannot be helped; but I am very much pleased, nay! enchanted with him as a teacher.

Garcia's method is the best of our time, and the one which all here are striving to follow.

Madame Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt, the most distinguished pupil of Signor Garcia, was ever grateful to him, even to the end of her life, for the 'few important things' which gave her the first practical insight into the technique of singing—an insight without which, as she herself felt, she would never have been able to attain her own great artistic ideal.

Auber appointed Garcia a professor of singing at the Conservatoire of Music, Paris. In 1847 he issued his 'Traité complet de l'art du chant.' This invaluable work, dedicated to King Oscar I., of Sweden, has been translated into various languages and has thereby gained a world-wide reputation. During his residence in Paris he must have fraternised with Chopin, Berlioz, Liszt, and other men of mark, musical and otherwise. If he would only write his reminiscences!

* We adopt the prefix Signor as being that by which the subject of this article is known in England and elsewhere.

All the biographies state that he settled in London in the year 1850; but they are wrong. He came here in the summer of 1848, hither driven, like many others, by the French Revolution. The Musical World of July 1, 1848, records his arrival in these words:

Manuel Garcia, the celebrated professor of singing in the Conservatoire of Paris, has arrived in London. He is brother to Malibran and Pauline Garcia, and was teacher of the latter, as well as Jenny Lind.

That this was not a visit, but that he remained in this country is proved by the records of the Royal Academy of Music, from which the following information has been kindly supplied by the

of autobiography he states how he made the discovery—

One day, in the autumn of 1854, I was strolling in the Palais Royal, when suddenly I saw the two mirrors of the laryngoscope in their respective positions as if actually before my eyes. I went straight to Charrière, the surgical instrument maker, and, asking if he happened to possess a small mirror with a long handle, was supplied with a dentist's mirror. Returning home, I placed against the uvula the little mirror (which I heated with warm water and carefully dried), then flashing on its surface with a hand mirror a ray of sunlight, I saw at once the glottis wide open before me, so fully exposed that I could see a portion of the trachea. From what I then witnessed it was easy to conclude that the theory attributing to the glottis alone the power of engendering sound was confirmed, from which it followed that the different positions taken by the larynx in front of the throat have no action whatever in the formation of sound.

The importance of this invention in medical science may be estimated from a remark recently made by so high an authority as Sir Felix Semon, who said 'that three per cent. of all human beings have reason to bless the name of Manuel Garcia.' In a paper which would have done credit to expert anatomists and physiologists—read before the Royal Society on May 24, 1855—Garcia set forth the scientific thesis of his laryngoscope discovery. We give the opening portion of this remarkable dissertation from the Proceedings of the Royal Society published in 1856:

The pages which follow are intended to describe some observations made on the interior of the larynx during the act of singing. The method which I have adopted is very simple. It consists in placing a little mirror, fixed on a long handle suitably bent, in the throat of the person experimented on, against the soft palate and uvula. The party ought to turn himself towards the sun, so that the luminous rays falling on the little mirror may be reflected on the larynx. If the observer experiment on himself, he ought, by means of a second mirror, to receive the rays of the sun, and direct them on the mirror which is placed against the uvula. We shall now add our own deductions from the observations which the image reflected by the mirror has afforded us.

OPENING OF THE GLOTTIS.

At the moment when the person draws a deep breath, the epiglottis being raised, we are able to see the following series of movements:—The arytenoid cartilages become separated by a very free lateral movement; the superior ligaments are placed against the ventricles; the inferior ligaments are also drawn back, though in a less degree, into the same cavities; and the glottis, large and wide open, is exhibited so as to show in part the rings of the trachea. But, unfortunately, however dexterous we may be in disposing these organs, and even when we are most successful, at least the third part of the anterior of the glottis remains concealed by the epiglottis.

MOVEMENT OF THE GLOTTIS.

As soon as we prepare to produce a sound, the arytenoid cartilages approach each other and press together by their interior surfaces, and by the anterior apophyses, without leaving any space, or inter-cartilaginous glottis; sometimes even they come in contact so

Secretary of the Academy, Mr. F. W. Renaut, specially for this article:

Signor Garcia was appointed a member of the Professorial Staff on November 10, 1848. On July 5, 1869, he was elected a member of the Committee of Management, and a Director in the year 1878. He relinquished his professorship and membership of the Committee of Management in September, 1895. In March of that year the completion of his 90th year was celebrated at the Academy, and on that occasion he was presented with a silver service.

Therefore, allowing for a possible break of a month or two, Signor Garcia was actively engaged in teaching singing at Tenterden Street for the long period of forty-seven years.

Leaving for a moment the musical side of his long and distinguished career, we may turn to the medical fame brought to him by the invention of the laryngoscope. In the following pleasant piece closely as to cross each other by the tubercles of Santorini. To this movement of the anterior apophyses that of the ligaments of the glottis corresponds, which detach themselves from the ventricles, come in contact with different degrees of energy, and show themselves at the bottom of the larynx under the form of an ellipse of a yellowish colour. The superior ligaments, together with the aryteno-epiglottidean folds, assist to form the tube which surmounts the glottis; and being the lower and free extremity of that tube, enframe the ellipse, the surface of which they enlarge or diminish according as they enter more or less into the ventricles. These last scarcely retain a trace of their opening. By anticipation, we might say of these cavities that they only afford to the two pair of ligaments a space in which they may and notes of moderate power, open both so as to render any observation easy. The falsetto register especially possesses this prerogative, as well as the first notes of the head-voice. Let us here observe that three registers of voice are generally admitted,—chest, falsetto, and head. The first begins lower in a man's voice than in a woman's; the second extends equally in both voices; the third reaches higher in the female voice.

easily range themselves. When the aryteno-epiglottidean folds contract, they lower the epiglottis, and make the superior orifice of the larynx considerably narrower.

The meeting of the lips of the glottis, naturally proceeding from the front towards the back, if this movement is well managed, it will allow, between the apophyses, of the formation of a triangular space, or inter-cartilaginous glottis, but one which, however, is closed as soon as the sounds are produced.

After some essays, we perceive that this internal disposition of the larynx is only visible when the epiglottis remains raised. But neither all the registers of the voice, nor all the degrees of intensity, are equally fitted for its taking this position. We soon discover that the brilliant and powerful sounds of the chest-register contract the cavity of the larynx, and close still more its orifice; and, on the contrary, that veiled notes,

Huxley bore strong testimony to the great services that Manuel Garcia has rendered alike to science and humanity by his important discovery of the laryngoscope. Presiding at an influential meeting—held on July 14, 1877, when Garcia was presented with a service of plate—Huxley said: 'It was unnecessary to do more than remind the physician that in the laryngoscope he had gained a new ally against disease, and a remarkable and most valuable addition to that series of instruments, all of which, from the stethoscope onwards, had come into use within the memory of living men, and the use of which had effected a revolution in the practice of medicine. They owed this instrument to Signor Garcia.' Had Huxley been living, he would, at the recent centenary celebration, have re-echoed the words he uttered twenty-eight years ago, and joined many other scientists in paying honour to the veteran inventor and teacher.

Like many other musicians, Signor Garcia has been a chess lover. In this recreative connection we have peculiar pleasure in reproducing for the first time a drawing by the distinguished caricaturist, Richard Doyle, of the late Sir Charles Hallé and Manuel Garcia engaged in a game of chess. Doyle was not only a Punch artist, but every week one is reminded of his work on that light-hearted periodical by its title-page which he designed, and of which the signature on the left-hand corner we reproduce—a bird perched on a D, the monogram of 'Dick Doyle.' The Hallé Garcia chess-sketch we are enabled to present to our readers by the kindness of Madame Noufflard, of Paris, a daughter of Sir Charles Hallé. Accompanying a photograph of the sketch, Madame Noufflard has kindly sent the following interesting reminiscences of her father's old friend specially for this article:

'The drawing of Signor Garcia dates from the year of the Manchester Exhibition of 1857. It was done by Richard Doyle during a long visit made by him to my parents at Greenheys, and when Signor Garcia was also staying in Manchester. I was too young at the time to remember any details of those very interesting days; but my earliest recollections of Signor Garcia are those of the delight with which we children always greeted him, as he was ever ready to enter into our pursuits and to enjoy a romp. I remember as quite a child having undertaken to teach him German, and the solemnity with which he took his so-called lesson each day, although the teacher knew far less of the language than did the pupil. As we grew older he would often take us to his rooms near Manchester Square and explain the invention and uses of his laryngoscope with as much care and precision as if we were the whole College of Surgeons listening to him.

'In 1870, during the Franco-German War, Signor Garcia's sister, Madame Pauline Viardot, like many others, took refuge in London from Paris. Whilst there her house was the rendezvous of every talent; and I well remember one evening, when serious music had given way to fun, Saint-Saëns sitting at the pianoforte to improvise the "rising of the sun in a mountainous country." In the twinkling of an eye "old Garcia," as he was lovingly called, cut out a large halo from an old newspaper, and was seen slowly emerging from behind a high-backed chair, his full face, with its paper decoration, disclosing itself at the top, as the last triumphant chord was struck.

'I recollect him also as the talented and patient teacher always full of interest even in those whose efforts were feeble. And to his talents as a teacher was added the charm of courtly manners and never-failing wit and love of fun. This he gave a fresh proof of but two or three years ago, when in answer to the pleasure shown him by some friend who had not seen him for some little time to again meet him at a soirée, he said, with the characteristic foreign shrug of the shoulders, "Que voulez vous? Je suis trop occupé pour avoir le temps de mourir." Let us hope the dear old man will be able to say the same for many days to come.'

In addition to Madame Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt, the pupils of Signor Garcia have included Madame Mathilde Marchesi, Johanna Wagner, Charles Santley, and Julius Stockhausen. The last named relates a characteristic story of his illustrious teacher. In 1848 Herr Stockhausen went to Paris in order to take lessons from Garcia, and calling upon the master timidly inquired his terms. The latter replied, 'How much do you wish to give me?' I have no more pupils, they have all fled the Revolution.' 'But, honoured master,' rejoined the youth, 'you have just been trying a tenor who has a powerful voice.' Garcia replied: 'Yes, but he has no ear; and when I asked him what his occupation was, he said, "I am a turner." "Well," I answered, "very well, turn, turn again—no ear, no singer."' Mr. Arthur Oswald, another pupil and now a professor at the Royal Academy of Music, tells us that at one of his lessons he was stopped by Signor Garcia with the word 'wrong!' The pupil was surprised, because he felt sure that he had sung the right notes, also in time and tune, and with careful attention to the words and vocal phrasing. 'I will give you five minutes to find out,' said Garcia to the puzzled pupil, when he asked to be told the fault. At the end of that time the master said: 'Wrong production.'

As showing the importance which the veteran teacher attaches to poetic interpretation of all vocal music, we give three quotations from his valuable book 'Hints on singing' (Ascherberg), the said extracts being taken from the section headed 'Preparation of a piece' (p. 59):

The pupil must read the words of the piece again and again till each finest shadow of meaning has been mastered. He must next recite them with perfect simplicity and self-abandonment. The accent of truth apparent in the voice when speaking naturally is the basis of expression in singing. Light and shade, accent, sentiment, all become eloquent and persuasive. The imitation of instinctive impulse must, therefore, be the object of this special preparation.

A powerful means of exciting the mind to a vivid conception of the subject is to imagine the personage as standing before one, and let the phantom sing and act, criticising closely both efforts; then, when satisfied with the results, to imitate them exactly. By faithfully reproducing the impressions suggested by this creature of fancy, the artist will obtain more striking effects than by at once rendering a piece.

Another way is to recall some analogous situation in a work of art: for example, if we have to study the scene of Desdemona in the second act of Rossini's Otello, 'L'error d'un infelice,' one of the fine paintings of the Magdalene at the feet of Christ might occur to the mind. Grief and repentance could not assume a more pathetic form.

One of the most astounding things about this 'grand old man' of music is his vitality of body and vigour of mind at the rare age of five score years. He himself evidently thinks that his work is not yet done, because when a young lady applied to him last summer for lessons, he said: 'You are too young, your voice is not yet formed. Come to me in three years' time'!

THE CENTENARY CELEBRATIONS.

The reception, at the rooms of The Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, 20, Hanover Square, on March 17, to celebrate the 100th birthday of Signor Garcia, was of a highly interesting nature; moreover, it may claim to be considered unique by reason of its international character and from the fact that two professions, those of music and medicine, joined hands in paying honour to whom honour was due. Sir Felix Semon, Chairman of the Garcia Committee, opened the proceedings by stating that the memorable day had been auspiciously begun by the King. His Majesty had 'commanded' Signor Garcia's attendance at Buckingham Palace and had invested the veteran musician with the honorary commandership of the Royal Victorian Order. But this was not all. The King, in addition to offering his congratulations and recognizing all that Signor Garcia had done for medicine and music, intimated that he wished to be personally represented at the banquet to be held in the evening, and would desire his Lord-in-Waiting, Lord Suffield, to attend as his representative. Needless to say that this characteristic kind-heartedness of the King shown towards the hero of the day, acted as a splendid tonic to the centenary celebrations.

Two other European Sovereigns gave tangible proof of their esteem and regard. The King of Spain conferred upon his veteran countryman the Royal Order of Alphonse XII., and the German Emperor bestowed the Great Gold Medal for Science, a distinction that had only been previously conferred upon four other scientists—Virchow, Koch, Erlich, and Mommsen. Both monarchs sent messages of congratulation through their personal representatives—the Spanish Chargé d'Affaires (the Marquis de Villalobar) and Professor Fränkel. Addresses were then presented by the Royal Society of London, the University of Königsberg (which many years ago conferred the honorary degree of M.D. on Signor Garcia), the Victoria University of Manchester, the Medical Faculty of Heidelberg, Signor Garcia's old pupils, the Royal Academy of Music, and the Royal College of Music. There were also addresses or messages from about a score of English, Continental, and American Laryngological Societies, including the London Laryngological Society and the British Laryngo-Oto-Rhinological Association.

MADAME JENNY LIND-GOLDSCHMIDT.

Then followed the great event of the afternoon, the presentation to Signor Garcia of the portrait painted by Mr. John S. Sargent, R.A., of which we give a reproduction as a special supplement to the present issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES. In making the presentation Sir Felix Semon said that an album containing the names of the subscribers would be handed to Signor Garcia, and that about twenty laryngological societies and a large number of individuals had united to offer that testimonial.

After the portrait had been unveiled Signor Garcia rose to return thanks for the gift. In the course of his remarks he said :

How shall I thank you all, if your good-will should fail to interpret my poor faltering words? But that good-will is my most trusty staff. You, doctors, laryngologists, dear friends, to whom the little instrument to which such kind allusion has been made owes all its power for good; you, representatives of the great music schools of London in one of which I passed so many years, working happily beside brother musicians, and to the other of which I have so often come to mark with pride our own great art of music prospering beyond belief under the care of a beloved chief and genial staff; you, too, my pupils, among whom it rejoices me so keenly to welcome faces missed for many years and found again to-day, while others have been with me, near and dear; to you all, thanks from an old heart that did not know what youth it still possessed till it expanded to embrace you all. This portrait from the hand of this great master, which grew in happy hours, too few for me since they passed so rapidly in his companionship, shall be my pride and joy in the days to come. If you will bear with me a moment longer I should like to say one little inadequate word of thanks to him from whose initiative this wonderful demonstration has sprung, my friend Sir Felix Semon, with whose name I link that of an institution dear to me beyond all others, the Laryngological Society of London, and its chosen representative, that social Atlas, the Garcia Committee.

Among the musicians present were Sir Hubert Parry, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Sir Frederick Bridge, Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, Mr. Walter Macfarren, Mr. Santley, Mr. Randegger, Dr. C. H. Lloyd, Dr. Eaton Fanning, and Madame Blanche Marchesi, who brought a beautiful floral tribute from her parents, M. and Madame Marchesi.

In the evening a banquet, in honour of Signor Garcia, was held at the Hotel Cecil, attended by about 400 guests. Mr. Charters J. Symonds, M.S., President of the Laryngological Society of London, occupied the chair, on his right being the guest of the evening and Lord Suffield, the latter representing the King. In response to the toast of his health, proposed by Sir Felix Semon, the hero of the day replied in the following genial strain :

Words, one has said, are given us to conceal our thoughts. They will admirably fulfil that purpose if you take mine as a full and complete expression of my feelings on this extraordinary occasion. But words, whatever use we make of them, are not mere masks. They are living things, intensely living things to some, to those of us who hold the magic ring that makes them slaves. They are as mighty friends, friends such as you to me, who from the ocean depths of your indulgence fling back to me my own poor and trivial deeds, transfigured into something 'rich and strange.' There are so many of you to be greeted, old friends out of the past, old pupils, comrades, children! Ah, children! Sixteen societies of laryngologists, and mostly come of age, calling me 'father'! They will have it so, and I am pretty proud of the title, I can tell you. Well, do you think one solitary man could find fit words to answer all these voices? But you can do it for me. There is an old story some of you may remember, which when I read it changed the aspect of things for me by its very name, for that was a stroke of genius, 'Put yourself in his place.' What a different world it would be if we all did that. Well, you try now. Try hard. Think yourselves each 100 years old to-day. Not the ladies, I will not ask them. Though they may come to that, they will never look it, and they will never know it, and no one will ever believe it. But you men can try. Fancy you each have lived 100 years and woke to-day to find yourself surrounded by kindly clamorous voices, 'troops of friends.' What would you say? I think you would say nought. Only the infinite nought which circles all things could give an adequate answer to you all. I shall say nought to this great master of the brush, Mr. Sargent, who with a few creative touches in a moment brought life from void. I shall say nought to this rash friend of mine (Sir Felix Semon), who into the midst of a busy life crammed all the work and worry of the labour of love that has brought you here to-day; nought to the friends so very near my heart, the Laryngological Society of London, and the chosen band whose really terrible labours it fills me with remorse to think about—the members of the Garcia Committee; I shall say nought, nought, nought to all of you except just this, 'God bless you every one.'

In the course of the evening the hero of the banquet received the following telegram from the Prime Minister, Mr. Arthur Balfour :

I send heartiest congratulations.

CASTLE RISING AND SANDRINGHAM.

Castle Rising is a delightful and interesting village situated four and a-half miles from King's Lynn on the road to Sandringham. It can hardly be called a rising place, except in name, but it was formerly a township of considerable importance. From 1558 until the Reform Bill of 1832 it returned two members to Parliament. They were elected on the nomination of two landowners, the election taking place in the church with the Mayor as returning officer, and the agents of the two families managing the business. 'A Mayor?' someone who has visited the village may be inclined to exclaim. Yes; up to the year 1835 Castle Rising was an ancient Borough by prescription and had its Mayor and two aldermen. Moreover, until 1883, when this and other Boroughs, picturesque even in their ancient institutions, were effaced, Castle Rising had its separate Commission of the Peace. But it had no prison. Two logs of wood, called 'roaring Meg' and 'pretty Betty,' were fastened to the ankles of the unfortunate prisoners as their punishment. These primitive hindrances to liberty are still preserved in the castle.

The Castle Rising of to-day is celebrated for three things: the castle, the almshouses, and the church. The castle, more or less in ruins, is hidden from the distance by earthworks round it, only the top of the Keep being in view. As Mr. E. M. Beloe, the learned antiquary of the district, says: 'We have here one of the finest examples of the mighty earthworks which were raised to guard the Great Road which passed it. They are purely British. Nothing Roman has ever been found, and the form of the works does not denote that origin.' The castle itself is of the latter part of the 12th century, and has in some of its parts the most beautiful and refined designs of late Norman work. These have frequently been sketched and engraved, together with the whole of its exterior, and are well known. Within, it partakes of the usual form of a first-rate Norman keep. It is approached from the outside by a staircase which enters a large lobby, groined about a century after its building. This is the ante-hall to the great hall, and the entrance between the two is one of the grandest pieces of Norman work that we have. This magnificent arch has been for centuries blocked up to divide the hall from the ante-hall in order to make that a separate room for the keeper. When this arch was open the view of the hall from the ante-hall must have been very grand, and proves how lavish the expenditure of William D'Albini the Second must have been both on his castle and his church. To the right of the arch was an entrance to a gallery of the hall from the ante-hall: this gallery went down the side of the hall and along it were carried the necessities to the apartments at the end. To the left from the staircase, and also from the hall, was the entrance to the chapel, of rather unusual form, which remains fairly perfect. The local interest of the ruin lies in the fact of the imprisonment within its walls of Queen Isabella, mother of Edward III. The young king visited her there, and in his letters addressed her as 'carissima mater.' Viewed in the glorious sunlight of a perfect summer's day, this fine old castle is seen to the best advantage.

The Almshouses at Castle Rising are the perfect embodiment of a quiet resting-place, and form a most interesting and quaint feature of the village. In letters-patent and in all documents they are styled 'The Hospital of the Holy and Undivided Trinity of Castle Rising, of the foundation of Henry, Earl of Northampton.' The Almshouses remain as they were built, 1609-1615. To quote from Mr. Beloe* 'It forms a square court. The Chapel is on the side opposite the entrance, with the common hall on the one hand and the matron's residence on the other, and around are the rooms of twelve "poor women." It is a beautiful example of Norfolk brick architecture' (see p. 236). The old ladies who are so comfortably housed in this home of peace wear antique chimney-pot beaver hats, and their quaint red cloaks are adorned with the Howard badge.

We now come to the church, of which all the outside walls, except the transept, are late Norman. Mr. Beloe gives expression to his righteous anger at the changes which have been wrought in this ancient sanctuary. He says: 'The demon of restoration never has done worse work than has been done here. Salvin added a row of quasi clerestory windows without the slightest authority, and raised the roof: this was followed in a few years by Street's addition of a short transept, which was subsequently taken down. But, on the death of the Honourable Mrs. Greville Howard, in 1872, a sum of money was left sufficient to destroy all its beauty and proportion. There were added a story to the tower, costly and vulgar, a new porch rather worse, and the transept rebuilt.' But these terrible transformations have not much affected the interior, with its tower gallery, nor the fine Norman west front; a photograph of a section of the latter, showing the detail of the west window and part of the arcading, will be found above.

The church of Castle Rising is not only exceptional in its structure, but in its administration. There are four parishes,—Rising, the two Woottons, and Roydon—entirely free from episcopal jurisdiction, and also, except inductions, from that of the archdeacon; but they collectively form, under the rector of Rising, a kind of sub-episcopate, and each rector proves the wills of his parishioners. Probably this arose afterwards I showed the tune to Barnby, who passed it on to the Rev. R. Brown-Borthwick for insertion in a new Hymnal he was then bringing out. A curious thing happened. Barnby did not like one passage in my tune and wrote an amendment which I cheerfully accepted, and Barnby's patch appeared in Brown-Borthwick's book. A few years later Novello's "Hymnary" was on the point of coming out and my tune to "The roseate hues" was included in it. Shortly before publication, Barnby wrote to me asking me to reconsider one strain. It was the identical passage that he himself, not so very long before, had interpolated! I did reconsider it, or rather, as I suppose that one cannot be said to reconsider another man's idea, I changed it; and the result now stands in the "Hymnary." My old master Garrett discovered a likeness between the second part of my tune and a song then in vogue called, I think, "The Mouse-trap Man." I am bound to admit that there is a certain justification for the gibe, though I emphatically declare I had never heard the ditty in question when I wrote "Castle Rising." It was Garrett's delight to hum the phrase in question in a casual, abstracted manner in my hearing, especially when he thought I wanted taking down a peg!

Castle Rising has given the name to a well-known and melodious hymn-tune composed by the Rev. Canon F. A. J. Hervey, C.V.O., Domestic Chaplain to the King. The origin of the tune may be told in the composer's own words as related to the writer of this article. 'I wrote the tune,' says Canon Hervey, 'in my Cambridge undergraduate days. I was staying for a few days, as I very often did, at Castle Rising rectory with my uncle, the late Chancellor Bagot, who was rector of the parish for very many years. I was waiting in the drawing-room for some of my cousins with whom I was going out somewhere, probably bent on mischief of some sort. Lying on the pianoforte—that dear old Broadwood grand, how well I remember it!—was a copy of "Hymns Ancient and Modern," and a scrap of blank music-paper, and I had a pencil in my pocket. I happened to open the book at "The roseate hues" and found a tune—mind, that was in the first edition—that hardly seemed to me to suit the words; and then and there, standing with elbow on the lid of the piano, I scribbled down the tune, instinctively changing the rhythm at the fifth line, in which respect I see that I have been followed by other setters of the same hymn. Soon

When Canon Hervey as a boy visited his uncle at Castle Rising he little thought that he would one day become rector of the neighbouring parish of Sandringham, the country home of the King.

SANDRINGHAM.

From Rising we go down the hill and over the marsh, in the centre of which runs a river wending its way from the chalk hills of Norfolk to the sea: this river divides the Castle Rising and Sandringham estates. Straight away for the next half-mile is Butler's Cross, the broken shaft of which marks the boundary of the chase of Rising as distinguished from its estate, and here the interest in Sandringham begins.

Sandringham is the mansion with the accessories to a large property belonging to the King, together with the residences of those who are attached to his Majesty, or who are useful to the upkeep of the estate. The mansion and park with these residences have been for centuries alone—it is the several villages aggregated around which form Sandringham, these villages being Babingley, West Newton, and Wolferton, and in the 18th century Appleton was added.

But Sandringham is of special interest, for it is the seat of him who represents the modern power of the Empire. The estate formerly belonged to the Henleys, who sold it on the death (in 1834) of Mr. H. Hoste Henley to Mr. Motteaux, of a well-known Huguenot family settled at Beachamwell, in Norfolk, and he bequeathed it to the Honourable Spencer Cowper: In 1863 Mr. Cowper sold the estate to the Prince of Wales.

At West Newton, the working settlement of the whole estate—as it comprises the houses of the labourers who toil thereupon—everything is in beautiful order, and all the recent alterations have not injured its great natural beauty. The church of SS. Peter and Paul, standing on a slope, was restored at the sole expense of his Majesty, and Queen Victoria gave the organ. The club house for the use of the inhabitants, and opened on November 9, 1884, is managed by the labourers themselves.

About a mile beyond is Appleton, which came to the Sandringham estate in 1710; by its ruined church stands the residence of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess Charles of Denmark. York Cottage, the residence of the Prince of Wales, stands within the grounds of Sandringham. It has a lovely outlook over the lake and woodland and deer of the Park, and then we come to Sandringham House, the country home of the King.

The old house—a square, cemented building—was pulled down, and has been rebuilt by his Majesty. As it now stands, the house is in singularly good taste, with no pretension: in fact, the residence of a country gentleman, with every accommodation for his distinguished visitors. A short time before his accession the King purchased Anmer, and with it a great part of Shernbourne, thus greatly extending his estate, which now consists of 11,000 acres. One day in the week during the summer his Majesty is graciously pleased to throw open the beautiful grounds of Sandringham, wherein visitors are allowed to visit the kennels, stables, church, &c., without let or hindrance. Over the whole of his property the King exercises a personal superintendence which cannot be excelled by any practical farmer in the county. Everything receives his individual attention, and all improvements spring from his Majesty himself. In this, the work of his private life, there is order and skilful management: this is the King at home.

Sandringham Church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, and picturesquely situated in the Park, is a small building in the Perpendicular style; it comprises nave, chancel, transepts, western tower, and south porch. The transepts contain four beautiful stained-glass windows by Messrs. Heaton and Butler, the gifts respectively of her late Majesty Queen Victoria, H.R.H. the late Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, the late Mr. F. W. Gibbs, Q.C., and the members of his Majesty's Household. The west wall of the tower is adorned by a window, by the same artists, erected in memory of carved oak work, affording accommodation for the late Duke of Clarence by his Royal Highness's the King and Queen and other members of the brother officers in the 10th Hussars, and in the chancel are four small windows (also by Messrs. Heaton and Butler) presented by the King, one being in memory of the infant Prince who died at Sandringham in 1871, and whose little grave is in the churchyard immediately beneath the east window. The two windows in the nave are filled with Munich glass, and the stained glass in the east window is by Messrs. Clayton and Bell. On each side of the chancel which contains medallions in marble to the memory of several members of the Royal Family, including one to Queen Victoria—is a spacious seat of open Royal Family, their Majesties' guests, and Household.

The organ is placed at the west end of the church, as shown on p. 237. The organist of the church is Mr. Arthur H. Cross, who has held the appointment since 1878. The choir, which is unsurpassed, consists entirely of the royal servants and their children, and the service is sung without any outside help. Canon Hervey says: 'We aim at simple excellence—or excellent simplicity, which?—i.e., Anglican Chants and "Hymns Ancient and Modern."

Fair efficiency is maintained by rigid exclusion of chants and tunes presenting difficulty as regards both compass and progression in any of the four parts.' How sensible this is. Would that other village churches had such a wise rector as the Reverend Frederick Alfred John Hervey, C.V.O., M.A., Domestic Chaplain to the King, Canon of Norwich, and Rector of Sandringham (with West Newton and Babingley), Norfolk.

For kind help in the preparation of the above article we are indebted to the Rev. Canon Hervey, of Sandringham, and Mr. Edward M. Beloe, F.S.A., of King's Lynn, who also has permitted the use of three photographs.

DOTTED CROTCHET.

CLIFTON COLLEGE AND ITS MUSIC.

The youngest of the great public schools of England, Clifton, is in the front rank in regard to music, as indeed it is in all educational achievement. While the classics are fundamentals in the school curriculum, the enlightened policy of its three successive and wise headmasters has permeated this modern foundation with healthy views of education: consequently antiquated and useless traditions have not been allowed to canker the usefulness of this splendid institution. Clifton College was founded in 1862. Its phenomenal success is due primarily to its first headmaster, Dr. Percival, now Bishop of Hereford, who opened it with sixty boys; and subsequently to Canon Wilson, now of Worcester. At the present time there are nearly 600 boys, a tenfold increase in forty-two years. Most schools have their ups and downs; but while Clifton, by reason of its natural environment, will always have its Downs, it has no cause to complain of its 'ups.'

One of the most healthily situated of public schools, its buildings form a picturesque group, as the accompanying photograph testifies. When the school was opened in 1862 only 'Big School' and the Head's house were built. In 1867 the beautiful College Chapel was erected by Mrs. Guthrie in memory of her husband, Canon Guthrie, formerly Chairman of the Council. The rector is enriched with some beautiful mosaics and other memorials to departed friends. The Quadrangle was proceeded with by adding the Percival buildings, to commemorate the beneficent régime of the first headmaster, and in 1889 the Great Tower was added and named the Wilson Tower after Canon Wilson, Dr. Percival's successor in the headmastership, who largely contributed to its erection. Of these subsequent additions to the fair pile of buildings, the library and museum are permanent tributes to the far-reaching influence of Dr. Percival and his successors in moulding the lives of the thousands of boys who have passed, and who will pass through the school.

As to the study of music at Clifton, a serious attempt is being made to render it possible for a boy to combine the advantages of a public school education with a musical training sufficiently adequate to enable him to make music his vocation if he so desires. How is this worked out? In the first place music is recognized as a serious study at Clifton. Engagements made for music lessons and practices have to be strictly kept. A certain weekly minimum of practice is insisted upon; but a large number of boys of their own free will habitually exceed this minimum. At the in full sympathy with the study of music, recognising it as a refining influence in a boy's life. The foundation of the music course at Clifton was laid by the first music-master, the late Mr. W. F. Trimmell. But the present healthy state of affairs is due to the liberal educational atmosphere of the school, combined with the exertions of the present organist and director of the music, Mr. A. H. Peppin, and of his able staff, which includes Mr. F. S. Gardner, Mr. F. W. Rootham, Mr. R. O. Beachcroft, and Mr. W. E. Smith.

It is interesting to learn some of the methods which have been so successful in results. The Music School (see the photograph on p. 239), built in 1898, consists of a fine hall suitable for full rehearsals of a choral or orchestral work. In the lower part are nineteen sound-proof teaching and practising rooms, which any boy can use for practice at any time, if the room is disengaged; and as every door is provided with a glass peep-hole, no occupant of the room need be disturbed by anyone in quest of practice. The boys are taught the organ, pianoforte, violin, violoncello, harmony, and class-singing. A ponderous ledger is kept, in which the name and record of every boy learning music is entered, with the title of every piece learned, or in the process of being learned, the date it was commenced and finished, &c. In looking through these lists of pieces, one is struck with the excellence of their selection, there being nothing unworthy of serious same time it is the boast of the music staff that the study of music at the school is carried on without any interference with the just claims either of school work or of athletics. Not only does the headmaster, the late Dr. M. G. Gluckbrook, support the efforts put forth by his musical staff, but the assistant masters are study even in the wisely given bright pieces, which boys of yet older growth delight in.

A valuable stimulus to the work consists of 'House competitions in music,' held yearly. Each of the nine Houses sends in three or four boys, pianoforte, organ, violin, or violoncello pupils, as the case may be to complete against boys from another 'House.' A preliminary competition settles the order of the final test, at which four 'Houses' compete for the Challenge Cup. An outside adjudicator makes the final awards, and the keenness of the competition furnishes a commendable incentive to earnest work on the part of and Strings (by Böhm), pianoforte solos (including a Prelude and Fugue from Bach's '48', violin solos, violoncello solos, and two folk-songs to test the capacity of the choir—all the music being good but not dry, interesting but educative, as of course it should be.

both teachers and pupils. To show the standard of work—that is the ordinary work, as distinct from mere examination grind—at these 'House competitions,' we give the programmes of the first four Houses at the competition held in July last:

Pianoforte—Song without words (No. 25) ..	Mendelssohn.
Violoncello—Adagio (Op. 38) ..	Bargiel.
Pianoforte—Wedding-day (Op. 55, No. 6) ..	Grieg.
Organ—Prelude and Fugue in F ..	Bach.

Organ—Great Fugue in G minor ..	Bach.
Pianoforte—Nocturne in G minor (Op. 37, No. 1) ..	Chopin.
Pianoforte—Waltz in D flat (Op. 64, No. 1) ..	Chopin.
Violin—Largo ..	Handel.
Violin—Meditation ..	Bach—Gounod.

Violin and Pianoforte Duet—Sonata (No. 2) ..	Bach.
Pianoforte—Study (Op. 47, No. 25) ..	Heller.
Violin—Romance in F (Op. 50) ..	Beethoven.

Pianoforte—Sonata, Les Adieux (Op. 81, No. 1) ..	Beethoven.
Violin and Pianoforte Duet—Allegro from Sonata in F (No. 5) ..	Beethoven.
Pianoforte—Prelude in A flat (Op. 28, No. 17) ..	Chopin.
Pianoforte—Romance in F (Op. 26, No. 1) ..	Rubinstein.

The foregoing list furnishes definite information of the solid and practical work—guided by artistic ideals and organized on common-sense lines—that is carried on among the senior boys in the school. No less satisfactory are the methods pursued in the Junior School. At the last concert—the performers being boys whose ages ranged from eleven to fourteen-and-a-half—the programme included a Trio for Pianoforte

It is quite possible so to exaggerate the importance of the study of music in a public school as to repel rather than attract the sympathy of boys and even masters. To start on a propaganda of making every boy musical, or compelling him to learn a musical instrument, would end in failure. But there is no reason why a boy should not be encouraged to take an interest in music, even though he may never become a performer. This is what the musical arrangements of the school are designed to do, and with results that justify all the thought and care bestowed upon them. And who can estimate the far-reaching benefits of such methods upon boys who in after life will hold positions of influence and responsibility? As showing how this interestization (if the word may be allowed) in music is carried out at Clifton, Mr. Peppin hands us the analytical programme of an orchestral concert given in 'Big School' last October, and at which a complete professional orchestra conducted by him played the following selection:

Overture ..	'Tannhäuser' ..	Wagner.
Symphony No. 7	Beethoven.
(Allegretto and Presto and Trio movements.)
Two Gavottes	Bach.
Overture to 'Rosamunde'	Schubert.
Two Hungarian Dances	Brahms.
Symphonic Poem 'Dance Macabre'	Saint-Saëns.

For a month before this orchestral concert—which is an annual event—informal and voluntary lectures are given on the various works to be performed. These discourses, with musical illustrations played on the pianoforte, are attended by at least 200 boys, all of whom soon get to know the principal themes—in fact, first and second subjects are being constantly whistled about the place. The whole school attends the concert and forms a most intelligent and enthusiastic audience: last October these music-loving young Cliftonians wanted to encore almost every piece in the programme, and not the least irresistible and unanimous demand for repetition was that of the Beethoven Presto and Trio! The exigencies of space prevent us from enlarging upon the concert side of the work done at Clifton,—the result of a natural and healthy growth after careful seed-sowing and skilled nurture—but we may mention that the ordinary resources of the school enable performances to be given of such works as Stanford's 'Revenge,' Mozart's 'Figaro' Overture and the first movement of Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet, played by the boys themselves.

In connection with the important matter of training listeners in music, some wise words of Mr. Peppin's may be quoted: they form the conclusion of an article on 'Music and Secondary Education,' contributed by him to The School World of June, 1900:—

A large and most important class of boys for whom a school music-master must provide is the class consisting of those who will never be performers, but, by the grace of heaven, may become intelligent listeners. The art of listening to music is a difficult one, and needs much training. You may, and should, provide concerts of good music for your boys, but that alone is of little use. Make them sit still and listen to a quartet of Beethoven's for the first time, and most of them will come away with the indelible impression that classical music is a thing entirely outside their ken. The net must be a wide one and must be skilfully cast. The programme should be short, and the individual numbers attractive and varied. Analytical programmes containing brief biographies and quotations from the leading themes should be printed and circulated for weeks beforehand. Boys should be encouraged to come to the music-school and have these programmes explained and the themes played over, and those who learn music should be persuaded to hammer the themes out for themselves. Everything, in fact, should be done to arouse interest in the pieces before they are listened to at the concert, because interest is the best preliminary to appreciation. The net must be wide even if only a few fish are to be caught. Many missionaries have found the truth of this, and a school music-master must always be something of a missionary.

Two choral services are held on Sundays in the School Chapel. The organ is unfortunately badly placed for sustaining an adequate accompaniment to a large number of voices; it would seem as if the west gallery was the proper situation for the instrument. The chapel choir consists of about fifty voices, including six or seven masters. It is interesting to know that Dr. S. S. Wesley specially composed for the College an anthem, a setting of the words 'Let us now praise famous men.' In this connection the 'Clifton College Register' (1904) furnishes the following interesting information:

The association of our music with the late Dr. Wesley is a memory of which the School may well be proud. In 1873 and 1874 Dr. Wesley wrote two anthems for us—one, that which we now use at Commemoration, the other a more elaborate composition to the same words. Some extracts from his correspondence with Mr. Trimmell will be found characteristic of the great musician:

October, 1873: 'My reason for not liking to set the words ["Let us now praise famous men," &c.] is this—I don't like much solo singing in church.'

A more difficult setting was first composed, the Doctor often referring to the fact that the words had 'proved a hard task.' This form of the anthem was intended for a professional choir. Upon its unsuitability being represented to Dr. Wesley, he wrote the anthem which we now use, the words only being the same.

In November, 1873, he writes: 'I hope I have not left out any words. One word I know I have; but I did not think it mattered, or I would have put it in. It is the word "for," in ver. 14 [Ecclesiasticus xlv.]. Oddly enough, Handel left out that word in his setting of the verse. It occurs in one of his Chandos Anthems, and used to be sung at Royal funerals. I did not think I should ever have set words which are all about mankind.'

In July, 1874, Mr. Trimmell received the easier anthem, which we now sing at Commemoration: 'I now send the second anthem I have composed to the words—the difficult words you gave me. I assure you they have proved a hard task. I am pleased with what I send, and hope it will suit your young warblers.'

From a large number of boys at a public school some are sure to become 'famous men.' Mr. Plunket Greene, a Clifton 'old boy,' is an instance; and one may hope that fame may come to H. T. Depree, another Cliftonian, who has obtained an organ scholarship at Clare College, Cambridge. Mr. Depree gained this distinction while still at Clifton, where he had been taught exclusively from the age of eleven. Other musical scholarships recently gained by Clifton boys have been the Stewart of Rannoch University Scholarship for Music (Cambridge), and the Organ Scholarship at Worcester College, Oxford, gained by Mr. C. B. Allen, who was trained at the school from his fourteenth to his eighteenth year, and subsequently for one year at the Royal College of Music. These are results upon which the musical staff are to be warmly congratulated. That the College is showing increased interest in the art is proved by the offer of an open scholarship for Music of £25 a year (with possible augmentation) to a candidate showing sufficient knowledge in Latin, Mathematics, English, and French.

Finally, no better testimony to the value of music as an educational influence at Clifton College could be borne than the opinion of the Head Master, the Rev. Dr. Glazebrook, who has kindly contributed the following remarks specially for this article:

'The object which we have set before us for the last eight years is to give music a definite place as an integral part of a liberal education. Therefore, though we have welcomed exceptional talent and tried to develop it, we have thought chiefly of the influence of music upon the school as a whole. Not that every boy should learn either to sing or to play an instrument,—only about one-third of the whole number do so—but that every boy should feel music to be part of his life. Thanks to Mr. Peppin, and the able masters who work so harmoniously with him, a large measure of success has been attained.

'Long ago I learned from John Farmer, at Harrow, to regard music as a moral agent. Unison "house-singing" of the type which he invented has been an institution at Clifton for a dozen years. The good-fellowship and good feeling which are promoted by all singing together, whether they have voices or not, do not cease with the moment, but are a permanent influence making for unity. Nor is it less important that familiarity with wholesome words and tunes defends the mind and the lips from much that is trivial or base in the popular songs of the day. This kind of singing has been wisely encouraged by Mr. Peppin, though he has left the management of it to amateurs. His own principal work has been to give music the intellectual hold without which it cannot exercise its full powers.

'By various means a remarkable degree of interest has been aroused. The average boy, who can neither

And the few boys of real talent are greatly benefited. In the attitude of others they find at once a stimulus to effort and a check upon pretension, for they have not that consciousness of singularity which is the root of affectation.

'Intellectual and moral influences unite in the chapel service. The increased love of music, together with the wonderful improvement of the choir, has lent a new grace to worship, without in any degree diminishing reverence. Again and again I hear from old boys that some of their happiest recollections of Clifton are connected with the psalms and hymns which they learned to love there.

'He who cherishes such memories is under the spell of music still. He has taken with him into play nor sing, at least testifies to the reality of music by his criticisms. He can judge solo performances with only partial reference to the popularity of the player. He can often show a real appreciation of long orchestral pieces, and discuss them, if not with knowledge, at least with pleasure. Indeed, it is delightful to sit among the school at an orchestral concert for which Mr. Peppin's lectures have prepared them, and see how intelligently the boys enjoy music of a high class. This creates an atmosphere at once critical and sympathetic, which is highly favourable to all degrees of ability. Average boys, who cannot expect ever to play well, are encouraged to a degree of careful effort which disciplines the mind and trains the perceptions better than some regular school subjects. Those, again, who have a moderate gift make the most of it, and often play surprisingly well: so that there are now individual houses which can give as good a concert as the whole school could offer ten years ago.

manhood a sensibility to that great art which is second only to poetry in the power to refine feeling and interpret life. When music is not a thing apart, making for singularity, but woven into the texture of a liberal education, the mind in which it lives cannot but be sympathetic and humane.'

The Royal Library at Berlin has just purchased the valuable collection of Bach autographs and manuscripts which formerly belonged to Franz Hauser, after whose death they became the property of his son Josef, who died last year. There are said to be 194 cantatas, the autograph of the 'Luke' Passiön, and various instrumental works, of which 282 sheets are in Bach's own handwriting.

Occasional Notes.

He that can set and humour notes aright,
Will move the soul to sorrow, to delight,
To courage, courtesy, to consolation;
To love, to gravity, to contemplation:
It hath been known (by its magnetic motion)
To raise repentance, and advance devotion.
It works on all the faculties, and why?
The very soul itself is harmony.
Music it is the breath of second birth,
The saints' employment and the angels' mirth,
The rhetoric of Seraphims; a gem
In the King's Crown of New Jerusalem:
They sing continually; the exposition
Must needs infer there is no intermission.
I hear some men hate music; let them show
In holy writ what else the angels do:
Then those that do despise such sacred mirth,
Are neither fit for Heaven, nor for Earth.

ANON. 1678.

The performance of Sir Hubert Parry's oratorio 'Judith' recently given at Huddersfield and noticed by our Yorkshire correspondent, deserves more than passing recognition. Huddersfield rejoices in the possession of chorallists especially gifted with fine resonant voices, and with an unbounded enthusiasm for the art in its highest forms. When such rich and obediently plastic material is shaped by the will of a chorus-master like Dr. Coward, and applied to the interpretation of a masterpiece of modern choral writing, it may be imagined that the result must be supremely fine. It was astonishing to hear chorus after chorus sung, now with exciting vehemence and now with dainty delicacy, and to find that in the superb numbers at the end of the work these inexhaustible singers surpassed their previous record in piling up magnificent climaxes. What inspiration and encouragement our English school of composers may derive from this display of ability and enthusiasm! What thrills of pleasure Sir Hubert Parry, who conducted, must have experienced on finding his imaginings gorgeously and vividly realized as probably they never have been before in this work! He has attempted to voice his feelings in the following letter sent to the secretary of the Society:

Royal College of Music,
South Kensington, London.

March 9, 1905.

Dear Mr. Eagleton,—I must just send you a line to express my appreciation of the admirable forces you put at my disposal for the performance of 'Judith.' The orchestra really acquitted themselves most admirably, and gave me the most agreeable feeling of being most willing and unsparing of their attention and efforts to do all they could for the work. Of course it was a great delight to me to have Agnes Nicholls for 'Judith,' and the little boys seemed thoroughly good. As for the chorus, of course they quite beat my resources of expression to convey even approximately my sense of their truly superb performance. Their vigour and certainty, and dramatic intelligence are quite amazing, and as for the volume of tone, I can positively feel it inside still. It is a perfect delight to hear such singing.

With many thanks also for your friendliness and deep interest.—I am, Yours very truly,

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

So, thanks to the Huddersfield chorallists, the familiar expression 'to get inside a composer's work' gains a new and interesting nuance of meaning.

Instances are happily multiplying of the favour meted out to British composers on the Continent. On February 24 the 'Requiem' of Sir Charles Stanford was performed under the direction of that excellent artist Herr Julius Buths. Concerning the work the Düsseldorfer Neueste Nachrichten in a highly appreciative notice says:

With his 'Requiem' Herr Stanford takes an honourable position among composers of the present time. In this work he shows not only great ability in musicianship, but he makes it evident that he has successfully striven to clothe the ideas of his text in an appropriate musical garb. Herr Stanford, through his restrained language, which speaks to the heart, has found many friends. Though for these reasons we pay Herr Stanford the respect which we owe, yet we must confess that we should have preferred, especially in the 'Dies Irae,' a more energetic 'building-up' and a darker background. And in other places, now and again, the serious style is missed. With these exceptions, however, the general impression made by the work was excellent. In the polyphonic Sanctus the composer gives evidence of his great ability in the art of using the 'motif' and its contrapuntal treatment. The Agnus Dei ends the work in a highly intellectual and extremely impressive manner. The part which Herr Stanford has assigned to the orchestra must be accounted very successful. In all the seven numbers the solo quartet is prominently employed with the chorus, whereby great variety and excellent effect is obtained.

The interest of the public in the work increased from number to number. After the Sanctus the composer was called, and at the end had to return to the platform again and again to acknowledge the enthusiastic applause. No less was Prof. Buths honoured, to whom much gratitude is due for the preparation and splendid performance of the work.

Sir Edward Elgar's 'Variations' have recently been performed at Dresden, Munich, and Frankfort. In a notice of the last-named concert, ably conducted by Herr Siegmund von Hausegger, the Frankfurter General Anzeiger says:

In this work the composer follows in the footsteps of Brahms, who in the Variation form has given us so much that is beautiful, and that has scarcely been equalled (in this particular style) since Beethoven. Yet this, the finest form of imagination and musicianship, has in Elgar's work found expression which—in addition to the evident and strong influence of Brahms—is not foreign to Tschaiikovsky, and to which modern orchestral technique is no stranger. Many-sided and fascinating are the 'Variations' of this richly-gifted composer—now serious, now striding majestically, now playful and gay, but always noble and inspired, characteristics which he shares with masters so contrasted as Brahms and Tschaiikovsky.

The Bristol Musical Festival—the eleventh of the series—is announced to be held on October 11, 12, 13, and 14, under the conductorship of Mr. George Riseley. The draft programme includes the following works:—

Vocal: 'Messiah' (the entire oratorio); 'Elijah'; Mozart's Mass in C minor (first time in England); 'Engedi'; 'Lohengrin' (the complete opera, without cuts); 'Edipus at Colonus' (Mendelssohn); 'Dream of Gerontius' (Elgar); 'Song of the Fates' (Brahms).

Instrumental: Symphony Fantastic, and its sequel 'Lélio' (Berlioz); Beethoven's Violin Concerto; Mozart's Double Concerto for two Pianofortes; and 'Taillefer' ('The Battle of Hastings'), by Richard Strauss (first time in England).

The statement in the draft programme that Brahms's 'Song of the Fates' ('Gesang der Parzen') is to be sung for the first time in England, is incorrect, as it was performed at a Richter Concert in London on May 5, 1884.

The recent Garcia Centenary commemoration, more especially in its banquet feature, is not without precedent. A similar function took place nearly a century ago, the hero of the day being a Mr. Bartholomew Johnson, of Scarborough. But the Gentleman's Magazine of October, 1810, shall tell the tale:

Oct. 3. Mr. Bartholomew Johnson, of Scarborough, Yorkshire, a highly respected musical character, completed one hundred years of his life, since the date of his baptism (3d Oct. 1710), as proved by the Parish Register of Wykeham (near Scarborough), where he was born. This event, so highly interesting to all who know him, was celebrated by a Jubilee Dinner, and musical performance, at the Freemasons' Hall in Scarborough. The selections of vocal music (accompanied chiefly on the organ) were well adapted to the occasion; and his musical friends at that place, assisted by the principal Chorists from York Cathedral, afforded the company much gratification. About ten o'clock at night the good old man bore a part in a Quartett, by performing on the Violoncello the Bass to a Minuet, which he himself composed upwards of sixty years ago, for the late Beilby Thomson, esq. of Escrick Park, in Yorkshire, by whose name it is usually known at Scarborough: the other instrumental parts were very obligingly and kindly written for the occasion by W. Shield, esq. in compliment to the original composer, whom Mr. Shield has long known and greatly esteemed. Lord Mulgrave, the Hon. Henry Phipps, the Worshipful the Bailiffs of Scarborough (Robert Tindall and William Chambers, esquires), Colonel Lloyd, Richard Cardwell, esq. and upwards of 70 of the respectable visitors and inhabitants of Scarborough and the neighbourhood, honoured the meeting with their company. Congratulatory letters on the occasion was sent by the Right Hon. C. Manners Sutton, the Hon. Gen. Phipps (the Members for Scarborough), and Richard Langley, esq. of Wykeham Abbey; the last of whom is the present proprietor of the estate on which Mr. Johnson was born. Several poetical compositions from the classical pens of the Rev. F. Wrangham, Tho. Hinderwell, esq. &c. were sung, and recited, with great applause. The gratifying presence of the veteran Musician, together with the sight and hearing of his performance on his favourite instrument, gave birth to the most touching sentiments of sympathetic affection and transport in the hearts of the company, and realized Mr. Walter Scott's glowing description of the 'aged Minstrel':

'When ev'ry string's according gle
Was blended into harmony;
And then, he said, he would full fain
He could recall an antient strain
He never thought to try again;
But quick he caught the measure wild;
The Old-Man rais'd his face and smil'd,
And lightn'd up his brilliant eye
With all a Poet's ecstasy.
In varying cadence, soft or strong,
He swept the sounding chords along.
The present scene, the future lot,
His toils, his wants, were all forgot;
Cold diffidence and age's frost
In the full tide of song were lost.'

The venerable object of this public testimony of regard, retired about eleven o'clock, in the highest health and spirits, followed by the blessings and best wishes of all who were present.

Mr. Johnson was similarly honoured in 1809, when he entered his 100th year. The Morning Chronicle of October 10, 1809, thus records 'the conviviality of the Jubilee':

On Tuesday last, Mr. Bartholomew Johnson, of Scarborough, a well-known and highly respected musical character, entered the 100th year of his age. The Magistrates, Clergy, and a numerous circle of Gentlemen dined with him at the Freemasons' Hall, and congratulated him on the auspicious event. An ode composed by his friend Shield expressly for the occasion, was sung with excellent effect; and several catches, glees, and musical performances succeeded, in which the good old man bore a part with much vivacity; and the conviviality of the Jubilee was kept up to a late hour with the utmost gratification that music, wine, and friendship could inspire.

The wonderful power of music to express our deepest emotions and its appropriateness to the most dramatic and, at the same time, most solemn incidents of life, is perhaps never more emphatically illustrated than on the occasion of the burial of a warrior with full military honours. On Saturday, March 18, the little churchyard of Churcham, five miles from the city of Gloucester, was roused from its customary quietude by the rare event of a military funeral. Sergeant Alfred Henry Hook, V.C., one of the valiant heroes of Rorke's Drift, was being brought to his last resting-place in the village among whose fields and lanes he had wandered as a boy. On a perfect spring afternoon, beautifully typical of the peace of death after the stormy tempests of this life, the procession wended its way in silence across the Severn out into the peaceful country roads. The gun-carriage, drawn by four fine bays, was escorted by detachments of soldiers representing many branches of the Service. Passing the beautiful grounds of Sir Hubert Parry's country home, the procession reached the lane leading from the main road to Churcham Church before the band began their last tribute to their dead comrade. Then, as the cortège turned into the narrow lane the thrilling strains of Handel's immortal march were heard among the silent trees and hedgerows—not as a mournful dirge, but in tones of triumph; the march of a victor led to glory, seeming to say: 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant!' But most beautiful of all, most inexpressibly appealing to every sense—military, musical, and human—was the final farewell of the soldier to the honoured dead. Then all instruments, save one, were silenced, for now the life of the camp is recalled as the buglers wake the echoes of that quiet country spot with the 'Last Post.'

Dr. C. Harford Lloyd writes as follows on the subject of Handel's use of the second inversion of the dominant seventh chord:

With reference to Dr. Cummings's article on p. 166 of the March number of THE MUSICAL TIMES, controverting Rockstro's statement that 'Handel never by any chance wrote the second inversion of the dominant seventh,' it may not be inapposite to note that Alessandro Scarlatti—who was born about twenty-six years before Handel—freely used this chord in performance. Mr. E. J. Dent, in his recently published and valuable work on the famous Italian master, quotes from Scarlatti's own rules for accompanying a basso continuo as follows: 'The second inversion of the dominant seventh, figured 6, and theoretically considered as a concordant second inversion of the "imperfect triad," is always to be given the fourth as well as the third in practice, when the bass descends conjunctly, . . . "because it sounds well."—(Alessandro Scarlatti: his Life and Works, p. 154.)

Dr. Cummings sends some further examples of Handel's use of the $\frac{6}{4}$ —

Chorus, 'Thanks be to God' ('Messiah') bar 2; Suite de Pièces, book 2; Prelude in B flat, bar 28; Chaconne in G, bar 3; also in the 4th, 56th, and 60th Variations of the same composition.

Mischa Elman, the most recent of wonderful juvenile violinists, was born in 1892, at Stalnoje, a village in the Government of Kiev, of poor parents. His father, by profession a schoolmaster, had sufficient knowledge of music to be able to recognise his son's great talent. At the age of five, the boy played before a select audience at a concert arranged by the President of the village, a lady of nobility, when the youthful performer astonished his hearers by playing several pieces on a small violin. He had no knowledge of notation, but played by ear familiar and popular pieces which his father had previously played to him. In the face of many difficulties, M. Elman succeeded in taking his son to Odessa, so that the boy might undergo a thorough musical training, and after surmounting all kinds of obstacles, Mischa was admitted to the Imperial School of Music. The professors were not

'What would they not give in London to have such a concert with 1,000 seats at a penny each?' asked Mr. Coleridge-Taylor after conducting a concert recently given by the York Symphony orchestra. As a matter of fact nearly 1,400 persons paid their penny to attend that music-making, and how thoroughly they enjoyed it! 'The best amateur band in the kingdom—not one of the best,' remarked the conductor-composer. Need anything more be said in testimony and encouragement of the enterprise of Mr. T. Tertius Noble in cultivating a love for good music in the city of York?

The one-act opera 'Don Sanche, ou le Château d'Amour,' composed by Liszt when fourteen years old and produced at the Paris Académie Royale in 1825, of which the score was discovered not very long ago, is, according to report, to be given at Paris in concert form. It is to be hoped that the critics will be able to pass a more favourable judgment on the music than did the Paris correspondent of the Harmonicon of 1825, who declared that 'the whole thing turned out to be of an exceedingly childish nature.'

Mr. F. Gilbert Webb, the well-known musical critic, has transferred his services from The Standard to The Daily Telegraph. His many friends will wish him success in his new field of journalistic work.

From THE MUSICAL TIMES of fifty years ago :

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The first concert of the season was on the 12th March. The new conductor, Herr Richard Wagner, commenced his new duties on this occasion.

A Correspondent—who says he is too old to go in for an examination, but who has managed to get on, if not honour, by degrees—sends us the following 'Questions' as being, in his opinion, suitable for an examination-paper in music :

1. Give an example of (a) an uncommon common chord, and (b) a disfigured bass.
2. Describe the punctuation of the organ, and explain its connection (if any) with an acoustical comma.
3. What animal's skin covered the first drum on record?
4. Under whom did Orpheus study when he learned the lute?
5. Give the names of all the compositions known which terminate with the common chord.
6. What kind of c(h)ord is used for suspension?
7. Draw up a programme suitable for the Concert of Europe, concluding with 'Rule, Britannia.'
8. If you were to write a Sinphonia Telephonia, how would you express the inquiry 'Are you there?' assuming that the callee replied in a flat?

One of the many stories related of Dr. S. S. Wesley has reference to a performance of Handel's 'Judas Maccabeus,' at which the eminent musician presided at the organ. During the singing of the air 'Father of heaven,' Wesley remarked to a friend who was 'turning over' for him : 'In London we used to call that the cat's solo,' adding, with a chuckle, 'Don't you hear the words?'

'While we prepare with holy rites,
To celebrate the Feast of Lights!'

An ecclesiastical journal, in treating of a musical subject, refers in the same paragraph to 'the works of Palestine' and 'The Holy City.' Geographically speaking, no fault can be found with such a juxtaposition.

long in estimating his wonderful gifts. He speedily developed a decided taste for the violin, and under the fostering influence of the celebrated Professor Fidelmann, he not only made rapid progress, but very soon attracted attention beyond the confines of Odessa. During his pupilage at the School of Music, the boy played before such masters of their art as Auer, Sarasate, Brodsky, and in so doing won their praise and approval. In November, 1902, Master Elman had another opportunity of playing before Professor Auer, whilst the latter was on a concert tour in Southern Russia, with the result that Auer bade him come to St. Petersburg, and took him as his pupil in January, 1903. Invited by Colonne to play at Paris, Nebdal at Prague, Steinbach at Cologne, and also in London—with what success in the Metropolis our notice of Mr. Charles Williams's concert on p. 259 fully testifies—this twelve-year-old violinist has already made himself famous. His future career will be watched with interest.

Church and Organ Music.

THE PASSION CHORALE.

Of the German chorales that have enriched the worship-song of the English people, the Passion Chorale is one of the most beautiful. Its devotional strains will be sung during the present month in countless churches and chapels, therefore a few remarks on its history may not be unacceptable. Those who have not made a study of the evolution of hymn-tunes may be surprised to learn that this most sacredly charged melody is of secular origin, in fact, a love song. It is the composition of Hans Leo Hassler, a Nuremberg musician, and made its first appearance in his 'Lustgarten deutscher Gesänge,' published in 1601, where it appears thus, set to words beginning 'Mein G'müth ist mir verwirret':

The melody, however, soon found its way into the realm of sacred song by its insertion in 'Harmonizæ sacræ,' . . . Gorlitz, 1613, only twelve years after it had first appeared as an amorous ditty. In the 'Harmonizæ sacræ' the tune is harmonized in five parts and associated with the hymn beginning 'Herzlich thut mich verlangen,' the melody being in this form:

But it was not until the year 1656 that the tune was 'born again'—if the expression, without irreverence, may be used—when it became indissolubly associated with Paul Gerhardt's hymn 'O Haupt voll Blut und Wunden,' of which the English version is 'O sacred head, now wounded.' This happy mating of words and music took place in the Frankfurt Edition of Crüger's 'Praxis' in 1656, and has continued to this day.

That John Sebastian Bach had a special affection for this chorale is evidenced by the fact of his having used it five times in his 'St. Matthew' Passion, where it appears in the keys of E, E flat, D, F, and C. It is hardly necessary to refer to the loveliness of these simple strains as they fall on the ear in the course of that wonderful oratorio; their soul-moving effect on the sympathetic hearer cannot be expressed in words. Organists who can still enjoy the tranquillity of pure organ music, and who are not intimately acquainted with Bach's Choral Preludes, may have their attention drawn to a very beautiful arrangement of the Passion Chorale in vol. 5 of the Peters edition of Bach's Organ Works, where it appears (No. 27) under its older title 'Herzlich thut mich verlangen.'

The great Cantor has harmonized the tune in various ways and in manner most masterly. We give one of the lesser known examples of his harmonic resources in the following version from the '371 vierstimmige Choralgesänge von Johann Sebastian Bach':

O HAUPT VOLL BLUT UND WUNDEN.

The stepwise progression of the melody will not escape notice, and the walk of the bass part is worthy of the simple superstructure as composed by Hassler.

Like many other composers who have contributed an undying strain to the music of the Church, very little is known of the life of Hans Leo Hassler. The eldest and ablest of the three sons of Isaac Hassler, a musician of Nuremberg, he is said to have been born in that Meistersinger town in the year 1564. A pupil first of his father and during the year 1584 of Gabrieli, at Venice, he became organist at Augsburg in 1585, and found a home in the house of the Fuggers in that town. In 1601 Hassler returned to Nuremberg on his appointment to the organistship of the Frauenkirche and 'städtischer Kapellmeister' at a salary of 200 gulden and a rent-free dwelling-house. Some years later (in 1608) he entered the service of Christian II. of Saxony as 'Hoforganist und Musicus.' He died at Frankfurt, while on a visit there, on June 8, 1612. That Hassler was a prolific composer the pages of Eitner's Quellen-Lexikon bear abundant testimony. Proske says of his style that 'it unites all the greatest beauty and dignity that can be found in both the Italian and German art of that day.' It is quite certain that 'the greatest beauty and dignity' are combined in the Passion Chorale.

No less interesting than the origin of the tune is the history of the words with which for 250 years it has been so happily associated. The words form part of 'a sweet and beautiful' Latin hymn attributed to St. Bernard of Clairvaux, a saintly writer born in Burgundy in 1091 and one of the greatest men of mediæval times. This poem, addressed to the various parts of our Lord's body on the Cross, is in seven sections, the last of which, addressed to the Head, begins 'Salve caput cruentatum.' This section Paul Gerhardt, one of the most successful of German hymn-writers, has translated into the familiar lines beginning 'O Haupt voll Blut und Wunden.' This hymn was published in 1656 when, as already stated, the Passion Chorale became mated to the words. It would be interesting to know if Gerhardt suggested the union of hymn and tune. The English translation—'O sacred head, now wounded'—to be found in nearly all hymnals, is that made by the Rev. Dr. James Waddell Alexander, an American divine, who died in 1859: it first appeared in 1830.

A MUSICAL PARISH CLERK.

To the curiosities in epitaphs may be added the following from Notes and Queries of March 11: the tombstone whereupon the inscription appears is in Warnham Churchyard, near Horsham, Sussex:

Sacred to the Memory of MICHAEL TURNER, clerk and sexton of this parish for 50 years, from Jan. 17, 1830 to Jan. 20, 1880. Born May 25, 1796. Died Dec. 18, 1885.

His duty done, beneath this stone
Old Michael lies at rest.
His rustic rig, his song, his jig
Were ever of the best.

With nodding head, the choir he led,
That none should start too soon:
The second too, he sang full true,
His viol played the tune.

And when at last his age had passed,
One hundred—less eleven,
With faithful cling to fiddle string,
He sang himself to Heaven.

THE ETHICS OF ORGAN-BUILDING.

In connection with our remarks on this subject (p. 185 of the March issue), a London organ-builder writes as follows:

I think every organ-builder must have noticed with pleasure your comments on the increasing commission business on the part of organists. I cannot call it anything but a curse to honest trading, and it no doubt accounts for so many organs having to be rebuilt in a few years after their erection. The honest builder does not stand a chance when he is told, as I have been, that because commission asked for by an organist is not given the order will be placed elsewhere. I have told such an organist before now that it simply meant I was to rob the church authorities and hand over the money to him. The reply has been that it did not matter who built the organ so long as the commission was paid. When the builder is asked to allow an organist something out of the sum paid annually for tuning, I think it is time that the commission question was thoroughly exposed. It would be interesting to hear the views of other organ-builders on this subject.

At Canterbury Cathedral on March 2 was held the second of a trio of special musical services arranged to be given during the present season. The chief feature of the service was Dvořák's 'Stabat Mater,' sung in its new form, with English words ('At the foot of the Cross') as adapted by Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, of Chichester Cathedral. This was followed by a performance of Mozart's G minor Symphony. The orchestra numbered fifty-two players, and the chorus consisted of the members of the Cathedral Oratorio Society, assisted by a few tenors from Folkestone. Dr. Perrin, the Cathedral organist, who conducted with care and judgment, is to be heartily congratulated on his efforts in promoting these oratorio services in the noble minster of which he is chief musician.

WESLEY'S 'WILDERNESS.'

Mr. A. M. Martin, of Beckenham, writes:

DEAR SIR,—If the question of the tenor recitative in 'The Wilderness' has not already been sufficiently discussed, I should like to say that I was for five years a chorister at Gloucester Cathedral under my uncle Dr. S. S. Wesley, and I sang in the above anthem on more than one occasion to his organ accompaniment. My recollection as to the passage in question is perfectly clear: the C Sharp was used to both the words—'lame man.'

The annual general meeting of the Choir Benevolent Fund took place at the Chapter House, St. Paul's Cathedral, Mr. Calkin Lewis in the chair, when the fifty-third annual report was passed. As usual an eminently satisfactory balance sheet was presented, and the report gives the gratifying information that the time had been reached when a small annual pension could be granted to a few aged members, and that seven members had, during the past year, received this benefit. The members of the Committee are now increased by representatives of several provincial cathedrals. The statement that the Fund had been benefited by an offertory of over £10, collected at an organ recital given by Dr. G. J. Bennett, in Lincoln Cathedral, may suggest to some other Cathedral organists to 'go and do likewise.'

Mr. C. W. Perkins, organist to the Corporation of Birmingham, has compiled an interesting booklet entitled 'A Short Account of the Organ in the Town Hall, Birmingham.' The history of this famous instrument—which contains the first tuba ever made—is pleasantly set forth, and the seven illustrations add to the attractiveness of this well got-up brochure. It is published by Messrs. Cornish Brothers, Limited, Birmingham, at the price of two shillings.

The re-opening of the organ, after re-building, in St. Andrew's Church, Holborn, took place on March 1, when the resources of the renovated instrument were well displayed at a recital given by Mr. F. G. M. Ogbourne, organist of the church.

At the Welsh National Festival held in St. Paul's Cathedral on St. David's Day an anthem, 'Cenwch i Dduw,' was sung which had been composed by Mr. T. Westlake Morgan, Organist of Bangor Cathedral, specially for the occasion.

The Lenten performances of Bach's 'St. John' Passion have been given with their wonted impressiveness at St. Anne's Church, Soho, under the careful direction of Mr. E. H. Thorne.

Reviews.

Alessandro Scarlatti: his life and works. By Edward J. Dent.

[London: Edward Arnold.]

How strange is fame! In Alessandro Scarlatti we have a musician of the first rank—vaguely known to us all as an epoch maker in the Art, the inventor of the accompanied recitative and of the now discredited 'Da Capo,' the composer of 115 operas, 200 Masses, over 600 chamber cantatas, and many other works, yet of all this enormous mass of compositions but few even of the best-read musicians would be able to give the title of a single work! Articles innumerable will be found in the musical dictionaries and other works of reference giving the outlines of the composer's career. To Sir Hubert Parry we are indebted for the first serious attempt at a critical estimate of Scarlatti's position, but this was of necessity limited in a work like the 'Oxford History of Music' by conditions of space. It was reserved to Mr. E. J. Dent to treat the subject on an adequate scale, and with him it has evidently proved a labour of love.

The task was one of great difficulty, for it must be borne in mind that, with one exception,—of which the composer himself was probably unconscious, for its existence was due to an English publisher—not one single work of his was printed during the composer's lifetime. Much has no doubt been irretrievably lost, and what remains has to be searched for in libraries public and private scattered over the whole continent of Europe and our own country. It will be seen therefore what persistent research has been called into practice in the compilation of the extensive catalogue of works which Mr. Dent has been able to add to his volume. It is a subject of curious inquiry how such a state of things can have arisen. Till the middle of the 17th century many musical works, especially service music, continued to be printed in Italy in a style of considerable luxury, nor in the time of Scarlatti had the art entirely ceased to be practised, for the original editions of Corelli brought out in Rome are excellent examples of printing. But in many cases the office of the printing press seems to have been replaced by that of a numerous band of professional copyists, whose noble style of writing is familiar to all who are interested in hunting among old music. No doubt these copyists were in some cases in the sole employ of particular composers; for example, Mr. Dent tells us that he recognises the work of four such persons in the many libraries which he has consulted, as occupied exclusively with the works of Scarlatti. The demand in those days was of course limited, especially for such works as operas, the runs of which were at that time short. Probably the purchase of a copy of the score carried with it what we now know as 'performing rights,' while the acceptance of a copy, by a dilettante on the grand tour, of a chamber cantata was probably accompanied by a suitable present to the composer. This appears to have been the practice with nearly all the compositions of those and even later days in Italy. For example, the works of Pergolesi—a composer, if not of greater, certainly of more widely diffused celebrity—in his native country existed in manuscript only. His famous opera 'La Serva Padrona' was printed for the first time in Paris, consequent on the famous 'Querelle des Bouffons,' while his serious opera 'L'Olimpiade' was never printed, although MS. copies are to be found in many libraries. It will be seen therefore that the study of the works of Alessandro Scarlatti is beset with difficulties, and it is not surprising that they are not more widely known, and where in modern times a few have been printed it is in such collections as those of Rochlitz, Dehn, or Proske, which are almost as inaccessible to most musicians as the original MSS. We believe, however, that in recent years a small collection of airs from the operas and cantatas has been published by Messrs. Ricordi. As we have already said, the catalogue of the master's works which Mr. Dent has compiled is a masterpiece of research, carried on in the face of great difficulties, for it involved the ransacking of many libraries at home and abroad, in the latter case often imperfectly, if at all, catalogued; while in some instances, as Mr. Dent laments, it is difficult for the foreigner and the heretic to obtain admission at all to Italian ecclesiastical libraries. Of the 115 operas with which Scarlatti is credited, 64 only are extant, and of these many are incomplete, while the titles of others are known only from the existence of the printed libretto.

The main facts of Alessandro Scarlatti's biography had been fairly well recorded, so that Mr. Dent has not had occasion to modify them to any considerable extent; but the result of his investigations has been to fill up many details, and to assign many of the compositions to their proper period. It is curious that, while there is no doubt that Scarlatti was born in Sicily, and that an autograph score of the opera 'Pompeo' bears the inscription 'Musica del Signor Alessandro Scarlatti da Trapani,' no baptismal register is to be found at that place. This score has now disappeared, although both Fétis and Florimo professed to have seen it. The question is complicated by the fact that in the records of the Arcadian Academy at Rome the composer is described as a native of Palermo. It seems improbable that, if the inscription was in his handwriting or even in that of a copyist, a seaport of secondary importance should have been claimed as his birthplace unless the claim was a correct one. The account of his education is also not without difficulty. According to the received tradition he was a pupil of Carissimi, but this master died at an advanced age, when Scarlatti was only fifteen. There can be no doubt of the influence which the works of Carissimi had on Scarlatti, who probably, like many musical geniuses, blossomed early.

Contemporary notices of Scarlatti are strangely few. A scanty account of a visit paid to him during the last years of his life by Quantz, the famous flute-player of Frederic-the-Great, is given in Marpurgh's 'Beiträge' (Berlin: 1744-1762). Handel no doubt made his acquaintance during his visit to Italy, but was on terms of much greater intimacy with his son Domenico. Some particulars were given to Burney by Geminiani, and Mr. Dent has been fortunate enough to unearth from the Archivio Mediceo an extensive correspondence between the composer and Ferdinand III. de' Medici, who was an able amateur, which is frequently quoted in the work, throwing much light on Scarlatti's artistic aims and practice, and incidentally on his movements and financial circumstances, which were not always flourishing.

That the music of Alessandro Scarlatti can in these days be galvanized into life is hardly conceivable. Enthusiast as he is, Mr. Dent probably does not expect this; but his admirably printed volume abounds with examples excellently analysed, and these will serve to introduce the composer to many musicians with whom he is a mere name. Musical research has for some years past run in directions so different that it is refreshing to find a neglected period of art adequately treated. Much has been done to this end by Sir Hubert Parry in his masterly volume of the 'Oxford History.' Mr. Dent has proved himself a worthy fellow-worker. Higher praise cannot be given.

Song of the Spirits. (Op. 167.) Franz Schubert. English translation by Paul England.

An English version of Schubert's eight-part chorus for men's voices, with accompaniment of violas, violoncellos, and basses, is very welcome. It is furnished with an excellent English translation by Mr. Paul England from the German of Goethe, and a helpful pianoforte accompaniment has been supplied by Mr. John E. West. The work, which is laid out for tenors and basses, opens impressively pianissimo with the words 'The soul of man is as the water,' but at the line 'Rugged boulders in vain oppose it,' the music becomes extremely vigorous, and speedily the basses are engaged in a semiquaver passage representing the foaming waters. To this succeeds in admirable contrast a tranquil section, and after an effective climax has been worked up the music ends in an impressive diminuendo.

SIR EDWARD ELGAR ON 'A FUTURE FOR ENGLISH MUSIC.'

Sir Edward Elgar, the 'Richard Peyton' Professor of Music at the University of Birmingham, delivered his inaugural lecture on March 16 at the Midland Institute, Birmingham. Sir Oliver Lodge, Principal of the University, presided over a large audience. The following extracts are taken from the excellent report of the lecture which appeared in the Birmingham Daily Post:

A living art of music consisted not only of composers, as some of the race seemed to imagine, but also of executants, and, he would dare to add, critics. These three factors were necessary to form a complete musical art. Composers were in a different position from painters and literary authors. The painter finished his picture and his labour was then over. To fulfil its mission the picture must be hung and exhibited, and then it met its public, and there was nothing to stand between the public which the artist addressed and himself. With a literary author the case was rather different. His personal work ended when his manuscript was finished, but he had to call in the help of the publisher to present his work in such a form that it might reach the public. But with the composer of music a different state of things existed. His own personal work, as with the author, ended when he finished his manuscript. The publisher had to be called in to print and present the work in tangible form, but the great gulf which separated musical from literary authorship was the fact that the work remained practically unheard and not understood without the help of executants. By executants he meant singers, players, and above all, conductors. He wished to insist on the belief that the living art of music should consist of those three factors—the composer, the executants, and the critics: the composer providing the material upon which the other two classes subsisted; the executants rising to the level of the composer in doing their best to give a worthy performance of such things as were provided for them; while the critics, with not necessarily always friendly opinion, but large-minded and luminous advice, should help to a better understanding of the composer and the audience that the composer addressed. These three factors should have a definite 'action,' one upon the other, for the advance of music.

What was and could be an English School of Music? It was easy to go back to the days of Purcell and revel in the glories of those days and earlier, when England led the world in the matter of composers, but such thoughts had no practical value on the music of the present day, which in the Birmingham University was all they had to consider. We had been severely lectured many times for the want of robustness, and had been told that certain boisterous, heavy, strenuous choral works had represented the height of English music and the English spirit. That was absolutely untrue. Why should we accept as an ideal for English music a type that existed in no other art? He pleaded that the younger men should draw their inspiration more from their own country, from their own literature, and from their own climate. Only by drawing from real English inspiration should we ever arrive at having an English art.

MUSIC FOR THE PEOPLE IN WESTMINSTER.

There is no doubt that the prices charged for admission to London concerts are prohibitive so far as the great public is concerned. There are many to whom even a shilling, the lowest price, is a consideration; and there are also many who cannot afford the higher charge for the better seats which they would like to occupy. Last month a concert, one of a series, was given in the Royal Horticultural Hall, Westminster, by the St. Margaret's Musical Society. The prices of admission were one shilling for a reserved, sixpence for an unreserved seat. Although the hall is large, no vacant seats were to be seen. It may be thought that the programme was of a 'popular' character. It consisted, however, of Sterndale Bennett's oratorio 'The Woman of Samaria'; a novelty in the form of a military anthem for solo and chorus; Sir Frederick Bridge's setting of 'Crossing the Bar'; two unaccompanied anthems by Mendelssohn and Sullivan respectively; and the final chorus from Beethoven's 'Mount of Olives'—therefore the entire programme consisted of high-class music. The audience listened in appreciative silence, but by loud applause showed outwardly the pleasure they had felt. The members of the choir and orchestra are hard-working folk during the day, and regard music as an enjoyment. Weekly rehearsals are held,—one for orchestra, one for chorus—and the Rev. Jocelyn Perkins is the enthusiastic trainer and conductor of the Society. The singing was hearty and really very good; the rendering of the choruses in the oratorio, and especially in Mendelssohn's 'Judge me, O God,' testified amply to the care with which the singers had been trained, and to the interest they take in their work. There are many ladies among the strings of the orchestra. The bright, effective Military Anthem, entitled 'The Sound of War,' was composed by Mr. Thomas Tertius Noble, organist of York Minster, who conducted his work, and with marked success. This Society, now in the fourth year of its existence, deserves every encouragement, and, as the Rev. Jocelyn Perkins told the audience, the best way in which friends can help on the good work is to become subscribers of one guinea per annum, which would entitle them to three reserved seats at the more important concerts.

THE BOHEMIAN SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie selected the above theme for a course of three lectures which he delivered at the Royal Institution on February 4, 11, and 18. He divided his subject into three divisions—(i.) A historical survey from the 10th century to about 1860, (ii.) Smetana and Fibich, and (iii.) Dvorák.

The lecturer began by stating that from ancient times as in the present day music has been one of the most powerful agents in keeping alive the language and the independent spirit of the Czechs. Although the earliest known Bohemian composer was one Závěc, a learned professor at the University of Prague in 1387, it is to John Huss, who began to preach in 1402 of the Reformation, that the country owes the survival of its native music. The oldest known hymnal (Cantional) of the Hussites contains a celebrated war-song beginning, 'You, who are the Lord's warrior,' which has survived the ages, inasmuch as it is used as the principal subject in Dvorák's strenuous 'Husitzka' Overture and also in Smetana's Symphonic Poem 'Tabor' (the camp of the Hussites). Sir Alexander drew a doleful picture of Bohemian church music at the time of Huss—the choir came to the service late, the priests even later, and both seemingly sang when and how they liked; and at one convent, while the service was proceeding, the nuns sat very comfortably sewing shirts! Towards the end of the 15th century some unobjectionable folk-songs were adapted to sacred words and thereupon passed into the service of the church. These melodies were frequently in three strophes, and often began in the major and ended in the minor key. The establishment in 1725 of an opera house in Prague was brought about by the composition of Fux's opera 'La Constanza e la Fortezza.' A few years later a national opera entitled 'Prague Nascente di Libussa e Primislao' was produced; in 1750 and 1752 came two operas by Gluck, and the subsequent advent of Mozart caused Prague to become famous as a musical centre. The struggle for the existence of the Bohemian language and music were next referred to—after 1774 German was ordered to be used in the upper schools, and it was not till 1823 that Bohemian translations came into use. Franz Skroup, a lawyer, composed a national opera called 'The Wire-worker'; he was also the author of the Bohemian national song 'Mein Heim,' on which Dvorák founded his Overture bearing that title.

At his second lecture Sir Alexander covered more familiar ground in his remarks on Smetana (1824-1884) and Fibich (1850-1900), both of whom, however, were much indebted to Karel Bendl, who died only eight years ago. In a critical survey of the works of Smetana reference was made to his excellent but almost unknown pianoforte music, and to the fact that he was a born composer of opera, a sphere of art-creation which contains his best work. As a pupil of Liszt's, it is not surprising that he favoured the Symphonic Poem as a means of musical expression. Of these he composed nine—three of them were written in Sweden, and the remaining six, called 'Mein Vaterland' (on National subjects), he wrote between 1874 and 1879, after his return to Prague. This series the lecturer described as a national monument in music. Deafness, that dire calamity to a musician, ultimately came upon Smetana, who died in a lunatic asylum in 1884. In regard to Fibich, Sir Alexander said, inter alia, that 'among other excellent pianoforte works, there is an odd collection of no fewer than 352 very short pieces, something after the manner of Schumann's "Papillons." Though they are mere scraps, a sort of musical note-book, containing much that may be called experimental, they are full of originality, and at times of a daring sort.' These pieces are entitled 'Moods, impressions, and recollections.'

As an old friend of Dvorák, Sir Alexander Mackenzie discoursed on a congenial theme at his third lecture, when he treated of the most eminent of all Bohemian composers, Anton Dvorák, one who occupied a place in the front rank of European creative artists. In tracing the events of Dvorák's career, the lecturer referred to the encouragement he (Dvorák) received from Brahms, and the just recognition generously extended to him, even at a very early stage in his career, in England. In this connection it should not be forgotten that the full score of his 'Patriotic Hymn' (Op. 30) bears on its title-page: 'Dedicated with feelings of deep gratitude to the English people.' In the course of a thorough and keenly critical estimate of Dvorák's compositions—any condensation of which would be an injustice to its excellence—Sir Alexander said: 'In the greater works of Smetana and Dvorák there is no morbidity, nor is there any of that superficial emotion or manufactured enthusiasm we meet with so frequently in the latest phases of orchestral music—music which burns brilliantly on the surface, but is jejune, weak, and frosty within. The music of these two masters is all eminently truthful—sometimes even roughly so—and quite without affectation.' Again: 'We, in this country, may not have the same enthusiasm for our own Folk-Music, chiefly, I take it, because we fortunately long ago ceased to require the stimulus in such a degree. All the same, a material similar to that which went to the making of Bohemian art, and exhibiting even more varied complexions and qualities, lies equally ready to our hand. It might be better, and certainly more wholesome, if we fixed our attention upon this material rather than continue to imitate the eccentric and insincere poses of a decadent foreign art, which do not chime in the least with either our character or our traditions. These death-bed moanings and similar incoherent and morose babblings, which we are carefully informed are the expressions of the "Zeit-geist," ring false in comparison with the clear, healthy tones and forceful vigour of the music I have endeavoured to describe to you.'

Musical illustrations to this trio of interesting lectures were ably interpreted by Miss Ethel Wood (vocalist), Miss Marguerite Elzy (pianoforte), and Messrs. E. R. Woof, H. J. Boden, J. Lockyer, and B. O'Donnell (string quartet).

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The inaugural concert of the 93rd season of this Society took place at Queen's Hall on March 15, under Dr. Cowen's able direction. The programme concluded with the only actual novelty announced to be given during the season, therefore this may claim first consideration. In the spring of 1903—not 1902, as stated in the programme-book—Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted a series of musical festivals in Canada. What more natural than that he should 'pick up' some of the popular tunes in vogue in the Dominion and weave them into a 'Canadian Rhapsody'? This he has done, and with conspicuous success. The thematic material is naturally French in character, from the fact that the first settlers in the colony were of that nationality. The first and last movements are as bright as bright can be, with exhilarating melodies, while the slow movement is invested with a peculiar charm by the introduction of a very old French air, but distinctly Scotch in its idiom, now called 'Bytown,' the old name of Ottawa. It forms the chief theme of the Andante movement, and is counterpoised, so to speak, by an equally beautiful tune known as 'Un Canadien Errant.' The development of this section is most cleverly and effectively done, the two themes being intertwined in a very graceful and charming manner. This pleasure-affording Rhapsody, conducted by the composer and brilliantly played by the orchestra, met with warm approval, the picturesque orchestration and conciseness of the work adding not a little to its undoubted success.

The remainder of the concert does not call for extended notice. It opened with the National Anthem, to which succeeded the 'Academic' overture of Brahms. By the way, in the analysis of the overture we were informed (p. 8 of the programme-book) that Joachim was a student at the University of Göttingen 'some thirty years ago'—i.e., when he was forty-three years old! Wagner's 'Four Songs'—'Der Engel,' 'Stehe still!' 'Schmerzen,' 'Träume'—delightfully orchestrated by Felix Mottl, were artistically rendered by Miss Ada Crossley. Mr. Busoni—one of the best equipped and most artistic of present-day pianists—gave splendid interpretations of the solo part of Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte Concerto in F, and Liszt's 'Todtentanz,' the latter a composition which might well be buried. By no means the least enjoyable feature of the evening's music was a Haydn Symphony in the key of D, No. 6 of the Salomon set—first performed, and in London, on February 17, 1792, under the composer's direction. A well-spring of pure melody, its genial strains fell upon the ear with unalloyed charm and refreshing sweetness.

effect of inducing a tranquil mental state for the reception of the 'Domestica.' The composer tells us that this singular work is designed to illustrate a day in his family life. In view of the stress and storm of the music, we hope we may say that it is fortunate that the family at present consists simply of father, mother, and only one child. Ten years hence even Strauss's genius might not be equal to the occasion. A 'poetic basis' so simple would seem to invite artless treatment. But it is curious to note that in comparing, say, 'Don Juan' with the 'Domestica' the complexity of the music is in an inverse ratio to the simplicity of the inspiring basis. The later work demands an exceptionally constituted orchestra. Besides the usual strings there are needed eighteen wood-wind instruments, including an oboe d'amore, a cor anglais, and a clarinet in D; twenty brass instruments, including eight horns and four saxophones; four tympani, and of course harps, a glockenspiel, and a bass drum. A somewhat detailed account of the meaning of this or that portion of the music is furnished by the composer. We are told, for instance, in one passage, that aunts and uncles are gazing at the baby and saying 'just like papa,' the image of his mamma, and other passages are supposed to stand for the objection of the baby to the harmless, necessary bath. But to dwell upon such trivialities or, we should say, to occupy one's mind with any definite programme whatever during a performance would be a bar rather than an aid to the appreciation of the music. One is only anticipating the verdict of the great inquest of time in frankly listening to it all as what is usually termed 'absolute' music, and in making one's own imaginative programme according to the mood of the moment. In this way a listener can be fascinated by the undeniable beauty and brilliancy and delicacy of the colour, and can marvel at the ingenuity with which the three chief themes—the father, the mother, and the child—are developed and combined. For our own part we confess that at the first hearing we were unable to make out anything in the way of music in some of the strenuous passages. It was only too obvious that the whole orchestra was, as it were, 'turned on at the main,' but it was apparently impossible to tell whether right or wrong notes were being played. The performance was a remarkably good one and has added much to the fame of Mr. Wood and his orchestra. Very rarely, if ever, in this country has an orchestral work been so diligently rehearsed.

THE LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

AN ELGAR CONCERT.

In pursuance of its announced plan to appear under various conductors, the London Symphony Orchestra gave a concert at Queen's Hall on March 8, under the conductorship of Sir Edward Elgar. The whole programme, selected from his compositions, was as follows:

- Overture—'In the South,' Op. 50 ('Allassio').
- Funeral March—'Grania and Diarmid.'
- Song-Cycle—'Sea Pictures.' Miss Ada Crossley.
- March in C minor (Op. 39, No. 3)—Pomp and Circumstance.
- (First time of performance.)
- Overture—'Cockaigne.'
- Introduction and Allegro for String Orchestra (Op. 47).
- (First time of performance.)
- Enigma Variations (Op. 36).

Such a programme exhibited the distinguished composer in all his moods. It is a remarkable tribute to his power and versatility that throughout it held the close attention of the vast audience assembled. The execution by the splendid orchestra fully maintained the great reputation that fine organization has now attained. Appreciation of 'In the South' Overture grows at every hearing; it is certainly one of the finest specimens of the composer's ripest style. Much of the interest of the concert centred upon the new piece for string orchestra. This work is elaborately developed, and is an important addition to the repertory of music for stringed orchestras. Being himself an excellent violinist, the composer always writes gratefully for the strings. A feature of the form of the new work is the use of a solo quartet in contrast to and combination with the full string orchestra. One of the chief themes was suggested by reminiscences of Welsh melodies, heard whilst the composer was sojourning in the Principality. This theme is developed with superb effect, especially in the climax near the end. A Fugato with an ornate subject, elaborately and most vigorously treated, is another interesting feature of the form. The new March, brilliantly scored as it is, will perhaps not be so popular as the two forerunners have proved to be. There is no broad, singable melody to catch. Nevertheless it is a good example of the open-air kind of music advocated by the composer in his recent Birmingham lecture. It will probably be found even better suited to a military band than to the usual orchestral combination.

THE PALACE THEATRE OF VARIETIES.

'THE KNIGHTS OF THE ROAD.'

Great things often arise from small beginnings. The chief business of a music-hall manager is to amuse his audience, and music forms one of the strongest means for that purpose. Hitherto, however, there has been a desire to pander to public taste, which, as regards the tonal art, is not very elevated: patter songs, jingling tunes, and orchestration of a noisy kind, these are the things which catch and most delight the ear of the general public. Composers of high-class music have never made it their business to try and elevate the taste of music-hall audiences; probably indeed until recently they have never been asked to try and do so. Mr. Alfred Butt, however, commissioned Sir Alexander Mackenzie to set to music a simple, one-act libretto by Mr. Henry A. Lytton, with the result that the little operetta called 'The Knights of the Road' was successfully produced at the Palace Theatre of Varieties on February 27. The piece contains one or two love ballads, a humorous song, a madrigal, and, by way of conclusion, a spirited, taking song with chorus, 'Who'll serve the King?' The music is melodious, refined, and effectively scored. The plot of the operetta is very simple, and the work takes under half-an-hour in performance. Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted on the opening night, and met with an enthusiastic reception. The performers were Miss B. Gaston-Murray, and Messrs. Henry Claff, Walter Hyde, Leslie Stiles, Cairns James, and Alec Davidson.

MR. CHARLES WILLIAMS'S CONCERTS.

The concerts organized and conducted by Mr. Charles Williams at Queen's Hall have assumed unexpected artistic importance owing to his selection of new and little-known works, and the excellence of their interpretation under his direction by the London Symphony Orchestra. At the first—given on February 7, and inadvertently omitted to be noticed in our last issue—Bach's little-known Suite in C for two oboes, bassoon and strings, was performed, in addition to Brahms's third symphony.

On February 28 was played Mozart's almost forgotten, but beautiful symphony in B flat No. 33 (Köchel, No. 319), the slow movement of which is a gem of infinite charm. At the same concert was produced a set of Symphonic Variations in E minor (Op. 34), by Mr. J. D. Davis, and the first performance in London in their entirety with orchestra of M. Bruneau's 'Chansons à danser.' Mr. Davis is a composer little known in the Metropolis, but he is greatly esteemed as a musician in Birmingham, where he was born in 1870. The 'Variations,' five in number and written upon an admirably constructed theme, show inventiveness, ingenuity, and a full knowledge of the orchestra; the work so pleased the audience that Mr. Davis was twice called to the platform. M. Bruneau's songs gain enormously by being sung to orchestral accompaniment—in fact, they might almost be described as a suite for orchestra with vocal obligato. Interpreted with dramatic intensity by Miss Marie Brema, the songs made a most favourable impression. The programme included Brahms's second symphony.

The concert on March 21 was rendered memorable by the first appearance in England of Master Mischa Elman, of whom a portrait is given and biographical reference made on page 244. The boy's technical command of the violin and the expressiveness and charm of his playing were phenomenal, and his interpretation of the solo part of Tchaikovsky's violin concerto excited wild enthusiasm. Truly a marvellous boy! The revival at this concert of Sir Hubert Parry's symphony No. 2, in F, was also most successful, and it is to be hoped that this noble and exhilarating work will no longer be neglected. It was composed at the instigation of the Cambridge University Musical Society, and produced by that organization on June 12, 1883. Four years later, on June 6, 1887, it was performed at a Richter concert at St. James's Hall, but in a revised form that left little of the original version unaltered. Its subject is the 'impressions, feelings, and experiences of a young man during the period of his undergraduateship at Cambridge,' and it is treated with a manliness and exuberance which are most stirring. The first and third movements are particularly fine, the former instinct with the joy of life and the latter a love poem of refined fervency and great melodic beauty. The other movements are a vivacious Scherzo and a vigorous Finale, both written with masterly skill.

THE PATRON'S FUND CONCERT.

The third concert organized by the administrators of the Edward Palmer Patron's Fund took place on March 9 at the Royal College of Music. Four orchestral works and a set of songs were produced, all of which merit comment. The scheme commenced with a Serenade in four movements, written for small orchestra by Mr. William H. Bell, by whom it was conducted with conspicuous ability. The work, entitled 'Epithalamion,' is based upon Spenser's poem of that name, the joyous character of which is reflected in the music with delightful directness and clearness of expression. The themes are thoroughly English in idiom, and the strength exemplified in restraint by the composer testifies in greater degree to his genius than the scores of his more complicated creations.

To the Serenade succeeded a Fantasia for Violin and Orchestra in G minor (Op. 12) by Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill. The composer has gone to Manx national melodies for his thematic material, with the happiest results, the tunes he has selected being full of sturdiness and vigour; moreover, their treatment accentuates their salient features. The solo part was brilliantly played by Mr. Haydn Wood, and the picturesque orchestration was most effectively rendered under Sir Charles V. Stanford's direction.

The settings by Mr. G. Molyneux Palmer of five songs by Heine showed that the composer had not only intuitively acquired a perception of the spirit underlying the poems, but that, in setting them, he had combined artistic aims with command of orchestral effects. These qualities were particularly in evidence in the songs commencing 'The world is dull' and 'Golden stars,' the music of the former being essentially virile, and that of the latter suggesting with convincing force the weird import of the words. The vocalist was Mr. F. Greeves Johnson.

The remaining works were a Concert Piece for Organ and Orchestra by Mr. B. J. Dale, and a Suite in A by Mr. H. Balfour Gardiner. The solo part of the former is written with appreciation of the capacities of the king of instruments, and it was brilliantly played by the composer.

Mr. Gardiner's contribution to the programme proved the most mature of the productions. His Suite consists of four distinct movements built up with vivacious and manly themes, all of which are treated with a terseness, vigour, and command of orchestral resource remarkable in a young composer. The final movement is most inspiring, and the work leaves an exhilarating feeling that attests to the life inherent in the music. Mr. Gardiner was the only composer not hailing from the Royal Academy or Royal College of Music, having been trained in his art privately. It should be added that he conducted his work with alertness and verve. One striking feature of the concert was the great skill in scoring shown in more or less degree in all the works, and still more satisfactory was the absence of what may be termed churchyard music, of which of late we have had more than enough.

EISTEDDFOD AT THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

It was a bold enterprise on the part of the promoters of the 'Chair Eisteddfod,' usually held at Queen's Hall, to transfer the scheme to the Royal Albert Hall. But it may be said that, so far as a numerous audience is a criterion of success, the gathering which took place on February 23 amply justified the change of venue. The Hall was not full, but there were thousands more present than the Queen's Hall could have accommodated. The proceedings displayed all the usual features: considerable ability in solo singing, some extraordinarily good choral performances, the use of some commonplace music that was not worth the trouble of getting up, much uncritical enthusiasm on the part of a happy and good-tempered audience, and a highly flexible time-table. The chief event was a competition of six male-voice choirs for a prize of one hundred guineas. The choirs came from Manchester, Aberdare, Mid Rhondda and other Welsh districts, and one was composed of Welshmen in London. The four hundred or so singers in these choirs patiently waited their turn until 10.30 p.m., at which hour the first choir began to sing the one test-piece, 'Homeward bound,' a dramatic chorus by Mr. D. C. Williams, which took at least fifteen minutes to perform. The Manchester Choir, under Mr. Nesbitt, set a high standard in the way of beautiful vocalization, but they did not infuse much moving expression into their execution. In this point they were excelled by the Cymon (Aberdare) Choir, under Mr. W. J. Evans. Although other choirs, amongst which we may specially mention the London Welsh Choir, under Mr. Merlin Morgan, gave highly creditable performances, the adjudicators—Dr. Coward, Mr. D. Emyl Evans, and Mr. D. C. Williams—did not find that any were, on the whole, so good as the Aberdare singers, and accordingly they were awarded the prize. It is a pity that the manners and customs of Eisteddfodau so often give all the prize money to the first choir. Why do not the promoters of the scheme have the courage to imitate the good example of the best-managed institutions in England, instead of the bad example of the Welsh schemes? We venture also to suggest that, so far as the object of the competition is to give due credit to the best choir and not merely to the choir which can perform best a long piece of a peculiar character, it would be fair to have two test-pieces, one at least of which should be of the English glee type. The soprano solo prize fell to Miss Jessie Ellis, of Cardiff, a young lady of great promise.

The Lord Mayor of London presided, and Mr. L. D. Jones was the lively and cheerful 'conductor,' i.e., a sort of master of the ceremonies. Mr. David R. Hughes, the hon. secretary, again showed his powers as an efficient organizer.

COMPETITION FESTIVALS.

CARLISLE.

The annual musical competitive festival was held here on February 28 and March 1 and 2. The interest of the event was well maintained. The entries were generally numerous, and the standard of performance satisfactory. Some of the choral singing reached a high degree of excellence, especially in the Challenge Shield Class, in which the Eaglesfield Society was victorious. It is worthy feature of the Carlisle scheme to give due importance to sight-singing, both in the junior and senior classes. Another excellent feature was the inclusion of classes for girls' and boys' club choirs. A concert given by the united adult choirs was highly successful. The chief item was Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm, which was conducted by Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, the new acting organist of the Cathedral. Madame Emily Squire and Mr. Robert Radford were the soloists. Mr. T. Tertius Noble, organist of York Minster, was the adjudicator.

PRESTON.

The second annual series of competitions was held on February 23, 24, 25. The first day was devoted chiefly to vocal soloists, the second day to the children, and the third day to choirs from all parts. There were numerous entries. The school sections were especially successful, in fact the entries were so numerous as to constitute a record in gatherings of this kind. The Padham Vocal Union gained the chief choral prize for mixed voices. The Habbergham Choir won the male-voice choir prize. The music chosen for the competitions earned the public approbation of Dr. Roland Rogers, who, with Mr. Dan Price, adjudicated. The audiences were sometimes very large, and altogether the results were highly satisfactory.

London Concerts.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Sir Edward Elgar's oratorio 'The Apostles' attracted a large audience to the Albert Hall on Ash Wednesday (March 8), and although the performance was not flawless—there being at times evidence of insufficient rehearsal—the interpretation in its entirety showed advance upon that of last year. The chorists were not only more familiar with the music, but they had a clearer apprehension of its dramatic character, and the more massive choruses were sung with magnificent balance of tone and precision of attack under the baton of Sir Frederick Bridge. The solo parts were excellently rendered by Mesdames Agnes Nicholls and Edna Thornton, and Messrs. William Green, Kennerley Rumford, Andrew Black, and Ffrangcon-Davies.

A FORGOTTEN CONCERTO BY MOZART.

'I must do it once, but I won't do it again,' remarked Miss Fanny Davies to a prominent critic shortly before her three-concerto-concert at Queen's Hall on March 7. The occasion possessed great musical interest. M. Colonne had been engaged to conduct the London Symphony Orchestra, and the programme contained Mozart's pianoforte concerto in G (Köchel 453) which, so far as could be ascertained, had not previously been performed in England. According to Otto Jahn the work was finished in April, 1784, and is the seventh of the seventeen creations by the master in this form. It consists of three movements, all of which are thoroughly characteristic of the composer's genius. The Andante is a gem of Mozartian grace and gentle melancholy, while the Finale is delightfully gay in spirit. Miss Davies interpreted the solo part in full sympathy with the music, and the orchestral portion was rendered with fascinating delicacy and crispness under M. Colonne's direction. The other pianoforte concertos were those in D minor and G minor by Brahms and M. Saint-Saëns respectively, in each of which Miss Davies played with conspicuous ability.

LISZT'S 'FAUST' SYMPHONY.

The performance of Liszt's 'Faust' symphony at the Queen's Hall Symphony concert under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood, on March 11, calls for record if not for criticism, for the work has not been heard in its entirety in London since 1897. Mr. Wood was the conductor on that occasion, and this in part no doubt accounts for the revival of the symphony, for familiarity with the score excites esteem for the author—one who, writing fifty years ago, could so far anticipate modern orchestral procedure. Moreover, the symphony contains much of Liszt's best music. He never wrote anything more sincere and tender than the 'Gretchen' movement, and it is to be regretted that the excessive length of the work—it occupies an hour and ten minutes in performance—precludes it from being given except on rare occasions. Mr. Wood secured an excellent interpretation, and the choral ending, added in 1857, was effectively sung by Mr. Metcalf's choir.

The first performance of a pianoforte quintet in C (Op. 20), composed by Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill, took place on March 10 at Bechstein Hall, the occasion being a concert given by the Grimson Quartet. The work is remarkable for its thoroughly English character, its themes being direct in expression and their treatment clear and firm. It comprises four movements, the third of which is a grave and dignified Elegy that forms an effective contrast to the robust and vigorous spirit permeating the other sections. The work was excellently rendered with the composer at the pianoforte, and so well received that we may hope to hear it again at no very distant date.

At the Barns-Phillips chamber concert on March 11, at Bechstein Hall, there was played by Miss Ethel Barns and Miss Marjorie Lutyns, for the first time in London, a sonata for violin and pianoforte by Herr Volkman Andreas Abt, a young German composer resident in Zurich. While somewhat lacking in virility, the music possesses a romanticism and frequent plaintiveness that appeal to the listener, and the spirited Presto with which the work concludes increases the pleasant impression made by the composition. Mr. Phillips sang two new songs, severally entitled 'The Shoshone's Adieu' and 'A Vision,' by Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor, both of which bear witness to the composer's gifts, and should secure wide acceptance.

The first appearance in England of the famed 'Quatuor Capet' of Paris took place at the Broadwood chamber concert at Æolian Hall on March 23. The party consists of MM. Lucien Capet, L. Bailly, A. Tourret, and Louis Hasselmanns, and the playing was remarkable for smoothness, admirable balance, and refined quality of tone. These qualities were particularly in evidence in the interpretation of Mozart's Quartet in D minor, No. 13, and greatly added to the natural charm of the work. Beethoven's Quartet in F (Op. 59, No. 1) was also played, and Mlle. Ella Správka, the pianist, contributed César Franck's Prelude, Chorale, and Fugue.

Another 'Three-Concerto' concert was given at Bechstein Hall on March 22 by Miss Dora Bright, assisted by the London Symphony Orchestra. The concertos (pianoforte) were those of J. S. Bach, in D minor, Beethoven, in C minor, and Chopin, in E minor. Mr. Landon Ronald conducted.

The Students' terminal orchestral concert was successfully given at the Guildhall School of Music on March 22, conducted by the Principal of the School, Dr. W. H. Cummings.

The Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society gave a performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' on February 25, under the direction of Mr. Allen Gill. Both choir and orchestra were alike admirable, as might be expected under this inspiring conductor, and the solo vocalists, Miss Ethel Lister, Miss Cecile Vicars, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, Mr. Lorne Wallett, and Mr. Watkin Mills, were all excellent.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society gave a successful performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' in the Crystal Palace Concert Room on March 11. The band and chorus numbered 300, and the solo vocalists were Miss Euneta Truscott, Miss Lorna Stamm, Miss Ethel Bevans, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. Franklin Clive. Mr. Arthur Fagge occupied his usual post as conductor.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

Interest in pianoforte recitals continues unabated, and when an artist has shown marked individuality he or she may always count upon an audience. It is some time since Herr Emil Sauer paid us a visit, but there was a numerous gathering at Queen's Hall on February 27, when he gave a pianoforte recital, and played for the first time in England his sonata in E flat (No. 2). The composer has adopted the old form of four movements, but only in the first number has he satisfactorily followed accepted design. This first section has two excellent and well-contrasted principal themes, and they are developed with clearness and vigour. The thematic material of the Nocturne and the Scherzo is indefinite in character, but better subjects have been invented for the Finale, which is bright and vivacious. It is scarcely necessary to add that the work abounds in brilliant passages, which were most effectively played by the composer. Of three pieces described as new, and severally named 'Barcarolle,' 'Le Luth,' and 'Orage d'Avril,' the most pleasing is the second, a delicate and tasteful little work.

While in these days of precocity Miss Briana Prager can scarcely be described as a prodigy, her playing at her first pianoforte recital at Steinway Hall, on March 1, bore witness to precocious ability that indicated special musical gifts. Her execution was wonderfully firm and assured for a girl of twelve years, and her interpretations testified to musical feeling.

Amidst so much that is sensational in modern readings of the classics of the pianoforte, it is particularly valuable to listen to a pianist who preserves tradition, consequently Miss Mathilde Verne's recital of works by Schumann and Brahms, at Bechstein Hall on March 3, was very welcome to earliest musicians, for the clever lady was a pupil of Madame Schumann. Miss Verne chose the ever welcome 'Papillons,' the romantic 'Waldchen,' and the great 'Fantasia in C,' and imparted to all these a charm and subtle significance too often absent in ambitious renderings by giant pianists.

A pianoforte sonata, new to Londoners, by Joseph Casimir Hofmann, was played by Señor Sobrino at his recital—given in conjunction with Madame Sobrino—on March 4, at Bechstein Hall. The work is modern in character, earnest in purpose, and one that possesses considerable brilliancy, and therefore it is worthy of the attention of other pianists.

Miss Louie Basche, a pupil of Herr Sauer, gave a pianoforte recital, assisted by Miss Marie Hall, on March 14, at Queen's Hall, and proved that she possessed a brilliant technique. The young artist has yet to acquire those qualities which make for significance and charm, but her readings of Beethoven's sonata in G (Op. 31, No. 1) and several pieces by Chopin indicated musical intuition.

Signor Parisotti gave a vocal recital at the Salle Erard on March 3, when he was ably assisted by Miss Adèle Haas as solo pianist.

MUSIC IN NEW YORK.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

New York, March 7, 1905.

The grand opera season is over, and the American metropolis is now enduring a deluge of the small concerts which could neither have benefited nor suffered, from popular engrossment in the opera, had they been given earlier. They belong to the trifles which do not call for record. Different is the case of the opera. It was the second season under the regime of Mr. Heinrich Conried, who succeeded Mr. Maurice Grau. Mr. Conried began his administration with large protestations of reform and improvement in the artistic department of the Metropolitan institution; he ends his second year with the opera on no higher plane than Mr. Grau left it in any particular, and on a lower plane in several.

The season, which came to a somewhat inglorious conclusion from an artistic point of view, began on November 21, and endured fifteen weeks. There were sixty subscription performances and thirty-four outside the subscription. In all thirty operas and two ballets were produced. One difference between the two sets of performances—a difference in which I am inclined to see a significant indication for the future—is marked by the repertoires. Of the sixty regular representations sixteen were German, thirteen of Wagnerian operas and three of Strauss's operetta 'Die Fledermaus'; on the other hand, of the performances outside the subscription, twenty-six out of thirty-seven (there were two 'double bills') were German, and of these all but three were Wagnerian. Only one of the Nibelung dramas was given in the first list, 'Die Walküre,' but there were two serial representations (serial with a qualification, because the dramas were given a week apart) of 'The Ring of the Nibelungen' and eight of 'Parsifal,' which this year did not have one third the attractive power that it had last. No new works were produced, but there were revivals of 'La Gioconda' and 'Lucrezia.' The latter had one unhappy performance, resembling in this respect 'Fidelio,' which also was given but once in a Saturday-night performance at popular prices. In the first series the hero of the hour was Caruso, in the second Wagner.

Our new conductor, Herr Panzner, of Bremen, has been introduced by the Philharmonic Society; he proved himself to be a man of excellent parts, but failed to make as deep an impression as his predecessors. The honours of the season go to Herr Weingartner for superb performances of Beethoven's Choral Symphony at two special concerts. Herr Weingartner introduced a welcome innovation in making the last movement follow the third without pause, though to do it he compelled the choir and solo singers to come upon the stage after the Scherzo. The device which the late Sir George Grove so stoutly contended for is one that I long have waited vainly for. There can be no question of its value, and I am convinced that trial would everywhere result in its employment. In this case it was necessary for the chorists to stand throughout the slow movement, the stage not being large enough to accommodate them with chairs; but no ill effects were observable in their singing.

Hard on the heels of the Choral Symphony followed the Choral Fantasia at a Concert of Old Music, conducted by Mr. Sam Franks, and an interesting glimpse was given thereby into the operations of Beethoven's mind. Of course, serious students of the works and their histories have long known that the Choral Fantasia is the Choral Symphony in mini; but it helps the demonstration to hear the two works in close succession. The Choral Fantasia was a quasi-novelty in New York, not having been performed here in public in twenty years. A complete Beethoven novelty was 'Wellington's Victory,' which Dr. Walter Damrosch brought forward at a concert of the New York Symphony Orchestra on February 5. At two services of the Church Choral Society, under the direction of Richard Henry Warren, in St. Bartholomew's Church on February 8 and 9, the principal works performed with generally good effect were Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' and Elgar's Te Deum and Benedictus.

H. E. KREHBIEL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, March 15.

Two small novelties have been given at the Court Opera—'Das war ich,' by Leo Blech, conductor of the German theatre at Prague, and 'Die Abreise,' by Eugen d'Albert. Both are one-act pieces and have attractive text-books. The former is based on one of Boccaccio's merry tales, often used in stage literature. 'Die Abreise' is half serious, half cheerful; the psychological development of the three personages is finely traced. Blech's music is rather weak, and by no means suitable to the action, for which it is too pretentious and too restless. Hence after a few performances the work was withdrawn, although it was admirably given. On the other hand, d'Albert's opera created a genuinely deep impression; of all the composer's works with which we are acquainted it is the freshest and the most beautiful. Ever since the production of the opera at Frankfurt-on-the-Main in 1898 the number of performances throughout Germany has been on the increase. It is not written with a view to ordinary operatic effect, but it is most refined, most intime in character. The music is delightful, full of natural warmth, and it flows on in logical sequence: the vocal parts are also finely worked out. Madame Gutheil and MM. Weidemann and Schroecker represented the three personages with an ensemble quite exceptional.

The programmes of our great choral and instrumental concerts have included much that is praiseworthy. A Symphony in D minor by Sinding did not create a deep impression, but the Overture, 'In the South,' of Elgar's proved more interesting; the taste of the public for this composer's music is on the increase. One of Bach's 'Brandenburg' concertos created great excitement through the extremely high-sounding trumpet part, the technical difficulties of which almost border on the impossible. The Concertverein has performed Bruckner's first Symphony, a work which, though now forty years old, is little known; and yet it does not possess some of the strange qualities of the later symphonies. It is also more compact in form, and the structure is more logical. Director Loewe made great effect in conducting the work. Of him it may be said with much truth that he is a born Bruckner conductor; of this he gave proof at a Bruckner festival recently held at Munich. But his programmes included other interesting works: Dvorák's Symphony in D minor; some Dances, original and poetical, for string orchestra, written by Schubert at a very early age; while Goldmark's 'Ländliche Hochzeit' and Brahms's Serenade in A were by no means hackneyed gifts.

The Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde introduced a highly original novelty for soli, chorus and orchestra, 'Das trunkne Lied,' by Oscar Fried, a young German composer. The peculiar, fantastic text, a mixture of philosophy and poetry, is from Nietzsche's 'Also sprach Zarathustra.' The music is of modern German type, extravagant in its harmonies, insatiable as regards colour, measureless in extent, highly pretentious, and yet in spite of many weak places, full of talent. The performance, under the direction of Franz Schalk, was quite wonderful, and no one would have suspected that in technique the music was most difficult.

Various works by Max Reger, a highly gifted composer at Munich, have been performed by the Ansgore Society and the Society of Composers; and for one of these performances Reger himself came from Munich. The best impression he made was with his songs, admirably sung by Fräulein Rahn from Munich. In Variations on a Bach theme, and in others on a Bagatelle by Beethoven, he displayed rare skill as a composer for the pianoforte. A Trio for Flute, Violin, and Viola proved very original; but two Sonatas, one for Violin and the other for Pianoforte, pleased less.

The Ansgore Society has also produced works of the composer Conrad Ansgore, whose name it bears, especially quartets, though they did not meet with so much favour as a pleasing, poetical quartet by Max Jentsch, a Viennese composer, and a Pianoforte Quintet in F sharp minor by the opera conductor, Walter. Lovers of old music enjoyed the neat, expressive performances of the Paris Société de Concerts et d'Instruments Anciens, given under the direction of Henri Casadesus in the Carl Theatre. The instruments consist of a viol di gamba, a viola d'amore, a harpsichord, a quinton (a small five-stringed violin), and a three-stringed double-bass. One would, however, have preferred to hear more works originally written for these instruments, and displaying their characteristic qualities, rather than transcriptions.

The Society of Wind Instruments, under the direction of the flautist Leeuwen, of the Court Opera, achieved great success by the performance of Gounod's Symphony for Wind Instruments. As regards subject-matter the work may not be particularly striking; but in the treatment of the instruments and in conciseness of form it is a little masterpiece. The Singakademie brought forward Mozart's C minor Mass. The composer did not complete this work, but used the music for his 'Davidde Penitente.' Alois Schmitt, who died a few years ago at Dresden, and who was conductor of the Mozart Society in that city, reconstructed the Mass, and skillfully completed it from other works of the composer. The performance was under the direction of Wilhelm Kienzel, composer of 'Der Evangelimann.'

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The season of the Philharmonic Society closed on March 10 with the first performance in Ireland of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' the preparation for which had been in progress during the whole season. It is gratifying to record that, although not free from blemishes, the performance as a whole was a really good one in the opinion of many who had heard the work in England. When its great difficulties for chorus and orchestra are considered, this result adds another 'feather' to the already well furnished 'cap' of Dr. Koeller, who is his own chorus-master and bandmaster. The local players under his training have made such progress that only four of the band were imported. The solo parts were extremely well sung by Mr. Gervase Elwes, Miss Alice Lakin, and Mr. Charles Bennett. This concert had been anticipated with great interest, and the general verdict was that the work is a really splendid one, which must rank among the greatest modern creations.

The seventh of Dr. Walker's Chamber Concerts took place in the Examination Hall of the Queen's College on March 6. (This hall, by the way, cannot be considered satisfactory in its acoustic qualities. Its height being very great in proportion to its length and width, sound seems to lose itself and lack definiteness.) The only performers were Mr. G. Vincent, Herr Bast (Dublin, violoncello), and Dr. Walker, with Mr. Harrison Moreland as vocalist.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The performance of Horatio Parker's 'Hora Novissima' by the Festival Choral Society on February 23 was of quite exceptional merit. The choral numbers were magnificently sung, and after the a capella movement, 'Urbs Syon unica,' the applause was so enthusiastic and prolonged that Dr. Sinclair signalled to the chorus to rise in response, thus introducing an innovation of a graceful kind. The principal vocalists were Mesdames Emily Squire and Marie Brema, Messrs. Gregory Hast and Frederic Austin. Mr. Perkins played the organ part with fine effect, and the beautiful scoring was well brought out by the band led by Mr. Bernhard Carrodus. This work was followed by Beethoven's 'Choral Symphony,' in which principals and chorus again distinguished themselves, and the orchestral part received a fair average rendering. Professor Parker's work made a deep impression on the crowded audience.

At the Halford Concert of February 28, two concertos were performed—Rubinstein's Pianoforte Concerto No. 4, in D minor, with Miss Gertrude Peppercorn as soloist, and the A minor Violoncello Concerto of Saint-Saëns, with Mr. Johan C. Hock in the solo part. Both were splendidly played. The orchestral pieces were Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, grandly played, and the 'Flying Dutchman' Overture. At the ninth concert, on March 14, Mr. Egon Petri gave a masterly exposition of the solo part in Saint-Saëns's Fifth Pianoforte Concerto (Op. 103), and also played pieces by Chopin, Alkan, and Liszt, being enthusiastically applauded and recalled. The programme included Beethoven's Eighth Symphony, the 'Vorspiel' and 'Liebestod' from 'Tristan,' and Tschaiakovsky's 'Romeo and Juliet' Overture. All were finely played, under Mr. Halford's skilful direction. The last Harrison concert, on March 13, was also orchestral, the Queen's Hall Orchestra being engaged, with Mr. Henry J. Wood as conductor, and Mrs. Henry J. Wood, vocalist. A fine, and in some respects novel, reading of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony was given, and wonderful performances of 'Till Eulenspiegel' (Strauss), and the 'Case-Noisette' Suite (Tschaiakovsky). Mrs. Wood sang the 'Liebestod' very finely, and also two songs by Eugen d'Albert. Mr. Max Mossel's last drawing-room concert took place at the Grand Hotel on March 16. A well-selected programme was admirably interpreted by Miss Frida Kindler (pianoforte), Mr. Max Mossel (violin), and Mr. Hugo Heinz (vocalist). Mr. G. H. Manton was, as always, excellent as accompanist.

The concert given by the Amateur Orchestral Society to the members of the Midland Institute, on March 18, was of more than ordinary interest, inasmuch as it introduced two works by the Finnish composer, Jean Sibelius. These were the tone-poem 'Finlandia,' and the music to the drama 'King Christian II.' The first piece created a great impression. Mr. Willy Lehmann was artistic in the solo part of Rubinstein's Violoncello Concerto in A (Op. 65). Mr. Granville Bantock conducted. The same day a concert was given at the Edgbaston Assembly Rooms by Miss Marie Roberts, who appeared as a vocalist with success. Mr. H. Lane Wilson also sang, and pianoforte pieces were tastefully rendered by Miss Eva Young, Mr. James Capener acting as accompanist. Bare mention must suffice of the Town Hall concert by the Police Band, and the organ recital on March 23 of Mr. E. H. Lemare, with Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies as vocalist.

On March 4, the Male-Voice Choir directed by Mr. W. Sewell gave an excellent concert in the Town Hall. The tone of the choir, numbering upwards of sixty voices, was good. Mendelssohn's 'Foundation day Festival,' and Spofforth's 'Come, bounteous May,' were legitimate triumphs, while operatic choruses went well. Vocal solos were given by Miss May Eaves, Miss Pritchard, and Messrs. J. Chambers and T. Griffiths. Mr. Sidney Brooks played violoncello pieces by Popper and others.—Mr. F. W. Beard gave an orchestral concert on March 11, with a programme devoted to Wagner, Liszt, Saint-Saëns, and Elgar. Mr. Ripley-Evans was the vocalist, and Mr. Willy Lehmann played Bantock's 'Elegiac Poem' for violoncello, with orchestra. On March 18, a recital of Gounod's 'Faust' was given by the Choral Union, conducted by Mr. Facer.

A series of excellent chamber concerts is taking place on Saturday afternoons in the Exhibition Hall of the Botanical Gardens under the direction of Mr. Oscar Pollack.

An event of importance was the inaugural lecture of Sir Edward Elgar, as Professor of Music in the University of Birmingham, to which reference is made on page 248.

The Report and Balance Sheet of the Cardiff Musical Festival of 1904 has been issued. The former is cast in a pleasant strain, while the balance sheet shows that the Welsh music-making again paid its way and left a balance in hand, though only of 6s. 4d.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Bristol Choral Society, on February 25, gave a performance of Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah' at Colston Hall, this being the first time the work had been given in the city. The principal soloists were Madame Marie Brema, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. Francis Braun, the subsidiary parts being sung by Messrs. F. H. Baber, H. L. Wensley, A. J. Woodland, J. Barker, and W. Thomas, local vocalists. The choir and band numbered 600 performers, Mr. H. Lewis being leader. Mr. George Riseley conducted.

There was a large attendance at Colston Hall on March 2, the ladies' night of the Bristol Royal Orpheus Glee Society who, under the direction of Mr. Riseley, interpreted admirably a well-arranged programme. The choir were assisted by Mr. Santley who, in addition to taking the solos in several glees, conducted the rendering of his own 'Cupid swallowed,' which he wrote for the Bristol Madrigal Society sixteen years ago. Others who attended to direct the interpretation of their pieces were Dr. W. H. Cummings and Mr. C. Lee Williams. The former's 'O! the summer night' and a new contribution, 'Far, far away' (the latter dedicated to the Bristol Orpheus Society) were sung, and Mr. Williams's 'Crossing the bar' and 'There was a maid' (both composed for the Society) were given. The novelties were well received, and the composer-conductors enthusiastically recalled after the performance of their respective works.

An interesting concert was held at Redland Park Hall on March 7, when the choir and orchestra of Bristol Grammar School gave the fourteenth annual performance in aid of local charities. They were assisted by Miss Jennie Ellis (prize-winner at the National Eisteddfod in 1904) and Mr. A. E. Bullock (vocalists). Mr. Harold Bernard led the orchestra, the conductor being Mr. A. Ernest Hill (organist of St. John's Church), and Mr. E. Morrie Tyrrell conducted the choir, who rendered several part-songs very creditably.

The Bristol Harmonic Choir gave their annual concert on March 8 in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, Mr. J. Jenkins conducting. Several part-songs were well sung by the choir. Miss M. Griffiths Mullins was the vocalist, and Mr. Haydn Gunter contributed some violin solos.

On March 15, the ladies' night of the Society of Bristol Gleemen attracted a large audience at the Victoria Rooms, and under the direction of Mr. Walter J. Kidner, the choir gave a large number of compositions, many of which had been heard at previous concerts of the Society. At intervals Miss Violet Perry contributed songs.

The fourth for the season of the Clifton Chamber Concerts was held at the Victoria Rooms on March 16. The executants were Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violin), Ernest Lane (viola), and Percy Lewis (violoncello). Dvořák's Quartet in E flat major (Op. 51) and Brahms's Quintet in F major (Op. 34) were the principal works performed, and were well received by a large audience. The vocalist was Miss Violet Myers.

MUSIC IN CAMBRIDGE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The most interesting concert of the term was given by the Cambridge University Musical Society on March 20. The programme included two rarely performed works of Brahms, the Rhapsody (Op. 53) and the Trios for female voices, two horns, and harp. Miss Meta Diestel sang the Rhapsody and a selection of songs superbly. The programme was completed by Gluck's 'Iphigenia' Overture and Schubert's Octet. An exceptionally fine performance of the latter was given under the leadership of Mr. H. Inwards.

Mr. Plunket Greene and Mr. Percy Grainger gave a recital on February 22, under the auspices of the Cambridge University Musical Society. Other concerts have been given by Miss Marie Hall and the Misses Eyre. The Cambridge Choral Society's programme consisted of 'Elijah.'

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Miss Edith French (pianist) and Miss Nora Thomson (violinist) gave a pleasant concert in the Antient Concert Rooms on February 24. Besides playing solos on their respective instruments they united in an interpretation of Brahms's Sonata in D minor and 'Charakterstücke' by Dvořák. Madame Cosslett-Heller and Mr. J. C. Doyle were the vocalists and Miss Sophie Allen accompanied.

At the Dublin Orchestral Society's third concert, given on March 1 at the Royal University Hall, a new Orchestral Suite from the pen of Signor Esposito, the accomplished conductor of the orchestra, formed the principal novelty. The work, in four movements and illustrating an Arab story, is very well written for the orchestra, and met with a very favourable reception. Beethoven's Second Symphony, Weber's 'Preciosa' Overture, Palmieri's 'Italian Serenade,' Jarnfelt's 'Preludium,' and Wilhelmj's arrangement of Wagner's 'Good Friday' music from 'Parsifal'—in which the solo violin part was played by Herr Adolf Wilhelmj—completed the programme.

Mr. Plunket Greene gave two song recitals in the Antient Concert Rooms on March 13 and 15, the programme including two song-cycles by Vaughan Williams and Arthur Somervell, Stanford's 'Five songs of the sea,' Irish songs arranged by Hamilton Harty, Stanford, and others. The accompaniments were very well played by Miss Constance Greene.

On March 14 the Irish Ladies' Choir gave a concert conducted by Madame Cosslett-Heller, when her admirable singers rendered several part-songs specially arranged for them by Dr. Tosti and Mr. Robert O'Dwyer. Miss Nora Thomson (violinist), Miss Edith Davis (harpist), and Miss Sophie Allen (pianist) assisted.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

With the twelfth concert, on February 22, the season of orchestral concerts was brought to a triumphant close. The programme was devoted to Wagner, and in addition to the purely orchestral items Madame Brema gave a truly great rendering of a scene from the 'Götterdämmerung.' At the close Dr. Cowen and his band received a well-deserved ovation, for never has a more enjoyable or more successful series of orchestral concerts been given in Edinburgh.

Another of Mr. Denhof's chamber concerts was given on February 18, and Messrs. Halir and Hugo Becker, and Miss Marie Munchhoff aided the concert-giver in carrying through in delightful style a characteristically high-class programme. On the same date the Edinburgh Select Choir, conductor, Mr. J. W. Cowie, gave a pleasant concert of well-rendered part-music. Mr. Winram, as solo violinist, proved a valuable adjunct to the choral portion of the programme.

The concert of the University Musical Society on March 3 was one of the best it has hitherto given. The works performed were Handel's 'Dettingen' Te Deum and Stanford's 'Revenge,' with some part-songs by Sir Henry Bishop (a one-time occupant of the chair of music) and well-sung solos by Mr. Charles Tree. Mr. Moonie conducted, and a section of the Scottish Orchestra, with Mr. Collinson at the organ, played the accompaniments.

A most interesting song-recital was given on March 7 by Miss Marion Richardson, an excellent soprano, who was ably assisted by Miss Mabel Barrows (pianoforte) and Mr. Ossian Fohstrom (violoncello); and on March 21 Messrs. Halstead, Verbruggen, and Fohstrom conjoined in an admirable chamber concert, special interest attaching to the B flat Trio of Dvořák and the Pianoforte and Violoncello Sonata (Op. 6) of Richard Strauss.

Much praise must be given Mr. Felix Gade for his enterprise in the formation of a new orchestra—partly amateur, partly professional—numbering some sixty players. Considerable success attended the first concert on March 11. The 'Siegfried Idyll' and 'Prometheus' Overture offered a fair test of skill, and the players came through the ordeal with credit. Mr. Jean Ten Have gave a very good rendering of Beethoven's Violin Concerto.

The Bach Society's concert on March 16 witnessed the début of a promising young local pianist in Miss Gordon McKenzie, whose efforts were warmly applauded. The choir of St. George's Church, under Mr. Hartley, gave a fine rendering of the beautiful cantata, 'O light everlasting.'

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The season of the Choral and Orchestral Union was brought to a close on February 25, when the usual plébiscite programme was performed before an audience that literally crowded St. Andrew's Hall. The season has been a very successful one in all respects; the playing of the Scottish Orchestra under Dr. Cowen has never been better, and the performances of the Choral Union, so ably conducted by Mr. Bradley, have been uniformly excellent.

As is customary at the end of the orchestral season there has been quite a rush of musical events representing purely local effort. Of these we have to record the performance of 'Samson' by the Sunday School Union Choir, and 'Elijah' by the recently-formed Govan Choral Union, both choirs being under the direction of Mr. Alec Steven. For three consecutive weeks, beginning February 28, amateur opera was much in evidence, the performers being the opera class of the Athenæum School of Music ('The Daughter of the Regiment'), the students of the Glasgow College of Music ('Falka'), and the Orpheus Club ('Princess Ida'). The Athenæum Class has been conducted this year by Mr. Henri Verbrugghen, and the performance of Donizetti's music would have done credit to professional artists. A special feature of this production was the accompaniments played by a capital orchestra, led by Mr. R. Daebnitz. From the proceeds of these performances local charities will benefit considerably.

On March 6 the Musical Association connected with Pollokshields West Church (Mr. D. S. Eadie, conductor) gave a very praiseworthy rendering of Parts 1 and 2 of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha.' The solo music was tastefully sung by Miss Gertrude Russ and Messrs. J. F. S. Adams and Fred Taggart. The Glasgow Glee and Madrigal Society, conducted by Mr. B. W. Hartley, gave a highly successful concert on March 14. In such numbers as Wilbye's 'Sweet honeysucking bees' and Sullivan's 'The long day closes' the choir gave evidence of much painstaking study. On March 16 the Hamilton Choral Union, under Mr. T. S. Drummond's experienced direction, performed Handel's 'Samson.' A most capable band led by Mr. Daly, with Mr. Sydney Butler at the organ, supplied the accompaniments, and the soloists were Misses Agnes Glenn, Helen Mainds, and Messrs. H. Tyhurst and Robert Burnett.

The St. Mungo Choir, under Mr. Golan E. Hoole, performed Coleridge-Taylor's 'The Death of Minnehaha,' and Chailion's 'A song of the sea,' on March 21. Although not numerically very strong, the choir is well balanced, and their singing, especially of the former work, was marked by much intelligence and refinement. Another choral performance of merit was 'Acis and Galatea' by the newly-formed Athenæum Choral Society on March 22. Mr. J. M. Diack is the conductor of the new Society. At the second concert of the Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society (Mr. Hoecq, conductor), on March 23, an exceedingly interesting programme was submitted, the main items being Haydn's symphony, 'The Queen of France,' a first performance here of Gluck's overture to 'Alceste' (with the Finale by Weingartner), Mozart's symphonic concertante for violin, viola, and orchestra, and Mackenzie's Scotch Rhapsody No. 1. The solo parts of the concerto were beautifully played by Messrs. Verbrugghen (violin) and Haigh (viola), who also gave an excellent rendering of three duet caprices by Wieniawski. Miss Therese Grabowsky, who was vocalist, was heard to advantage in songs by Goring Thomas and Noel Johnson.

Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock has been appointed successor of Sir August Manns as musical director of the Crystal Palace. He will still retain the post of organist, the duties of which he has so ably discharged since 1894.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The second concert of the season given by the Gloucester Choral Society was held at the Shire Hall on March 7. The programme included Mendelssohn's 'First Walpurgis Night' and Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George.' The former work had not been heard in Gloucester since the Festival of 1883, and Mendelssohn's delightful setting of Goethe's poem was greatly enjoyed. The chorus, both in this and in Elgar's vigorous ballad, was heard to great advantage under Mr. A. Herbert Brewer's skilful direction. The soloists were Miss Amy Maynard, Mr. Ben Calvert, and Mr. Walter Ivimey (of the Chapels Royal). The band (led by Mr. W. H. Reed) played Mackenzie's 'Benedictus,' and the Air and Gavotte from Bach's Suite in D, the latter movement being encored.

The last month has been an active time with district choral societies, performances having been given at Stroud, Dursley, and Blakeney. Mr. Edis Tidnam, at Stroud, had a band and chorus numbering 200, and a very good performance was given at the concert on March 2 of Bridge's 'The Flag of England.' The band played several selections in good style, and Miss Gleeson-White and Mr. Ivimey contributed a number of songs. Mr. W. H. Reed was the solo violinist. There was a very large audience, and the concert was a great success.—The Dursley Choral Society gave Handel's 'Samson' at the concert on March 1, with band and chorus numbering seventy performers. Mr. A. W. Keys conducted, and the soloists were Miss Emily Shepherd, Miss Katherine Longland, Mr. James Davis, and Mr. David Evans.—The chief work performed by the Blakeney Choral Society was 'The Haymakers,' a cantata by George F. Root. Mr. Evan Jones proved an able conductor, and so great was the demand for seats that the performance had to be repeated in the evening.

The last of the free recitals of sacred music given at fortnightly intervals in the Nave of Gloucester Cathedral took place on March 2. The congregations on these occasions number between 2,000 and 3,000 people, and Mr. Brewer, the Cathedral organist, is always able to command good soloists, professional or amateur, and a good choir. The performances, which are timed to last one hour, are so greatly appreciated that one wonders that the example of Gloucester of using its fine Cathedral for such a purpose is not more generally followed in other dioceses. Only one collection is made, viz., at the last recital of the series.

The concert given by the Gloucester Instrumental Society on March 10 was the fifteenth under the direction of Mr. E. G. Woodward. The orchestral pieces were the Overture to 'Don Giovanni'; Entr'acte and Ballet Music from Schubert's 'Rosamunde'; Haydn's Symphony No. 1 in C; a Prelude by Massenet, and a popular Sullivan selection. Mr. Arnold Lanor played most effectively Mendelssohn's 'Capriccio Brillante.' Mr. W. F. Newton led the band (composed very largely of amateurs). Mr. Percy Lewis was solo violoncellist, and Miss Amy Newton vocalist.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The initial concert of the Liverpool Symphony Orchestra was given in the Sun Hall on March 13. The standard of attainment was high, whilst the attendance was large, and the appreciation of such works as Tchaikovsky's 'Pathétique' Symphony, the 'William Tell' Overture, and Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto (the solo part brilliantly played by Mr. Arthur Catterall) was most encouraging to Mr. V. V. Åkeröyd, the conductor of this new and welcome organization. It is to be hoped that the Liverpool Symphony Orchestra has come to stay.

The Orchestral Society put forward a most interesting selection on February 25. Of four items in the programme three were played for the first time in Liverpool—César Cui's Suite 'In modo Popolari,' Richard Strauss's Violin Concerto, Dvořák's Serenade for wood-wind, horns, violoncello, and bass. Mr. Granville Bantock conducted, and Mr. Weingartner won a triumph in the solo part of the Strauss Concerto.

At the Philharmonic Society's Concert on February 21, Beethoven's 'Birthday Festival Overture' (Op. 115), Schubert's Ninth Symphony, Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel,' and Wagner's 'Entrance of the Gods into Valhalla,' comprised Dr. Cowen's scheme. Madame Suzanne Adams was the vocalist. The same Society, at the penultimate concert of the season on March 7, performed Humperdinck's 'Hänsel und Gretel' Overture, Svendsen's 'Carnaval de Paris,' Borodine's Second Symphony, and Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto, with M. Zacharewitsch as soloist. The violinist gave a very fine rendering of the work, and at the close was the recipient of a particularly warm demonstration of appreciation. Madame Clara Butt sang.

A very large audience greeted Mr. Henry J. Wood and the Queen's Hall Orchestra on the 14th ult., when his programme included Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, the 'Casse-Noisette' Suite, and the 'Tannhäuser' Overture. 'The Golden Legend' was sung on February 19, by the Sunday Society, with Miss Annie Goodwin, Miss Maud Holmes, Mr. Walter Lawley, and Mr. Fowler Burton as principals, and Mr. J. W. Collinson conducted.

The Methodist Choral Union again advanced their claims upon particular attention by a very worthy performance of 'The Golden Legend' on March 17, and all the principals, namely, Miss Helen Jaxon, Madame Dews, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Charles Knowles, won favour. Mr. Schiever's final concert took place on March 4, when the programme consisted of Ernst Jókai's String Quintet (for the first time in England), Schubert's D minor Quartet, and Wolf Fierari's Pianoforte Quintet (first time in Liverpool). Mr. Charles Ross was the solo pianist.

Miss Jeannie Tomkinson, Miss Carlyle, Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, Mr. Osborne Edmundson, and the Hoylelake Male-Voice Choir (sixty voices), were the contributors to an attractive concert at West Kirby on March 1. The West Kirby Choral Society, on February 27, sang Stanford's 'Revenge' and Max Bruch's 'Fair Ellen.' The Birkenhead Glee and Madrigal Society gave their sixth concert on March 6, at the Town Hall, Birkenhead, when they were assisted by Miss Effie Thomas, Mr. H. Dearth, Miss Adie L. Moir (harpist), and Mr. Josef Greene (solo pianist).

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The faithful, untired janitors are closing for us one by one the doors of our local Temple of Music. The great portal of all was darkened on March 16, when the twentieth and last of the Hallé Society's Concerts, for the forty-seventh season, was given in the Free Trade Hall. At the seventeenth concert, on February 23, Brahms's high and dry 'Tragic' Overture opened the programme, and a remarkably effective rendering of the 'Scotch Symphony' closed it. This is Dr. Richter's second achievement this season in behalf of Mendelssohn. The French artist, M. Edouard Risler, was the solo pianist. He gave an interpretation of Beethoven's Fourth Concerto that was picturesque rather than broad. Mr. Percy Pitt's 'Oriental Rhapsody' was in the programme. At the eighteenth concert, on March 2, 'Till Eulenspiegel' repeated his 'Merry Pranks,' and was duly executed—with the long drop—on account of them. The Second Symphony—in D—of the Finnish composer, Jean Sibelius, was played, without creating any pronounced impression. Miss Ada Crossley was the solo vocalist. At the nineteenth concert the 'Dream of Gerontius' came to its third hearing. As Dr. Richter was indisposed, Mr. R. H. Wilson—the chorus-master here and at the Birmingham Festival—who of course knows the work thoroughly, took the baton, and directed an adequate performance of the work. The principals were Miss Maggie Stirling, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Andrew Black. Dr. Richter had to surrender the conductorship of the final concert to Dr. Brodsky, who, as he had to play with Mr. Carl Fuchs in Brahms's double Concerto (Op. 102) for Violin and Violoncello, gave up his place temporarily at that point to Mr. Speelman, the leader of the violas. There was an excellent performance of the 'Meistersinger' Overture. Dr. Brodsky secured for the first of Liszt's Rhapsodies—that in F—a rendering full of the required spirit and emphasis. Beethoven pronounced his noble benediction upon the concert and the season, in a performance of the 'Eroica' Symphony.

The annual concert of the Hallé Orchestra, on March 23, on behalf of their Pension Fund, was a great success. Dr. Brodsky conducted. Lady Hallé played Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto. Mr. Wilhelm Backhaus Richard Strauss's pianoforte solo 'Burleske,' and Miss Fillunger sang. The fund, originated at Dr. Richter's suggestion, now reaches nearly £3,000.

Dr. Richter unbends a little, and so do the subscribers, at the more than venerable Gentlemen's Concerts. And so, on February 28, we had the overture to Auber's 'La Sirène,' and Mozart's infinitely pleasing, and just now very popular, little Serenade, 'Eine Kleine Nachtmusik.' Mr. Percy Grainger played Tchaikovsky's difficult, but, to us, more curious than captivating, second Pianoforte Concerto in G (Op. 44). Mr. Iijalmar Arlberg sang, amongst other selections, Hugo Wolf's 'Anacreon's grave,' and the 'Ratcatcher,' his efforts being wonderfully set off with the descriptive orchestral accompaniments.

At the last of the Gentlemen's Concerts, on March 20, Brahms was called upon to confer a Lenten character upon the first part of the programme, Lady Hallé and her sister, Miss Olga Neruda, playing the composer's severely reflective Sonata for pianoforte and violin (Op. 72); and Mr. Kennerley Rumford singing those last four serious songs. In the second part of the concert Sir Villiers Stanford gave a St. Patrick's Day flavour to the programme, Lady Hallé playing two Irish Fantasias of his for violin, dedicated to the player; and Mr. Kennerley Rumford singing the composer's arrangement of 'Remember thee' as well as 'Eva Toole.' Between Brahms and Stanford Lady Hallé placed old Vitali's well-known 'Ciaccona.'

The fourth and last of the Vocal Society's concerts was given on March 22. The programme was a slightly enlarged edition of the 'Consort of Vocal Music' to which last month's notes referred, and under Dr. Henry Watson's able direction was immensely enjoyed by a huge audience.

The seventh and last of Mr. Brand Lane's popular Subscription Concerts was given on March 4. The presence at it of Mr. Plunket Greene, and of Mr. Mark Hambourg, as well as of Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Madame Bertha Bird, and Miss May Mukle (violoncello), rounded off the series with specially flattering success. The Brodsky Quartet concerts are the only important serial arrangements here that are not concluded in the month of March. At the fifth concert, on the 15th, the programme consisted of Beethoven's String Quartet in B flat (Op. 18, No. 6); Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Trio, 'In memory of a great artist' (Nicholas Rubinstein); and Mozart's String Quartet in G minor. Dr. Brodsky, let us add, was the friend and fellow-countryman of both Tchaikovsky and Rubinstein. Mr. Wilhelm Backhaus took the pianoforte part in the performance of the Trio, from which the fugal variation of the second movement was omitted. The Mozart Quartet, saturated with ethereal sorrow, was beautifully played. — The final concert at the Schiller-Anstalt was a Beethoven one, with the 'Twelve Variations' on the 'Zauberflöte' air, the Pianoforte and Violoncello Sonata (Op. 69), and the Pianoforte Sonata (Op. 106). In the two former Mr. Carl Fuchs, who directs these concerts, was the violoncellist, and M. Edouard Risler was at the pianoforte. — Mr. John Dunn gave a violin recital here on March 17, exhibiting his well-recognised technical skill. — Mr. Carl Armbruster has just delivered the third of three lectures, illustrated with vocal and pianoforte selections, on 'Some neglected Italian and French composers.' Cherubini and Auber were in the category.

Appreciation of Sir Edward Elgar's work has led to a very satisfactory performance by a suburban amateur choral society—the St. Margaret's—of the composer's Oratorio 'The Light of Life.' A competent little orchestra was engaged. The opera selected this year for platform performance by the students of the Royal Manchester College of Music is 'Figaro.' A tablet has just been unveiled at the College in memory of the late Mr. Charles H. Lees, of Oldham. He purchased and presented the present College premises, and was the original—and very generous—treasurer of the College, to which his widow continues his and her own good-will.

The Queen's Hall Orchestra (under Mr. Henry J. Wood) supplied the programme at the last Harrison concert on March 21.

Now that music is about to take the air as well as the airs, the subject of music in our parks and open spaces is a little prominently before the public. A municipal band of professional musicians is advocated in some directions. In this open air music the municipality spends more than £3,000 a year—wisely. An attempt at municipal concerts during the winter months has collapsed, after two seasons of trial.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The South Shields Orchestral Union is to be warmly congratulated on the success of its opening concert on March 1. This is the first time that an orchestral society of high aims has been organized in this important town: it is to be earnestly hoped that its initial programme—which included Beethoven's finished and Schubert's unfinished Symphonies, and Gade's 'Ossian' Overture—has heralded a long and widely-beneficial career. Mr. A. Adams is the enthusiastic and painstaking conductor.

The Stockton Choral and Orchestral Society gave a Coleridge-Taylor concert on March 2, and the similarly-combined society at Darlington performed Mendelssohn's '42nd Psalm' and Stanford's 'Last Post' on February 23. Miss Wormald was the vocalist, Miss Ethel Robinson played Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto, and the orchestra contributed a very interesting novelty, 'The Swan of Tuonela,' a legend by Jean Sibelius, the Finnish composer whose works are becoming more widely known in this country. Mr. T. Henderson conducted.

By a curious coincidence Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, which has not been heard in Newcastle since 1894 until it was played at the Scottish Orchestra Concert of February 15, was repeated exactly a month later (March 15) by the Queen's Hall Orchestra. Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel' and Tschaiakovsky's 'Nutcracker' Suite were included in the programme. On the same evening the Gateshead Vocal Society, under the conductorship of Mr. T. Robinson, performed C. H. Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander' and Schubert's 'Song of Miriam'; the soloists were Miss Elsie Foster and Mr. N. Laycock.

An excellent performance of Sullivan's 'Martyr of Antioch' was given with strings and organ accompaniments by the Newcastle Philharmonic Society on March 16, under the direction of Mr. George Dodds. This Society is making good progress, and is coming well to the fore in the march of local societies; but its efforts are sadly marred by strangely noisy and inattentive audiences. The performances are well worth more appreciative listeners. The soloists were Misses Mabel Manson and Margaret Hoggarth, and Messrs. G. D. Gibson and H. Brown. On March 17 the Armstrong College Choral Society gave their annual concert, when the programme included Schumann's 'Requiem for Mignon,' Mendelssohn's 'Loreley,' and a selection from Purcell's dramatic works.

We have had visits from Hegedus and the Bohemian String Quintet.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A very successful concert was given by the Norwich Philharmonic Society on February 23 at St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, when an excellent programme was presented. Mr. Julian Clifford played Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte Concerto No. 2, in G minor, and the Hon. Mrs. Clifford sang a cycle of songs entitled 'The Dream of Flowers,' composed by her husband, which was very favourably received, and the dramatic scene, 'Adonais,' by Landon Ronald. The band, augmented by a few London players in the wood-wind department, surmounted the difficulties in Tschaiakovsky's Fifth Symphony in very creditable style, and the accompaniments to the Concerto were excellently played.

The Norwich Festival chorus, under the energetic direction of Dr. A. H. Mann, is working hard in preparation for the Musical Festival in October next. Sir Edward Elgar's 'Apostles' is now in rehearsal.

A new organ constructed by Messrs. Norman and Beard was dedicated at St. Andrew's Church, Norwich, on March 6, when, after a short address by the Dean of Norwich, an organ recital was given by Dr. Mann, of Cambridge, interspersed with vocal music, Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' being performed in the evening of the same day. Miss Ethel Lister and Miss Mildred Jones kindly volunteered their services as vocalists. In the 'Hymn of Praise' the church choir, an entirely voluntary one, and sixty in number, acquitted themselves admirably, showing the careful training of the choir-master, Mr. Dobson. The church organist, Mr. Harden, accompanied with taste and discretion.

At the Saturday Popular Concert arranged by Dr. Bunnett in St. Andrew's Hall on March 4, Miss Ethel Lister and Miss Mildred Jones contributed some songs and vocal duets in a style which met with much appreciation, and Mrs. W. H. Cozens-Hardy played two violin solos, and at the Popular Concert on the following Saturday the Philharmonic Society and the Norwich Choral Society, under the conductorship of Dr. Bates, assisted, Mrs. Bates being the vocalist.

The Norwich Orchestral Union has already given one concert this season, at which Handel's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' and a miscellaneous programme were provided, including two compositions, a part-song, and an oboe solo by the conductor (Mr. Ernest Harcourt), who announces another concert to be given on May 18.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Gaul's 'Holy City' was performed by the Pyebridge and District Choral Society on February 26. The solos were sung by Mrs. Hayner, Miss Meggett, Mr. C. A. Wilson, and Mr. J. Sharp; Mr. Knighton led the orchestra, and Mr. Bonsall conducted.

The Grantham Philharmonic Society, under the direction of Mr. H. P. Dickinson, devoted their attention to works by British composers, at their concert on February 28, by performances of Elgar's 'Coronation Ode' and Stanford's 'Pauddrig Crohoore.' Miss Winifred Siddons, Miss Emily Hart, Mr. Henry Plevy, and Mr. J. O. Kelley were the soloists.

The last of the Nottingham Orchestral Concerts of the season took place on March 2, under the direction of Mr. Allen Gill. The programme was specially attractive in that Tschaiakovsky's Fifth Symphony was given. The orchestra gave a good account of themselves in this work, in Sullivan's 'Di Ballo' Overture, and in the more familiar 'Euryanthe' Overture. Miss Caroline Hatchard's songs 'Softly sighs' (Weber), and 'Non paventar' (Mozart) were well received.

Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night' and Bennett's 'May Queen' formed the principal features of the concert given by the Worksworth Choral Society on March 3. The solos were rendered by Miss Bessie Cartwright, Mr. C. W. Fredericks and Mr. J. Coleman. A feature of the evening was a song, 'Stars of night,' composed by the conductor of the Society, Mr. Carl Ashover, and sung by Mr. Coleman.

The Ilkeston Hospital benefited by the combined efforts of the Ilkeston and Nottingham Co-operative Prize Choirs, who gave Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' on March 4. The vocalists were Mrs. Gill, Miss Nellie Carter, and Miss Lilian Hemm, of Nottingham; Miss Stafford and Mr. Robinson, of Ilkeston, and Mr. Moore, who conducted.

Great credit is due to Mr. Arthur Richards, of Nottingham, for introducing, in his Orchestral Concert on March 11, two new works by local composers, as well as for the inclusion of Bach's Concerto (for three pianofortes) in D in his programme. The new compositions were a Ballad for Strings only by Mr. Eric Coates, and an Idyll for full Orchestra by Mr. Frank Taylor. Tunefulness was the chief feature of the former and brilliancy of scoring of the latter composition. Madame Amy Dewhurst sang, and Mr. Cyril Hopewell, Miss Marion Stevenson and Miss Vinnie Inman were the pianists.

The Derby Choral Union performed 'Samson' on March 14, when the soloists were Miss Lillie Wormald, Miss Amy Carter, Mr. Harry Stubbs, and Mr. James Coleman, and Mr. Charles Hancock conducted.

Mr. Woolley, whose choir gained the Grand Challenge Shield at Nottingham in 1902, gave a concert at the Circus Street Hall on March 16, at which part-songs by Benedict, Elgar, Hiles, Pinsuti, Fanning and Mendelssohn were ably rendered by his choir.

The Leicester Philharmonic Society gave a performance of the 'Dream of Gerontius' on March 16, under the direction of Mr. J. H. Marshall, and there is no doubt that it was the best ever given by the Society. The quality of tone, precision and attack of the choir were worthy of the highest praise. The orchestra was no less excellent, and the conductor deserves warm congratulation on the results of his painstaking efforts in preparing the work. The principal vocalists were Miss Marie Brema, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Watkin Mills, and it is needless to say their interpretation of their respective parts was without reproach.

On March 16 the West Bridgford Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. J. B. Lyddon, gave a good account of themselves in Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner.' The soloists were Madame Norledge, Madame Farnsworth, Mr. James Davis, and Mr. Arthur Lakin.

Haydn's 'Creation' was given on March 17 by the Loughborough Musical Society under the direction of Dr. Briggs. The soloists were Miss Margaret Hearne, Mr. John Render, and Mr. Charles Woodward.

The Stapleford Choral Society gave Bennett's 'May Queen' on March 20. Mr. Spencer conducted, and the principals were Miss Hilda Wilson, Miss Esther Racklyeft, Mr. George Sands, and Mr. Alfred Winterbottom.

The Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society gave a fine performance of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' on March 23 before a crowded audience. The chorus and orchestra were thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the work, and the solo parts were ably interpreted by Miss Florence Oliver, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Charles Knowles. Mr. Allen Gill conducted with more than his wonted skill; Mr. Lyell Tayler was an efficient leader of the orchestra, and Mr. F. Wyatt lent valuable aid at the organ.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first musical event of this term was the lecture by our genial Professor of Music, Sir Hubert Parry, on the afternoon of February 8, on 'The Evolution of Thematic Material,' in the Sheldonian Theatre, before a large and appreciative audience. Illustrations were given on the pianoforte by Mr. J. Friskin, and on the violin by Mr. W. J. Byles, both students of the Royal College of Music.

On the same evening, in the Town Hall, and under the auspices of the Musical Club, the Oxford Choral Society, in conjunction with the Bach Choir, gave a capital concert. The programme consisted of Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' Elgar's 'Enigma Variations' and Beethoven's Choral Symphony. Interest in the concert was intensified in the fact that the two English composers conducted their own works, and that the London Symphony Orchestra were engaged for the occasion. Dr. Allen, the conductor of these joint societies, is much to be congratulated on the success of the concert.

On February 20, in the Town Hall, Florizel von Reuter gave a recital, assisted by Mdle. Sequel (pianoforte) and Miss Grisewold, who sang several songs. Amongst the precocious young violinist's solos were Vieuxtemps's Concerto in E, Sarasate's Zigeunerweisen, a Bach Fugue, and a set of Variations by Paganini.

On February 23, in the Town Hall, a Chamber concert was given by Mr. Donald F. Tovey (pianoforte), Messrs. Halir, Holaday, Whitehouse, and C. Hobday (strings), under the auspices of the Musical Club. The programme consisted of Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio in C minor (Op. 1, No. 3), Brahms's Pianoforte and Violin Sonata in G (Op. 78), and Schubert's Quintet in A (Op. 114). The concert from first to last was most enjoyable.

In the Examination Schools another chamber concert was given on February 27 by the Schiever Quartet (Messrs. Schiever, Ross, Courvoisier, and Hatton) under the auspices of the Musical Union. The chief item was Beethoven's C sharp minor Quartet, which was rendered throughout in most artistic style. Songs were contributed by Mr. A. P. Winsor, who is the possessor of a light tenor voice of very pleasing quality.

The Sunday Evening Concerts at Balliol College have been continued as usual during the term under the able directorship of Dr. Walker.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A number of excellent oratorio performances have been given round about Sheffield. Among them have been 'St. Paul' by the Burngreave Choral Society, under Mr. H. Chisholm Jackson; 'Elijah,' at Oxford Street Church, with a special chorus conducted by Dr. Coward; the same work at John Street Chapel, directed by Mr. N. Bingham; and also by the Doncaster Musical Society, Mr. T. Brameld conducting. The Chapeltown Harmonic Society gave a fine performance of the 'Hymn of Praise' and Mozart's Twelfth Mass, in which Mr. Thomas Bool and his chorus added to a high reputation. The Male Glee and Madrigal Society sung a well-selected programme, under Mr. A. S. Burrows's direction, at the last Municipal Concert in the Corn Exchange.

Chamber music now flourishes in the city. At the sixth concert of the Chamber Music Society, Mr. Claude Hawcroft's quartet gave a carefully studied performance of works by Rubinstein (in C minor), and Mozart (in F major). Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Wood's party also gave an interesting chamber concert in the Cutlers' Hall, playing Rheinberger's Pianoforte Quintet in C major, with Mr. J. W. Phillips at the pianoforte. The Amateur Instrumental Society gave the second subscription concert on March 6, playing, under Mr. H. Dean, Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' and Rossini's 'William Tell' Overtures, and shorter works by Mozart and Wagner in admirable style.

The Sheffield Musical Union terminated a very successful season with a fine performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' in the Albert Hall on March 21. The work had been twice previously heard in the city, but on nothing like the scale of this performance. As usual, the magnificent chorus easily won the chief honours—the pathos and beauty of the second division of the trilogy being realised to the full. Dr. Coward, who conducted, had made a special study of the closing scenes, and by his clever treatment invested them with peculiar interest. The soloists were Miss Helen Jaxon, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. Dan Price. The Sheffield Orchestra, led by Mr. J. H. Parkes, played wonderfully well, and Mr. W. S. Jessop rendered valuable service at the organ.

MUSIC IN STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society (conductor, Mr. James Garner) secured another triumph on March 9, when Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' was performed under the baton of the distinguished composer. The trilogy has again proved to be a work in which chorists take great delight. The principal soloists—Miss Jaxon, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Watkin Mills—fully sustained their reputations, while the band rendered excellent service. The choral tone was worthy of the highest praise from start to finish. The phrasing of the singers was splendid, and the parts moved with an independence which could only have been secured by the most careful preparation on the part of the conductor of the Society, Mr. James Garner. Mr. Taylor conducted with great energy, and at the close he received a greeting which for warmth and spontaneity must have been most gratifying.

LEEDS.

At the last of the Broadwood Concerts, on March 1, Mr. Plunket Greene appeared, and Mr. Fricker conducted a choir who sang the same series of madrigals which they had given at one of the London Broadwood Concerts, but with the additional finish which extended rehearsals had given. Though still rather too much oratorio singers, they are rapidly realizing the more subtle and delicate effects of madrigal music. Miss Spravka's pianoforte solos, and Mr. Hamilton Hart's finely played accompaniments, were important elements in this enjoyable concert. On March 10, Mr. John Dunn gave a violin recital, playing with his accustomed brilliance, and rather more than his accustomed refinement. He was accompanied by Madame de Lara as pianist and Miss Gleeson-White as vocalist. At the Municipal Concert on March 11, the Armley Choral Society sang some part-songs with capital effect, under Mr. H. H. Pickard's direction. Mr. E. Elliott and Miss Gertrude Wortley played with sympathy a pleasing Suite for Violin and Pianoforte by Schütt, and Mr. A. Bolton's finished playing of violoncello solos was noteworthy. The vocalist was Miss Laura Binns. At the Leeds Bohemian Concert, on March 15, quartets by Brahms (A minor) and Mozart were associated with a novelty, a String Quartet in D minor by Mr. Arthur Grimshaw, a local musician, who possesses a creative power of which he should make more, for this work, the most serious in aim of any we have heard from his pen, shows exceptional creative ability, being instinct with musical feeling, and admirably wrought. The slow movement, which forms the supreme test of inspiration, is a really beautiful composition, a sort of dreamy nocturne, full of the charm of melody and colour, while the construction throughout shows a power of logical development and a keen sense of proportion. This most interesting composition was very sympathetically played by Messrs. Elliott, Moxon, Haigh, and Giessing.

The Leeds Philharmonic Society gave a performance of the 'Dream of Gerontius' and the 'Triumphlied' of Brahms on March 22. Sir Charles Stanford directed a remarkably fine performance, the singing of the choir trained by Mr. Fricker being beyond reproach.

BRADFORD.

At Bradford, on March 3, the 'Old' Choral Society, under Mr. J. W. Fitton, gave Gade's 'Erl King's daughter,' followed by Mendelssohn's 'Athalie' music, the principals being Miss Perceval Allen, Miss E. Bradley, Miss Charlesworth, Mr. Kermodie, and Mr. R. Burnett. On the following day the Permanent Orchestra wound up its season with a vivacious programme, including, along with the last two movements of Beethoven's C minor Symphony, a selection which echoed the gaieties of the Savoy, and some laughter-provoking bassoon variations on 'Lucy Long,' cleverly played by Mr. S. F. Midgley. Madame Grew and Mr. Saunders were the vocalists, and Mr. Allen Gill conducted with great spirit. On the 10th, at one of the subscription concerts, Sir Edward Elgar's 'Apostles' was introduced to Bradford under the most favourable conditions that could be wished. The cast could hardly have been improved upon, including as it did Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Muriel Foster, Messrs. Coates, Austin, Andrew Black, and Ffrangcon-Davies, with the chorus of the Bradford Festival Society and the Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Cowen. The wealth of colour and extraordinary picturesqueness of the score, as well as its notes of sympathy and power, were made very apparent, and though individual opinions were diametrically opposed, the audience seemed strongly impressed. On March 17, Mr. S. F. Midgley gave one of his interesting chamber concerts, assisted by Miss Edith Robinson as violinist and by his wife and Mr. Heather as vocalists. Violin sonatas by Mozart and Richard Strauss were very artistically played.

OTHER TOWNS.

The Huddersfield Choral Society is a famous body whose unique beauty and volume of tone I have often bemoaned, and it may be said to have reached the highest point in its career on March 3, when Sir Hubert Parry's 'Judith' was given under the composer's direction, and with an excellent cast of soloists, Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Stirling, Mr. Brearley, and Mr. Hubert Brown. The work might have been written for the Society, and I doubt whether its strenuous choruses have ever been given with greater force and spirit. At the Huddersfield subscription concert on March 7, the London Wind Quintet appeared and, with Mr. F. Dawson as pianist, played a very charming Sextet by Ludwig Thuille. Miss Evangeline Florence and Miss Bertha Salter were the vocalists.

At Halifax the local Orchestral Society, which owes much to the enthusiasm of its conductor, Mr. H. van Dyk, gave on March 2 a familiar but excellent programme, which included Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, with Dr. Cowen's 'Language of Flowers' Suite, and some good overtures. Miss Bowness was the vocalist. On March 9 the Halifax Choral Society, under Mr. F. de G. English, gave an exceptionally interesting concert. Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride' and Stanford's Te Deum were the works chosen, both of which were sung with refinement and finish. The principals were Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Lilian Hovey, Messrs. Brearley and Ivor Foster.

On March 7, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor gave a special interest to the concert of the York Symphony Society by appearing to conduct several of his works, which went with excellent spirit, as did other pieces conducted by Mr. T. T. Noble. Mr. J. Coleman was the vocalist.

On March 1 the Keighley Orchestral Society, of which Mr. Summerscales is the conductor, gave Haydn's D minor Symphony, Mr. Bernhard Carrodus, whose father was Keighley's most distinguished native, playing the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto and Miss Ada Crossley being the vocalist. On March 21 the Keighley Musical Union, which is also under Mr. Summerscales's rule, gave a performance of 'Elijah' that was distinguished by some very forceful chorus-singing. Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Mary Hardacre, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Hubert Brown made an excellent quartet of soloists, and it is worthy of note that Miss Hardacre and Mr. Brown are both natives of the district, and young singers of exceptional promise. The Batley Choral Society chose for their concert, on March 15, Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' Trilogy, of which a very spirited, if somewhat rough, performance was given. Mr. J. Fearnley conducted, and Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. Harold Wilde, and Mr. Charles Tree were thoroughly efficient principals. The concert of the Hull Philharmonic Society, on March 10, was distinguished by performances of Dvorák's D minor Symphony (No. 2), which is not too often heard, and Elgar's Variations. Miss Nannie Tout was the vocalist and Mr. J. W. Hudson conducted. At Morley, on March 16, Miss Mary Scholes, who has been studying at the Royal College of Music, made her first public appearance, and sang a very varied and exacting series of pieces with considerable brilliancy and good expression.

Foreign Notes.

PARIS.

'L'Enfant-Roi ou l'Apothéose de la boulangerie,' musical comedy in five acts, libretto by the late Emile Zola, music by M. Alfred Bruneau, was produced at the Opéra Comique on March 3. This new work has called forth conflicting opinions: some give it unqualified praise, others the reverse. M. Bruneau occupies a high place among modern composers, and the fact of difference of opinion is not an unfavourable sign. Let us hope that an early opportunity of hearing and judging the work will be given us here in London.

The prize of 1,500 francs offered by the Grand Opéra for the best symphonic work has been awarded to Edmond Malherbe for his 'Le Jugement de Paris.' The composer won the Prix de Rome in 1899.

BRUSSELS.

The first performance of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' in the French tongue was given here on March 19 under the direction of M. Silvain Dupuis.

OSTEND.

The 'Théâtre Lyrique International Leopold II.' is to be built after the plan of the Bayreuth theatre, only there are to be two galleries. At the opening season (1906) 'Don Giovanni' is to be performed four times, and there will be an equal number of 'Ring' cycles. The necessary funds for the building of this theatre, of which the originator is the vocalist Van Dyck and of which he will be director, are guaranteed.

LEIPZIG.

The widow of Max Staegemann who recently died so suddenly, requested the Town Council to appoint Arthur Nikisch director of the opera at the Stadttheater, subject of course to the consent of the Gewandhaus direction, and he has accordingly been appointed, and intends shortly to perform Wolf-Ferrari's 'Die neugierigen Frauen.' Berlioz's 'Beatrice and Benedict,' Leoncavallo's 'Roland von Berlin,' Humperdinck's 'Die Heirat wider Willen' and Strauss's 'Salome,' are also to be given after their production at Berlin and Dresden respectively.

Miscellaneous.

The R. C. M. Magazine, of which No. 1 has been issued, is 'a journal for past and present students of the Royal College of Music,' and deserves a welcome by reason of its aims and subject matter. It will doubtless improve as time goes on, and future issues will probably not contain the name of a certain composer printed in the form of 'Brahm's,' as it here appears seven times in three pages. The statement that this is 'the first students' magazine' is not consistent with fact, as the Overture, an exceedingly readable periodical issued in connection with the Royal Academy of Music, ran its merry course for three years, from 1890 to 1893.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' music continues to interest provincial choral societies in a very marked degree. During the past few weeks no fewer than seven performances of the complete work have been given, while of its separate sections the 'Wedding Feast' maintains the lead with seventeen performances, the 'Death of Minnehaha' following with nine, and 'Hiawatha's Departure' with five. Dr. Cowen's 'John Gilpin' is rapidly coming into favour: this humorous cantata has quite recently been performed on nine different occasions.

At the Bermondsey Settlement on March 18, Mr. J. E. Borland delivered a lecture describing the evolution of the pianoforte, from the simple dulcimer to the finest and most complicated of modern instruments. The construction and mechanism were explained of the clavichord, spinet, harpsichord, and early pianoforte, by the aid of the lantern-sheet, on which diagrams of various types of action and pictures of historic instruments were shown. The lecture was musically illustrated by Mrs. J. E. Borland (keyed instruments) and Miss Bertha Murray (violin).

The third meeting of the Girls' School Music Union, of which Miss Cecilia Hill is the indefatigable hon. secretary, was held at the Kensington High School on Saturday, February 25. Under the presidency of Lady Mary Lygon, about two hundred members assembled to listen to an address prepared jointly by Mrs. Woodhouse, of Clapham High School, and Miss Elsa Froebel, on 'The desirability of special training for the Teaching of Music.' A detailed report of the interesting proceedings will be found in the April issue of The School Music Review.

The Year-Book and Register of Members for the year 1905 of the Incorporated Society of Musicians is a useful book of reference. The words 'twenty-first edition' on the title-page should surely read 'twenty-first issue,' while the Calendar section needs correction, e.g., Manuel Garcia was born on March 17, not 18; and Attwood died on March 24, 1838, not on April 28, 1839.

Max von Erdmannsdörfer, the well-known conductor and champion of the new German school, died at Munich on February 14, at the comparatively early age of fifty-seven. He was conductor at Moscow, Bremen, Petersburg, Sondershausen, finally settling at Munich in 1897. At his last public appearance only a few weeks before his death, he conducted the Coronation Mass of his former friend, Franz List.

The Folk-Song Society is desirous of increasing its membership. The annual subscription is half-a-guinea, in return for which members have the privilege of attending the meetings and lectures of the Society and of receiving a copy of all publications which may be issued from time to time. The Hon. Secretary is Miss Lucy Broadwood, 84, Carlisle Mansions, Victoria Street, S.W.

Royal Academy of Music.—The following awards have recently been made: The Battison-Haynes Prize (Composition), awarded to Montague F. Phillips (London). The R. A. M. Club Prize (Composition) to Benjamin J. Dale (London). The Goldberg Prize (Contraltos) to Constance Dugard (London). The Sterndale-Bennett Prize (Female Pianists) to Irene Scharrer (London).

The death took place on March 10, at Steglitz, Berlin, of Herr Otto Dienel, organist of the Marienkirche, Berlin, and composer of organ music. He was born at Tiefenfurth, Silesia, January 11, 1839. Since 1881 he has borne the title of Royal 'Musikdirektor.'

'Novello's Monthly Bulletin of New Foreign Music' is a monthly publication which will be found useful for reference. The first issue—a carefully compiled double number for the months of January and February—is one of twelve pages, wherein the various compositions are set forth in classified order. The 'Bulletin' will be sent post-free upon application to the publishers.

Dr. A. H. Mann delivered an interesting lecture at the Guildhall School of Music on February 21, taking as his subject 'Some East Anglian Musicians.' The musical illustrations included examples from the compositions of East Anglian worthies, of whom Dr. Mann is one.

In consequence of the Easter Holidays, advertisements intended for insertion in the May issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES should reach the office not later than the morning of Thursday, April 20.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

BEDFORD.—The Musical Society gave the second concert this season on February 28. The programme included Coleridge-Taylor's three Choral Ballads and his four Characteristic Waltzes, both being received with enthusiasm. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor conducted his own works, and obtained good results from the well-drilled forces trained by Dr. H. A. Harding. Beethoven's 'Egmont' overture, and Tchaikovsky's 'Casse Noisette' suite, were excellently played by the orchestra, under the able direction of Dr. Harding.

BRUTON.—The Choral Society gave a concert on March 2, when Stanford's 'Revenge' was successfully performed. The programme included two of the Somerset folk-songs lately discovered by Mr. Cecil Sharp, one of which, 'In Bruton Town' is of local interest. Other items were the 'Larghetto' from Elgar's serenade for strings, the Andante from Mendelssohn's violin concerto (the latter played by Miss Elaine Cockey), and Bridge's part-song 'Bold Turpin.' Miss B. Heginbotham led the orchestra, and Mr. Rowland Hughes conducted.

GRAHAMSTOWN.—The Orchestral Society gave a concert in the Town Hall on February 23, under the direction of Mr. W. Deane. The programme included Mendelssohn's 'Cornelius March,' Mozart's 'Figaro' overture, Battison Haynes's 'Westwood Gavotte,' and other pieces, and solos were contributed by Herr Israel (violin), Mrs. W. Deane (pianoforte), and Mr. Bernard Streatfield (vocal).

HALSTEAD.—Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner' was given by the Choral Society on March 7, when the choruses were sung with great spirit, and the accompaniments were played by a full orchestra, including several instrumentalists from London. The solo vocalists were Miss Clara Dow, Miss May Peters, Mr. Isidore Warren, and Mr. Richard Nitschke. On the preceding evening the same work was given by the Clare Choral Society, with the same principals, and accompanied by a portion of the orchestra, the choir singing with great intelligence and precision. Mr. W. H. Bullock conducted at both concerts.

LEAMINGTON.—The Madrigal Society gave a concert in the Winter Hall on March 1, when the prominent features of the programme were 'The Death of Minnehaha,' Edward German's Welsh Rhapsody, Schubert's 'Rosamunde' overture, a setting of the 'Village Blacksmith' for chorus, organ, and orchestra, by Mr. A. E. Gibbs, who conducted his cantata, and Schumann's Concertstück for pianoforte in G major (Op. 92), the last-named work being conducted by Mr. Walter Warren, as Mr. E. Roberts West (the conductor of the Society) undertook the solo part.

NEWPORT (MON.).—The Musical Society gave their second concert of the season at the Tredegar Hall on March 16, when Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Dudley Buck's 'Hymn to Music' were performed. The choir sang with much spirit, and the orchestra was heard to great advantage in Tchaikovsky's '1812' overture, which formed part of the programme. The solo vocalists were Madame Mary Poole, Mrs. Willoughby Thomas, and Mr. Lloyd Chandos. Mr. E. G. R. Richards conducted.

PONTEFRAC.—The Choral Society gave Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' on March 7, with a Choir and Orchestra of 170, under the direction of Mr. R. B. Walker. The choir sang with much refinement and intelligence, and the orchestra, largely professional, was most satisfactory. The solos were in the capable hands of Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Lilian Payne, Mr. Walter Lawley, Mr. Charles Tree, and Mr. Ireland. The overture to 'Der Freischütz,' and 'The Challenge of Thor' (Elgar) were also included in the programme.

RIPON.—The Ripon Amateur Operatic Society has during the last month given five highly successful performances of the 'Pirates of Penzance,' on behalf of local charities, under the honorary conductorship of Mr. C. H. Moody, who at the close of the series was presented by the members with a case of handsome solid silver muffineers. There was a large orchestra of some twenty-five performers, and the week's receipts amounted to about £213.

STIRLING.—The annual concert of the Choral Society took place in the Albert Hall on February 28. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast' and the 'Death of Minnehaha' occupied the first part of the programme, and the miscellaneous second part included Cowen's 'John Gilpin.' The performance of the choir and orchestra (led by Mr. W. H. Cole) was in every respect satisfactory, and an excellent trio of soloists was secured in Miss Marion Richardson, Mr. Henry Brearley, and Mr. John Browning. Dr. A. W. Marchant skilfully conducted.

TIMPERLEY.—The Vocal Society's last concert of this season was given on March 6. The chief item in the programme was Niels Gade's cantata 'The Erl King's Daughter,' in which the principals were Mrs. Faulkner, Miss Ethel Davenport, and Mr. Wesley E. Simpson. Other choral numbers were three 'Spring Songs' (Mendelssohn), 'Vineta' (Brahms), 'La Carita' (Rossini), 'Gitanella' (Gounod), and 'The Norse King's Bride' (J. Trousdale). Mr. A. Worsley accompanied, and Mr. H. Mozart Sheaves was the conductor.

TORONTO.—The concert given by the National Chorus of Toronto on February 28 was thoroughly successful. The chorus, under the direction of Dr. Albert Ham, gave excellent renderings of Cowen's 'John Gilpin' and Dr. Albert Ham's 'The Hope of the Ages.' Mr. Victor Herbert's fine orchestra from New York gave admirable performances of Weber's 'Oberon' overture and works by Délibes and Victor Herbert.

Answers to Correspondents.

TRISTAN.—There is a certain amount of risk in stating when the name of Richard Wagner first appeared in an English periodical devoted to music; but an early reference to the composer of 'Lohengrin' is to be found in the Harmonicon of May, 1833, under the heading 'Leipzig.' The extract reads:—'The principal novelties produced at the subscription concerts were an overture of M. Hartknoch, of original conception and clever in point of instrumentation, and a symphony by Richard Wagner, scarcely twenty years of age, which was much and deservedly applauded.'

F. C. S.—(1) In a chancel choir the altos should be placed nearest the congregation, the tenors next, and then the basses. (2) If the processional hymn is accompanied by the organ, a change from harmony to unison in some of the verses is effective, provided, of course, that the compass of the tune permits. But the unaccompanied singing (in harmony) of a processional hymn is a pleasant relief from the organ tone. Such an instance in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, lingers in our memory with 'fond delight.'

BARITONE.—Goethe's 'Erl King' has been set to music by upwards of fifty composers, but Schubert has excelled them all.

M. C. Y.—A pianoforte duet arrangement of Mendelssohn's 'Song without words' No. 30 is contained in the Peters edition, No. 1,723, price 2s. 2d.

110° IN THE SHADE.—(1) No, we have not yet given a history of the tune 'Bedford,' but we hope to do so in due course. (2) This tune ('Bedford') appears in the Methodist Hymn Book (No. 928) in almost its original form, as regards the syncopations in lines 2 and 4; but while they are very beautiful and characteristic of old-world psalmody, it is to be feared that congregations will not very successfully interpret them. (3) There is no book that gives the history of hymn-tunes in the form that you describe; but you may gain much information from 'Scottish Church Music,' by James Love (William Blackwood & Sons) and 'The Music of the Church Hymnary,' by William Cowan and James Love (Henry Frowde).

HAUTBOIS.—(1) For 'brilliant variations' (pianoforte) try those by Chopin, Op. 12; Liszt, 'Rigoletto'; Henselt, Op. 1 and 11; Grieg, Op. 24; Rachmaninoff, Op. 22; Rosenthal's Variations; Rubinstein, Op. 104, No. 2; and Tausig, 'Halka.' (2) For piccolo solos with pianoforte accompaniment, see the following: Herman, Andante and Rondo; Mayeur, Flautino; Pillevestre, Miss Alouette; and Sieveking, Serenata Espanola.

FLOREE (aged 14).—Do not despair. The shake is rather trying; but try, try, try again. Begin to practise it very slowly and gradually increase the speed. Keep the second finger well over the F sharp, and as still as possible, so that when the time comes it may be quite ready to descend to its note firmly without interrupting the regularity of the trill. (The shake referred to is that in bar 15 of Handel's '6 petites fugues, No. 1 in C).

F. W. W.—(1) Any organ music composed by the late Frederic Archer, after he left England, would probably be published in America. We will inquire about this and let you know. (2) The behaviour of choir-boys is a subject that needs no manual of manners: it cannot be taught by books.

E. M. S.—The fact that 'authorities' (such as some of them are) do not agree as to the proper form of writing the chromatic scale is a proof that there is no absolute rule. It really is not worth bothering about. Time can be more profitably spent in practising the scale.

OLD SUBSCRIBER.—Good educational facilities, with musical advantages including 'good concerts,' exist in the following German towns: Dresden, Mannheim, Frankfurt-on-the-Main, Hanover, Cologne, Munich, and Stuttgart.

CONSTANT READER.—(1) The Hymn-tunes by H. Hugo Pierson are, we fear, out of print. (2) The Vesper hymn-tune in 'Additional Hymns' (No. 972) is published separately by Messrs. Novello.

H. G. C.—An arrangement for the organ of the final chorus in Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion is contained in Book 34 of 'The Village Organist.'

W. P. S.—The most recent and carefully-compiled Gregorian Psalter is that edited by Messrs. H. B. Briggs and W. H. Frere, published in 1902 by Messrs. Novello.

W.—To supplement the organ with brass instruments and drums is most effective in results, but the addition of some players on stringed instruments would be still more effective.

J. B.—We do not think that a copy, even in good condition, of Shield's comic opera, 'The Travellers of Switzerland,' is of any great pecuniary value.

R. B.—An account of Mendelssohn's visit to Queen Victoria at Buckingham Palace appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of June, 1897, p. 370.

NOOMBOLIUM.—A choir of 150 voices is best proportioned thus: sopranos, 40; altos, 35; tenors, 35; basses, 40.

A. H.—An illustrated biographical sketch of Sir Edward Elgar appeared in the issue of this journal for October, 1900.

F.R.A.M.—Two triplets, thus preserving the rhythmic division of the bar.

ORGAN.—In answer to your question 'How to publish music?' we venture to reply, Ask a music publisher.

F. E. F.—The English equivalent of the French word 'audition' is 'a hearing.'

Complete edition, bound with HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN (Quarto), 7s. 6d. net.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern (Old Edition), so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

THE PARISH CHOIR MANUAL

CONTAINING

THE CANTICLES AT MORNING AND EVENING PRAYER

SET TO APPROPRIATE CHANTS

FERIAL AND FESTAL RESPONSES, LITANY, RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS, FINAL AMENS, VESPER HYMNS AND VESTRY PRAYERS

TOGETHER WITH

ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS TO THE LORD'S PRAYER, APOSTLES' AND NICENE CREEDS.

The Canticles, with the Cathedral Psalter Pointing, have been set to appropriate Chants by Sir John Stainer, Sir George C. Martin, Sir Joseph Barnby, Sir George Elvey, and other well-known church composers.

The Responses to the Commandments have been selected from the Services of the above composers as well as those of Myles B. Foster, Dr. Garrett, Ch. Gounod, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Dr. C. H. Lloyd, Merbecke, H. Smart, John E. West, S. S. Wesley, and others.

Sir John Stainer's Sevenfold Amen is also included, as well as Vesper Hymns by Beethoven, Sullivan, and others ; concluding with two Vestry Prayers by S. S. Wesley and the Rev. Canon Hervey.

PREFACE.

Organists, choirmasters, and librarians of choirs often have occasion to wish for a choral service-book of a comprehensive nature. This desideratum the "Parish Choir Manual" seeks to meet by supplying within one cover the Canticles for Morning and Evening Prayer, Responses (Ferial, Festal, and to the Commandments), Final Amens, Vesper Hymns and Vestry Prayers, in addition to organ accompaniments to the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds.

The constant usefulness and the practicability of such a compilation are obvious, and a glance at the names of the composers will assure confidence in a publication that should commend itself for use "in quires and places where they sing."

SONATA IN D MINOR FOR THE ORGAN

COMPOSED BY
ALFRED H. ALLEN.

Price Three Shillings.

"Organists may be recommended a Sonata in D minor by Alfred H. Allen. This is an extremely well-written work by one who evidently is an expert organist. In the Prelude the composer employs the rarely-used seven-four, alternating with three-four, tempo. His counterpoint flows naturally and without effort. There is an excellent fugal section in this movement. The Intermezzo is melodious and simple in construction, an Allegretto Scherzando in the middle affording effective contrast. The Finale worthily concludes the sonata."—Morning Post.

"A Sonata in D minor, by Alfred H. Allen, contains something more than sound workmanship, and the light Scherzo offers excellent contrast to the stately opening movement and the elaborate Finale."—Athenaeum.

OLD ENGLISH ORGAN MUSIC

EDITED BY
JOHN E. WEST.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has for some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day.

Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance.

The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs.

PRODUCED AT THE LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERT,
MARCH 8, 1905.INTRODUCTION
AND ALLEGRO
FOR STRINGS
(QUARTET AND ORCHESTRA)

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 47.)

Full Score and Parts (in the Press).

THE TIMES.

The alternation of tone-colouring gives many charming effects, and the disposition of the instruments is of the happiest. . . . What is really a remarkably poor little Welsh tune is turned to noble purposes in the two movements, and never has the composer given us work of finer or more individual quality, in spite of the tenuity of his theme. Phrases of admirable breadth and beauty occur, and there is an amusing fugato of capital structure in the development section. When it is as familiar as the spirited "Cockaigne" and the beautiful "Variations," there is little doubt that it will rank as high as they.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Far more important than the March is the piece for strings. This showed that the composer can make his mark without the aid of a ponderous orchestra. It proved, indeed, that Sir Edward Elgar can produce from his strings surprisingly varied effects of colour, especially when, as yesterday, he has the advantage of a solo quartet. The work is made up of excellent material, and, simply as music, satisfies the connoisseur.

MORNING POST.

The second novelty, an Introduction and Allegro for strings, is an interesting and extremely ingenious work. A solo quartet is employed in the most effective manner, in addition to the strings of the orchestra, and the piece is elaborated in a masterly fashion.

DAILY NEWS.

It is an old idea made new, and the contrast of the quartet with the full orchestra of strings has the happiest effect. A theme in the Welsh idiom gives a special character to the work, and it is finely worked up in the Coda. The elaborate fugato section which takes the place of the ordinary development is full of energy and interest, and the whole work is one of the most powerful the composer has yet written for the orchestra.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

It was an Introduction and Allegro in G for orchestra and string quartet, and was received with hearty enthusiasm by the crowded audience. It is based on a melody written in the Welsh style, which Sir Edward, with his customary skill, twists and turns with remarkable facility, and a fugato is introduced with striking effect before the composition closes with the tune played forte by the whole orchestra. This, deservedly, will become popular, for the instrumentation shows Elgar at his best.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The resourcefulness of the composer is well shown by the series of contrasts he obtains, and a remarkable section is a fugato elaborately worked, and busily employing the entire strings. The work, indeed, is distinctly original in conception and treatment, and doubtless will become popular, for on a first hearing the naïve little Welsh tune sticks in the memory, and the entire composition is of that kind which excites greater esteem with familiarity.

GLOBE.

The idea has been very happily carried out, and the music contains a great deal that is both charming and effective, while it is almost unnecessary to say that it is admirably written, for Sir Edward Elgar is a master of his art.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

Sir Edward has here adopted with excellent results an orchestral disposition of the kind that Handel approved. This, without being designed on the grand scale, is a very pleasant, grateful piece of music. . . . I will venture to say that while the Allegro (especially the animated fugato), is fully as clever as everything of Elgar's must be, it has considerable charm and is not superficial.

PALL MAIL GAZETTE.]

Excited to the point of creativeness, as the great musician lets us know, by Welsh scenery and Welsh idiom, the thought of this composition gradually, even with great slowness, surged into his mind. It was in the valley of the Wye, that strange river of dreams, that he finally brought his work to practical issue; and singularly beautiful that work is. We have indicated that the composer regards the work practically as a quartet; but if the orchestra is to be regarded as an essential element in the matter, the term should be changed to something more fairly descriptive. This, however, is a matter of detail, and it only has to be recorded that Elgar's dramatic sense is here in its most highly developed stage, and that the influence of a particular mood is expressed by him with such absolute truth and beauty that one likes to think of him as the English musician of to-day, who never published a bar which is dictated by insincerity of thought.

SIX OCTAVE STUDIES FOR THE PIANOFORTE BY WILLEM COENEN.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

"The musical value of some of the pieces is not inconsiderable."—The Times.

"Must needs prove most useful, and are not at all dry."—Daily Telegraph.

"The studies are quite as entertaining to the listener as they are serviceable to the performer."—Musical Opinion.

"Six clever and useful 'Octave Studies.' They are more than usually interesting."—Musical Standard.

"Excellent for practice."—Christian World.

"They afford a very complete course of study. The different numbers are tuneful and attractive, and the variety is great."—The Lady.

"Almost every branch of octave-playing is represented in these tuneful studies."—Church Bells.

"These studies are very melodious, and will make the irksome study of octaves quite interesting to the hard-working student."—Church Family Newspaper.

"Admirably adapted to formulate touch as well as style in this special branch of pianoforte technique."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Fitted for advanced students. For wrist work No. 2 is excellent, and No. 6 is good enough for a concert piece. In all there is pretty equal work for both hands."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Six excellent octave studies (legato and staccato)."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

"Can safely be recommended to players who possess the laudable ambition of keeping up their technique."—Western Daily Press.

SCARLATTI:
HIS LIFE AND WORKS

BY

EDWARD J. DENT,

FELLOW OF KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

WITH PORTRAIT OF SCARLATTI.

Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

THE TIMES.

"Mr. Dent has done his work so thoroughly that English students may well be proud of the fact that their country has produced a book of this kind, which cannot fail to be generally accepted as the authority on Scarlatti. The style of the book is strong and unaffected, concise and direct. As we began by saying, it is one upon which the author and the publisher may well be congratulated. It is worthy to stand beside any German or French work of the kind."

- PALL MALL GAZETTE.

"A much-needed biography in a field where there are no special or notable predecessors. This book should bring Scarlatti back to a well-deserved prominence."

Of the Royal Choral Society, Queen's Hall Symphony and Promenade Concerts, Alexandra Palace, Crystal Palace Concerts, Glasgow Choral Union, Belfast Philharmonic Society, &c.

"DREAM OF GERONTIUS."

GLASGOW CHORAL UNION, February 7, 1905.

Soloists: MISS MARIE BREMA, MR. JOHN COATES, and MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL.

"The soloists of last night did much for the performance. . . . The strong telling voice of Mr. Montague Borwell came out well against the chorus in the priestly music of the first part, and as the Angel of the Agony, he was also eminently satisfactory."—Glasgow Herald, February 8, 1905.

"Mr. Borwell gave a good account of himself in the dramatic music of the Priest, and the Angel of the Agony."—Scotsman, February 8, 1905.

"Mr. Montague Borwell, who hails from Westminster Abbey, delivered the words of the Priest with much force and feeling."—Glasgow Evening Citizen.

"Mr. Montague Borwell delivered effectively the bass solos, as the Priest in the first part, and the Angel of the Agony in the second."—Glasgow Daily Record.

"Madame Marie Brema, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Montague Borwell merit great praise for a studied and eloquent performance of the oratorio."—Glasgow Evening News.

BELFAST PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

OCTOBER 14, 1904.

Artists: Madame SUZANNE ADAMS, Herr KREISLER, and MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL.

"Mr. Montague Borwell, who is a baritone of exceptional merit, was also accorded a very favourable reception. He had chosen high-class songs, markedly in contradistinction to the ballad music which usually forms the principal feature of miscellaneous concerts, and all his contributions proved most acceptable. He first sang three of Rubinstein's delightful songs, which airy and trifling as they may be, gave him an opportunity of showing his splendid command of expression: (a) 'The dewdrops shine,' (b) 'The Azra,' and (c) 'The Woodwitch.' Later on, Schubert's dramatic song, 'The Erl King,' found in Mr. Borwell a most efficient exponent, and its spirited character was splendidly manifested. There naturally followed an undeniable encore."—Belfast News Letter, October 15, 1904.

"Mr. Montague Borwell, a very promising baritone, whom I heard sing last year in the 'Elijah' with great distinction, made a most favourable impression on Friday evening. His items deserve, from a musical point of view, very hearty commendation. Schubert's 'Erl King' and three songs by Rubinstein, 'The dewdrops shine,' 'The Azra,' and 'The Woodwitch,' of which the second is a gem, pleased the audience. 'The Erl King' went magnificently, and 'The Azra,' a setting of a wonderful poem by Heine, had quite an electrical effect—that significant close was fully realized. Mr. Borwell's voice is exceptionally clear for a baritone, clearer, in fact, than most tenors. He uses it with great judgment and ease, and where contrast in tone quality was demanded, as in the 'Erl King,' where the three actors' voices are heard in succession, this was most tastefully accomplished, and with all due reticence. He had a good reception."—Belfast Evening Telegraph.

A HANDBOOK

OF

EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Durham; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE FIFTH EDITION.

In his preface to the revised edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music issued in 1898 the author was indebted to the kindness of Sir L. J. Grant, Bart., B.A., Professor Niecks, Mus. Doc., E. J. Chadfield, Esq., and C. K. Hodgson, Esq., B.A., for the use of the Edinburgh Mus. Bac. Papers, the Literary and Theoretical Papers for candidates in practical subjects for the Professional Grade Examinations of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Optional Music Paper set for the Diploma Examinations of the College of Preceptors. In the 1901 edition he was, through the kindness of Dr. Henry Hiles, enabled to include the Mus. Doc. Papers of the Victoria University, and now, with the issue of the fifth edition of the work, he again desires to express his most sincere obligations to E. J. Chadfield, Esq., for permission to use a selection of the papers of the revised scheme of Local Examination of the Incorporated Society of Musicians; to F. W. Renaud, Esq., for the use of the new papers on Form and Pupil Treatment required of all candidates for the I.R.A.M. Diploma in Pianoforte Playing; to Dr. E. H. Turpin for the use of the new Rudiments of Music paper, and those set on the Art of Teaching for the Higher Theoretical and Practical Examinations of Trinity College (London); and to Dr. H. Frank Heath for permission to give some information regarding the new University of London Examination Scheme.

DURHAM CATHEDRAL.

Grey towers of Durham!

*Well yet I love thy mix'd and massive piles,
Half church of God, half castle 'gainst the Scot,
And long to roam these venerable aisles,
With records stored of deeds long since forgot;*

To ransack every crypt and hallow'd spot.

SIR WALTER SCOTT.

Among all our English cathedrals Durham is unrivalled. No mother-church is more magnificently situated than this stately sanctuary. The solemnity of its Norman architecture, the beauty of its Galilee and Chapel of the Nine Altars, its majestic site, and its romantic history are so correlated as to fully justify the application of the term 'unrivalled' in treating of this glorious temple.

The cathedral owes its origin to the great Northern prelate Saint Cuthbert, who died in his cell at the great Farne in the year A.D. 687. His body —said to have remained in a state of incorruption —was taken from Holy Island in 875, in consequence of the Scandinavian invasion; and, after being carried about by the monks for eight years, was brought by them, in 883, to Chester-le-Street. There the body remained for some hundred years until, in 995, it finally rested at Dunholme, the old name for Durham. There is a legend to the effect that Dunholme was 'revealed' to the monks as the permanent resting-place for the saint's remains, but such a place was unknown to them. However, they overheard a woman, who had lost her dun cow, being directed to look for it at Dunholme, and thither they eventually arrived with their burden. This old legend of the 'Dun Cow' is commemorated in a piece of sculpture placed at the north end of the Nine Altars (see the illustration on page 298). Another interpretation of the subject, as here pictorially set forth, is that it represents the riches of the cathedral in accordance with the old saying, 'The Dun Cow's milk makes the Prebends' wives go all in silk.'

Whatever shortcomings old-time monks may have had, they showed wonderful shrewdness in selecting pleasant places for their habitations. Durham is no exception. 'Half church, half castle 'gainst the Scot,' says the great Wizard of the North, the reference being to the noble buildings which crown the Wear at Durham, where the horse-shoe bend of the river almost surrounds the Cathedral and Castle and gives them an impregnable position. Before treating of the cathedral brief reference may be made to the castle, which was built by William the Conqueror while on his way from Scotland in the year 1072. The crypt chapel is an excellent specimen of the earliest kind of Norman work, and Bishop Pudsey's doorway is a rich and beautiful example of late Norman; moreover, this doorway is in splendid condition, every detail of the fine carving having been preserved by an encasement of plaster now removed. The present chapel, built in the first half of the 16th century, contains the choir-organ case and a part of the instrument erected by Father Smith in the cathedral. Such fine features as the Black Staircase, — with its handsome carving, — the noble dining-hall, the Norman gallery, and the spacious kitchen, all bear testimony to the regal grandeur attending the centre of the Palatinate government. The buildings, including the keep, have now become the property of the University of Durham. This seat of learning—discussed in the reign of Henry VIII. and founded by Oliver Cromwell (who gave a charter), but not consummated till 1837—is well known to musicians who seek a University degree. The first examination in music was held in 1890, when 81 candidates presented themselves in order to obtain the Bachelor's degree. In 1897 the charter was altered, and Dr. Philip Armes, organist of the cathedral, appointed Professor of Music, an office he worthily holds and in which he has won confidence and esteem.

Let us now turn to the centre of attraction in Durham, the cathedral, which was begun by William of Saint Carleph, who became bishop of the diocese in 1081. When the body of St. Cuthbert arrived at Durham (in 995) it first rested in a wooden building and was then transferred to a stone church which Bishop Aldhun had completed in 999. No trace above ground of this Saxon sanctuary remains. The foundation stone of the present cathedral was laid on August 11, 1093. Bishop Carleph did not live to see the completion of his noble design, but the whole of the choir and up to the second compartment of the nave—including the lofty piers and arches which carry the central tower—were finished before his death. The monks continued the work of building during the three years' vacancy of the See, so that when Flambard was appointed bishop in 1099 he found the church finished as far as the nave. About thirty years later Carleph's design was carried out in its entirety, the Galilee and Chapel of the Nine Altars being subsequent additions to the main building. The accompanying photographs of the choir and nave show the grand Norman work better than could any written description; but attention may be called to the massive pillars forming the half-bays of the nave, and more especially to the zig-zag and other patterns of the piers which form so striking a feature of this cathedral, features that are rare in Norman work. Originally, the church had an apsidal termination at its east end; but between the years 1242 and 1280 the glories of Durham were enriched by the noble specimen of 13th century architecture known as the chapel of the Nine Altars, so named on account of its having formerly contained that number, one placed under each of the east windows. This most beautiful eastern appendage to the main edifice is one of the gems of the cathedral, and presents one of the finest specimens of the Early English style, its graceful outlines forming a fitting contrast to the more severe Norman style of the choir and nave. (Illustration on p. 304.)

No less fascinating than the chapel of the Nine Altars is a corresponding addition at the west end of the cathedral, the Galilee. Bishop Pudsey intended to build a Lady chapel at the east end; 'but,' as Canon Greenwell tells us, 'St. Cuthbert is said to have had a more than usual monastic dislike to women, and therefore, to have built the Lady chapel at the east end of the choir, the ordinary position and close to his shrine, would have been most distasteful to him. No woman, indeed, was allowed to approach further eastward in the church than a line of dark-coloured Frosterley marble, which stretches across the nave between the piers just west of the north and south doors.' Again: 'The name Galilee was given to that place in the church where the Sunday procession ended, being the last station made where the priest, who preceded the monks, stood to sprinkle the holy water. The place was so called from the disciples being told that the Lord would "go before them into Galilee." Pudsey ultimately carried out his design in about the year 1175, on being told that that iconoclastic architect, James Wyatt, unrestrained by Deans and Chapters of former days, actually wanted to make a carriage drive through this Galilee chapel! Fortunately he was prevented at the eleventh hour from doing so, when the Galilee was built. In this chapel were placed, in 1370, the bones of the Venerable Bede, on whose tomb is engraved this inscription:

THE CHOIR, LOOKING WEST.

HAC SUNT IN FOSSA BEDÆ VENERABILIS OSSA.

In viewing this beautiful example of Transitional work (see the illustration on page 303) one shudders or this vandalism would have furnished another instance of his destructive propensities.

Durham yields such a wealth of architectural interest that much might be written about the various parts of so supremely beautiful a structure. The 12th century Chapter House — largely destroyed in 1796, but restored in 1895 as a memorial to Bishop Lightfoot; the cloisters (completed about 1418); and the central tower, which forms so conspicuous a landmark, finished at the close of the 15th century—all these are features that fitly harmonize with the older work and add to the attractiveness of Carileph's original design.

A visit to the Library with Canon Greenwell, the cathedral librarian, as cicerone, is a pleasant experience. A most enthusiastic, accurate, and learned antiquary, Canon Greenwell has been officially connected with the cathedral since 1854, and, in spite of his eighty-five years, no one could be more keenly interested in everything appertaining to the building or its treasures. One room of the Library, formerly the dormitory of the monastery, is a noble apartment 194 ft. long and 41 ft. wide. It still retains its original solid and massive roof of oak trunks barely touched by the adze (see p. 306). In the centre of the room is a glass case containing St. Cuthbert's coffin, discovered in 1827 when the remains were disinterred. At that time the coffin was in pieces, which were thrown together in a box. But Canon Greenwell, with exemplary patience and after three separate attempts at intervals of some years, at last succeeded in making the lid, sides and ends of the coffin almost perfect. With the exception of Egyptian coffins it is one of the oldest which still exist. The carving on all parts of it is very remarkable, as the reader will judge from the photograph of the lid which, through the kindness of Canon Greenwell, we are enabled to give on page 297. The figures are those of Our Lord, and of the symbols of the Evangelists—St. Matthew, St. Mark, St. Luke, and St. John. But for Canon Greenwell and his patient perseverance this 7th century coffin and its old-world carving would sooner or later have been destroyed. In addition to the well-filled bookcases ranged on each side of the room we here find a valuable series of sculptured stones—Roman altars, memorial crosses, covers of graves, and decorative work of pre-Conquest date, some of the specimens being of great beauty and intense interest. Two massive tables and forms, originally in the Prior's hall, help to remind one of ancient times in the place where the monks slept and pursued their studies. Other treasures of the Library are located in another room, the old refectory, or frater-house, situated on the south side of the cloisters.

A library of some sort was no doubt part of the original establishment of the Congregation of St. Cuthbert at Durham. Anyhow, in the 11th century, Bishop Carileph gave several books, still preserved in the manuscript closet, to the monastery. Bishop Pudsey (1153—1195), a nephew of King Stephen, added others, among which, with several more of equal beauty, is a magnificent copy of the Bible in four noble volumes, richly illuminated, but sadly shorn of their glory by numerous pictures having been cut out. The binding is contemporary, of stamped leather, excellent in design and execution. The Library possesses five other similar bindings which were included in Pudsey's gifts. It is also rich in early 15th century bindings; among them being two volumes bound by Theodore Rood at Oxford, one of which encases a book printed by him at the same place.

If the Library is not rich in rare printed books, no cathedral can compare with Durham in its manuscript treasures. With other Saxon MSS. there are two copies of the Gospels of the 7th century, one equal in fineness of writing and illumination to the celebrated Lindisfarne Gospels now in the British Museum, and like it no doubt written at Lindisfarne; and another, which has been attributed to Bede, but without foundation. The manuscripts comprise numerous copies of the Bible and parts of it, many of the highest merit, especially a copy of St. Paul's Epistles of 12th century date and a Psalter of the 13th century.

Through the kindness of Canon Greenwell we are enabled to give a facsimile specimen of the illumination in this 13th century Psalter. It forms the beginning of Psalm lxxxi., 'Sing we merrily unto God our strength.' This illustration, reproduced the full size of the original, speaks for itself. There are also many books of the Church Fathers, and commentaries, books on canon and other law, historical works, and even French metrical romances. In regard to the music library mention must be made of some organ books of anthems, circa 1620-80, the music of which is written on six lines and is unbarred.

In the Old Library (the refectory) are the relics found in St. Cuthbert's grave, including a gold pectoral cross and a portable altar, both probably once used by St. Cuthbert, and a stole and maniple of early 10th century manufacture, of the finest design and execution, given by King Athelstan to the Saint, and a comb of ivory. In the same case are three gold rings found in the graves of Bishops Flambard, Geoffrey Rufus, and William de St. Barbara, and the head of the crosier of Flambard.

Durham Cathedral is by no means lacking in musical interest. As early as the year 1264 we find that Hugo Derlington, the fourteenth prior of Durham, made 'magnum campanile, organa grandiora.' Three hundred years later there is a quaint record in 'The Rites of Durham', circa 1593, under the heading 'The Quire—the Organs':

There was 3 paire of organs belonging to the said quire for maintenance of gods service, and the better selebratinge thereof one of the fairest paire of the 3 did stand over the quire dore only opened and playd upon at principall feastes, the pipes beinge all of most fine

The use of different organs for different days is curious. The 'faire paire of large organs called the cryers' may have been so designated because of their shrill tones. In a will of 1467 is mentioned 'a small belle called a cryer.' From another account we learn that 'the third paire of Organs were called the White Organs, they were placed on ye South side of the Quire towards ye Vestry house, and were most, and indeed dayly, used at ordinary service, in the times of Queen Elisabeth and K. James I. The said two Organs, to wit those on the North side, and the great one in the Middle over the Quire door, were taken down in Dean Hunt's

The second paire stood on the north side of the quire beinge neuer played upon but when the 4 doctors of the church was read, viz., Augustine Ambrose Gregorie and Jerome beinge a faire paire of large organs called the cryers.

The third paire was dayly used at ordinary seruices.

time, about ann: 1620 when another great Organ was made, and was finished in the latter end of anno 1621, & placed over the Quire door. And the said White Organs stood untaken down, and James Smart heard them played on ano. 1635 and 1636, and the cases of the said White Organ and also of the great Organ remained in the Church till 1641. In that year the Scots fell on and broke them [the organs] and tore up all the great Keys of ye great Organs.'

During the episcopate of Bishop Cosin 'a pair of little organs that cost towards 80 pound, that came from London' were placed on the south side of the cathedral 'in a little loft towards the vestry' and set up in June and July, 1661. To quote further from the records:

There were a pair of great Organs for wch a bargain was made by Dean Barwick: they were begun in his time, and after finished in Dean Sudbury's time against Christmasse 1662, but were not played on on Christmasse day, but the said little Organs were played on; at which Dean Sudbury was angry, but after on St. Stephens Day the said Great Organs were first played on by Mr. John Forster Organist & so continued to be played on.

This instrument was built by George Dallam 'of the parish of St. Andrew in the Wardrobe London the Temple Church.—between Father Smith and Thomas and Renatus Harris (father and son) for the building of a new organ in Durham Cathedral. The order was given to Father Smith in August, 1683, he having undertaken to build 'a good perfect tuneable and harmonious great organ and chair organ with a case of good sound and substantiall oake wood' for the sum of £700, plus the old instrument erected by Dallam. Renatus Harris also submitted a specification which contained (in the great organ scheme) 'one natural vox humain, wch stop when played on in the bases will a peare like a man's natural voice, and in the middle and uper parts like women and boys singing.' Harris's estimate was £670 and the old organ against Father Smith's of £700. Accompanying his specification Harris sent the following rather pathetic letter:

Mr. Dean,

I formerly understood by my ffather that he was in great probality of havinge the honour to serve yor Worship and the Chapter about mak'ing a new organ for y^r Chathedral, But latly I understand you have been diswaied from him and importun'd to employ an other who doubtless is a very good Artist, But understanding from my Lord of St. David's elect (by whose order I send the inclos'd moddel and proposalls) that no agreement as yet is made which hath occasion'd me to implore y^r favor in my poore aged ffathers behalfe being assur'd he would manifest his thanks by his performance, who I know would be prow'd as well as glad of the advantage to crown his experience and labour in making his last master piece in so antient and noble a Chathedral and in the servis of such honorable and Reverend masters, And that it may not be objected because of his age the hasard of his liveing to finish so considerable a work, I humbly offer to become his partner and assistant in it and to make good all he shall undertake in your servis, What more I have to desire is that yor Worship will be pleas'd after you have perus'd these proposalls and draft and compar'd them with Mr. Smith's proposalls and moddel not to shew them to our disadvantage.

Sr havinge so much trespas'd on yor goodness and patince, I beg leave to subscrib my selfe Reverend Sr yor most dutiful Servant

RENATUS HARRIS

from Snowhill

30th Aug. 83 [1683.]

Two quaint letters of Father Smith must be quoted verbatim et literatim. The 'Mr. Wilson' to whom they are addressed was then Registrar to the Dean and Chapter of Durham:

Suffolk Street, the 12 of Nove. 1686.

Mr. Wilson,

I cam save hom last Saturday, out of the contree, wher I found your kind letter and the bill in closet [enclosed], wher for I give you humble thanck for your kens [? constant] and grat kindness, which I all wayes knolleg.

I have receeved the hondert and fifty pound yesterday. I shall be all wayes ready to serve you and yours when so ever it may be your pleasur. As for the organ I have mad for your Catedrall Church, I know it is so good and sound mad as anny is in the holl worrelt. I must confes I have out gon the pris, for this I declare that it cost mee a bove a thoussent pound, lett anny boddly think or say what the plees. For carving and painting I have been too curious, in which I could have saver tree part in for, and no bodd should have found fault with it: but what I have don, I have don for the honner of Mr. [sic] Lord and the Dean and Chapter. In ded I was adviset by some gentelman to have it don Organ Maker.' In his agreement with the Dean and Chapter, Dallam calls it 'one fare double organ' to cost 'ffive hundred and ffifty pounds.' On the day that the agreement with Dallam was ratified—i.e., on October 5, 1661, just after the Restoration—the Chapter passed a minute to excuse themselves from the measure of hospitality expected of them upon this first return after so long exile from the church, on the ground of the many and great expenses that they had to meet at that time, among which is mentioned the organ, and 'bringing the Water in pipes of Lead eight hundred and more yeardes,' &c.

Only twenty-two years after George Dallam had placed his organ there was a great contest—as at so good as could bee, for the will chorn [scorn] to see mee a looser, aldo the contrack be other wayes, and so I have don also in the organ, for ferriety of stopes and quarter nots, that no organ has but yours and in the Temple that I made.

Sir, I pray you to consider thos thing. It would be hard to tak all that keer and pains and be a looser. It is more esier for menny then it gose over one. The littell cher [choir] organ went to York. I have got twenty pound, and that is all, for I have sent ther fore new stopes of pipes, which anny man would have paid mee in London treechor [three score] pound for it, and the setting op cost twenty pound, so there is left twenty pound: that is all, so that is not word a man's whill. As for the grat organ, I will sell at anny rate as it is, for to mak it a good organ will cost monnes.

The second letter, which gives us the location of Father Smith's 'hous' in London, speaks for itself:

Suffolck Street, the 20 of Decemb. 1687.

Mr. Wilson,

I have received yours the 16, which is datet the 6 of this, wherin I find that the Dean and Chapter has orderet me 50*l.* which has ben dew a grat whill sins. I did ex speckt an other kind of sum. Noboddy in the worrelt can think that it is paintet for that summe, and besides the quantity of more worck then there was a greed fore. As for my part there is noby that worckes for mee but I pay honnestly for. How ever, lett it be what it will I desire of your favior and kindnes to sent mee this 50*l.* and the 5 guinnes, in a bill of exchange,

I beg your pardon to give you this truble to say so much, only when I will consider the pains I have taken, it dus not bare the truble of it, but I hope the Dean and Chapter will not see mee a looser. Sir, your kindnes may doe a grat deal in it. So I conclud, with my and my wife's hartely love and humble servis to you and yours, from your humble servand to commande,

BER. SMITH.

Pray, Sir, my humble duty and servis to Mr. Dean and the rest of his brederen. Particular my master Morton.

From this letter we may judge that Father Smith did not form a very high opinion of Dallam's work, as, he says, 'to mak it a good organ will cost monnes.' The amorous message from 'Mother' Smith which forms the coda to her lord and master's epistle is distinctly amusing.

with kear. I shall tak it tor a grat favor, and I shall be always ready to serve you in anny thing that lyes in power. In so doing you will verre much obleg how [?] who] is your faitfull friend and humble servand to command,

BER. SMITH.

My hous is over again the Cock, in Suffolck Stret, near Chering Crosse.

The fine instrument built by Father Smith was an F organ with quarter notes, as in the Temple Church. Its case was a grand and stately work, as it stood on the choir screen, surmounted by huge mitres and the arms and supporters of Bishop Crewe. The pipes were richly decorated with scroll-work, cherubs, and heraldic devices. In 1747 a swell organ was added by its inventor,

Abraham Jordan. On January 15, 1749, the Dean and Chapter

Agreed to have the Organ New Painted, Silver'd & Lacker'd. And that Smales the lame Boy be Employed under the Direction of Mr. Taylor to do the Same, Mr. Taylor Undertaking to gett all the Materials for the Workmanship at a Sume not exceeding Twenty pounds, and the Said Smales Undertaking to do the Work in a compleat manner for the further Sume of Twenty pounds.

It was long the custom to wash Father Smith's pipes with strong ale once a year, as this gave them the appearance of having been varnished. In 1847 the instrument was unfortunately removed from the screen, its true position, to the arch in the Choir where Bishop Lightfoot's tomb now is. Father Smith's organ became in course of time unserviceable, and a new instrument was erected by Father Willis in 1876 and placed on each side of the Choir, the keyboards being on the south side,

The choir consists of ten lay clerks and twenty choristers. Durham has always been famous for its singing men, not a few of whom have come from Yorkshire, and they can point to long records of service. The full score of choristers are town boys, except six, who live with the headmaster of the choir school. In olden times there was a Choir School 'within the church,' of which the following is a description taken from Patrick Sanderson's 'The Antiquities of the Abbey, or Cathedral Church of Durham':

In the centry-earth (the cemetery) under the south end of the nine altars, betwixt two pillars adjoining to the nine altars door, was a song-school, erected for the teaching of six children to sing, for the maintenance of God's service in the Abbey Church, who had their meat and drink among the children of the Almerly, at the expence of the house. This school was built with the church, and was neatly wainscotted within, round about, two yards high, and had a desk from one end of the school to the other to lay their books on. The floor was boarded for warmness, and round about it long forms were fastened in the ground for the children to sit on, and the place where the master sat and taught was all close boarded for warmth. His office was to teach the six children to sing, and play on the organs every principal day, when the monks sang their high mass, and at even-song ; but when the monks were at mattens, and service at midnight, one of them played on the organs himself, and none else. The master had his absence, the precentor shall appoint one of the minor canons, or singing-men who understands playing on the organ, to do that office. If the master is negligent of the boys' health or education, after a third admonition to be removed. He shall likewise be sworn to perform his duty.

Under Statute xxxi. 'Of the Commons' the monthly allowance to the master of the choristers was 6s.; to each singing man 4s. 8d.; and to each chorister 3s. 4d. In regard to 'Vestments, commonly called Liveries,' Statute xxxii. stated that 'All shall use an upper vestment of the same colour.' The minor canons and the master of the choristers were each allowed 3 yards of cloth at 5s. per yard, and each chorister 2½ yards at 3s. 4d. It should not be forgotten that the Rev. Dr. J. B. Dykes held a minor canonry at Durham from 1849 to 1876, the year of his death, and that he composed some of his most popular tunes for the Sunday evening services held in the Galilee chapel. Dr. Dykes was also precentor of the cathedral from 1849 to 1862, an office which is now ably held by the Rev. V. K. Cooper, M.A.

The roll of organists of Durham Cathedral begins with the name of John Brimley (or Brimleis), who held office from 1557 to 1576. It is recorded that 'masse was song daly by y^e m^r of the song schole cauled Mr. John Brimley, wth certaine deacons & quiristers, the m^r playing vpō a paire of faire orgaines.' In one of the old music-books in the cathedral is a MS. headed 'Mr. Brimley his Kerrie,' followed by a Credo. 'The last of the masters of the old time,' Brimley died in 1576, and is buried in the Galilee chapel; his tombstone bears the following epitaph:

JOHN BRIMLEIS BODY HERE DOITH LY
WHO PRAYSED GOD WITH HAND AND VOICE
BY MUSICKES HEAVENLIE HARMONIE
DYLL MYNDES HE MAID IN GOD REIOICE
HIS SOVL INTO THE HEAVENES IS LYFT TO PRAYSE HIM STILL THAT GAVE THE GYFT.
OBIIT AÐ DNI 1576. OCTO. 13.

The five successors of Brimley were Messrs. Brown and Smith (of which there were two each) and a Mr. Dodson. William Smythe (one of the two Smiths above referred to) was also a minor canon (petticanon), judging from the following quaint letter written by him in the year 1589 and preserved in the cathedral archives:

Mr. Richard Hutchinson held the office of 'chief musician' from 1614 to 1646. This gentleman enjoyed a high reputation as an organist—'præ-excellens fuit Organista,' but his conduct was not above reproach. The Chapter Acts record that 'In regard of Richard Hutchinsons frequent hanting of Aile houses and diuers other his evill demeanors, And especially for the breaking of the head of Toby Broking one of the singing men of this Church wth a Candlestick in An Ailehouse, wounding him verie dangerously, he was reprimanded by the Dean and warned to expect expulsion if he did not amend.' This serious reprimand occurred on the 1st of April, 1628, and on May 7 following 'Henry Palmer was appointed as his [Hutchinson's] deputy for the tuition of the choristers; but he is still to be ready by himself or his deputy to teach them to play on the virginals or organs on certain days.' The Chapter 'pardoned' him a debt of £10, and this 'famous organist dyed on Sunday June ye 7th, 1646.'

John Foster and Alexander Shaw, organists after the Restoration, need not detain us; but the Chapter Acts contain an interesting reference to Mr. William Greggs, organist from 1682 to 1710. The entry reads: 'It was agreed by the Chapter on 1st Dec., 1686, that Mr. Greggs the Organist have leave for three months to goe to London to improve himselfe in the Skill of Musicke.' His remains are interred in the church of St. Mary's in the South Bailey (of which Canon Greenwell is the rector), his monument bearing this inscription:

Here Lieth ye Body of MR. WILLIAM GREGGS late Organist of ye Cathedral Church at Durban who died ye 15th day of October 1710 in ye 48 year of his Age was son of Jo. Greggs gent. of York & Sufferer for K. C. I.

James Heseltine, a pupil of Dr. Blow, succeeded Mr. Greggs. Appointed at the early age of nineteen, he held the post for fifty-three years, and was buried in the Galilee chapel. The bearer of a familiar name in church music, Thomas Ebdon, was the next organist—from 1763 to 1811, a period of forty-eight years. Ebdon was a native of Durham and a chorister in the cathedral; one of his pupils, also a native of the city and a chorister there, was Ralph Banks, organist of Rochester Cathedral from 1790 to 1841. Charles Clarke (who soon went to Worcester) and William Henshaw (who held the office nearly fifty years) bring us to more recent times.

The present organist and master of the choristers of the cathedral is Dr. Philip Armes, M.A., and Professor of Music in the University of Durham. As a detailed biography of him appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of February, 1900, a very brief the oratorios 'Hezekiah,' 'St. John the Evangelist,' 'St. Barnabas,' much church music, and a prize madrigal, 'Victoria,' have to be placed to the credit of his creative account. A man who never knows what it is to be ill, the possessor of boundless energy—he can walk sixteen miles per diem quite easily—and bubbling over with youthful spirits, Dr. Armes is one of the most genial of men. He has an able assistant (officially appointed in 1903 by the Dean and Chapter) in the person of one of his former pupils, Mr. William Ellis, Mus.B., recently organist of Richmond Parish Church, Yorkshire, who shares with Dr. Armes the important duties of organist at the cathedral. In the year 1634 a party of three military officers visited several English cathedrals. One of them thus records his impressions of the music at Durham: 'Away then wee were call'd to Prayers, where wee were rapt wth the sweet sound, & richnesse of a fayre Organ, wch cost 2000*l*, and the orderly, deuout, and melodious Harmony of the Quiristers.' The 'melodious Harmony' traditions of nearly three centuries ago are well maintained to-day in the stately fane which crowns the Wear.

For much valuable help rendered in the preparation of this article—which might have been considerably extended but for the exigencies of space—the writer is greatly indebted to the kindness of the Rev. Canon Greenwell, D.C.L., M.A., F.R.S., F.S.A., the learned librarian and historian of the cathedral; to Dr. Armes, organist and master of the choristers; to the erudite editorial work of the Rev. Canon J. T. Fowler as shown in various volumes of the Surtees Society; to Mr. Freeman, the well-informed and obliging verger of the cathedral; and to Mr. John R. Edis, of Durham, for his exceptionally good photographs.

DOTTED CROTCHET.

MISS ADA CROSSLEY.

A trio of queens of song has to be placed to the credit of the Colonies. Madame Albani, Madame Melba, and Miss Ada Crossley not only have every claim to distinction, but they are all daughters of Britain beyond the Seas. Canada has every good reason to be proud of Madame Albani, while Madame Melba and the subject of this biographical sketch add to the artistic import of the great Commonwealth of Australia.

Miss Ada Jessica Crossley (now Mrs. Muecke) was born on March 3, 1874, at Tarraville (not Farraville, as has been stated), a little village 'in the bush,' three miles from Alberton, South Gippsland, Victoria, and 141 miles south-east of Melbourne. Her father, the late Mr. Edwards Wallis Crossley, went out to Australia from Wellingborough, Northamptonshire, about fifty years ago, attracted by 'the gold rush'; her mother was a member of the poet Cowper's family. 'I began music at the age of seven,' Miss Crossley tells us, 'though the coon song was earlier. My sister Eva was the champion pianoforte pupil of Mrs. Hastings, of Port Albert, the professional of the district, and outline of his career may now suffice. Born at Norwich on August 15, 1836, he was a chorister at the cathedral there (under the famous Dr. Buck) and at Rochester. His previous organistships have been Trinity Church, Milton, Gravesend (salary £25); St. Andrew's, Wells Street, London (1857 to 1861); and Chichester Cathedral. On November 14, 1862, he was appointed organist of Durham Cathedral, therefore he has already maintained the long-reign traditions of the place. His work as Professor at the University is too well-known and appreciated to be enlarged upon. As a viola player, lecturer, and examiner for musical degrees at Oxford University and other irons in the fire (always well heated), Dr. Armes has 'put in' good work. In regard to composition

I also took lessons (in piano) of her. Between the ages of twelve and fifteen I regularly played the American organ and led the singing at the three churches in our village. My Sunday work consisted of Sunday School at 10 a.m., followed by the Church of England service, the Presbyterian Church service in the afternoon, and the Wesleyan in the evening.'

Miss Crossley then studied the pianoforte, to which she was greatly devoted, under Signor Alberto Zelman, at Melbourne. Thither she journeyed twice a week, upwards of 500 miles, for her lessons. Quite by accident Madame Fanny Simonsen—a teacher of singing of high repute at Melbourne—discovered that Ada Crossley, the would-be pianist, had a voice. The result of this discovery was that the Gippslander girl lived for two years in the house of Madame Simonsen—a teacher who lived for her art—and received three lessons per week. 'I learned from her,' relates Miss Crossley, 'all the foundation of tone-production. She took the head voice down, to avoid the break, and I am most grateful to her for all the help she gave me.' While residing at Melbourne, and in order to gain further experience, she sang for twelve months in the choir of St. George's Roman Catholic Cathedral, of which Mr. Alfred Plumpton was the musical director, and his wife, Madame Tasker, the organist. She subsequently became a professional member of the choir of the Australian (Presbyterian) Church, in Flinders Street, Melbourne, of which the Rev. Dr. Strong was the minister. But the young singer speedily became famous and in great demand, especially as an oratorio singer. Her first appearance (in 1890) at the Melbourne Philharmonic Society was an interesting one. At that concert 'Elijah' was performed, and the late Madame Patey, then on tour in the colony, took part. Ada Crossley was engaged to sing 'Woe unto them,' &c., while the great English contralto interpreted the chief solos assigned to that voice. At the end of the concert Madame Patey most kindly offered to give Miss Crossley some hints in singing 'O rest in the Lord.' How little did she think that the young Australian would become her successor as an exponent of oratorio music in England!

The year 1894 was an eventful one in Miss Crossley's life. She decided to come 'Home'—as all true Colonialists call the Mother Country—in order to gain the advantages of further study, and to 'try her luck' in England. She gave a series of farewell concerts, in which the 'bon voyage' wish was expressed in unmistakable tones of sincerity and goodwill amid scenes of the wildest enthusiasm. If the reader will turn to THE MUSICAL TIMES of June, 1894, he will find, on page 420, the following information:

SYDNEY, AUSTRALIA.—Prior to her departure for London, Miss Ada Crossley gave, on March 14, a farewell concert in the Town Hall. The favourite contralto was in her best voice, and gave abundant justification for the admiration and esteem which her singing has called forth. She was ably assisted by Miss Lilian Tree, Mr. Frank Adams, Mr. Hallewell, Mr. H. T. Gordon, Mr. H. Staell, Mr. M. H. Kowalski, and the members of the Liedertafel, conducted by Mr. J. A. Delany. During the performance Miss Crossley was presented by the Mayor with an illuminated address, wishing her a successful début in England.

'I was awfully pleased when I read that notice,' Miss Crossley says, 'and I said to myself, "to think that my name should appear in a London journal!"' Upon her arrival in England she studied oratorio under Mr. Santley, her 'artistic father,' for four months. When she sang to him 'O rest in the Lord,' at the slow speed which so many singers adopt, he set going the metronome at the speed indicated by Mendelssohn, and said that on one occasion he was singing in the oratorio when the contralto soloist sang the air at such a drawing pace that he should like 'to have taken the singer by her petticoats and thrown her at the audience.' After the valuable lessons received from the great baritone Miss Crossley studied for seven months under Madame Mathilde Marchesi, in Paris. 'A wonderful teacher,' she says, 'so thorough, and invaluable in such important matters as phrasing and finish.' Thus artistically equipped the Australian contralto made her first appearance in England at Queen's Hall, on May 18, 1895, the concert being a joint one with Miss Laura Burnham, an American soprano, and arranged by Mr. Daniel Mayer. Miss Crossley sang Beethoven's 'In questa tomba,' the 'Air du Sommeil' from Ambroise Thomas's little-known opera, 'Psyche,' and Schumann's fine song 'Waldesgespräch.' So instant and certain was her success that she at once received sufficient engagements to last the season. Thenceforward she went on from strength to strength in attaining and retaining a well-deserved place in the front rank of vocalists. Her first Festival engagement was at Sheffield, in 1896, the earliest of those far-famed music-makings. At Leeds two years later she had a curious experience. At the performance of 'Elijah' (in which she had not been set down to sing) the contralto soloist did not appear, owing to a mistake she had made as to the hour of the performance. 'Where's Ada Crossley?' anxiously asked Sir Arthur Sullivan, the conductor. 'Sitting in the audience,' was the reply. 'Fetch her up,' said Sullivan, and Miss Crossley, who knew 'Elijah' perfectly, came to the rescue and made her mark.

Queen Victoria took a great fancy to the subject of this sketch, who sang before her late Majesty three times in two years. 'This girl is an artist,' remarked the Queen to the Empress Frederick, after Miss Crossley had sung 'Caro mio ben' at Balmoral. The Queen inquired about the singer's parentage and early life, and so wonderful was her Majesty's memory, that on a subsequent occasion she inquired about the health, then precarious, of Miss Crossley's father. It was during the dark days of the South African war that, in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, the dear old Queen listened to a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' and when Miss Crossley sang 'O rest in the Lord,' the revered and venerable Monarch wept tears of genuine and heart-touched emotion.

The visit, in 1904, of Miss Crossley to her native land was in the nature of a royal progress. Governors, Mayors, Corporations, and other public bodies rendered their tribute of homage to one of whom they were naturally proud. At her farewell concert at Melbourne no fewer than 20,000 were present in the Exhibition building. At Bairnsdale, near the village in which she was born, she entered the town in a bullock waggon, turned for the nonce into a richly decorated floral chariot and drawn by eighteen bullocks. Among the many tokens of appreciation she received, not the least interesting was a jewel presented by the ladies of Sale, Gippsland. The basis of the jewel comprises four boomerangs, on which are mounted a laughing jackass with a snake in its mouth, a native bear, a kangaroo, and an emu, all these animals being in solid gold and having ruby eyes; in the centre a swan (the seal of the borough) set in pearls and rubies; this zoological group (excluding the seal) is surrounded by the Southern Cross set in diamonds, and bears at the foot the inscription 'Advance Australia.' This unique and pretty gift, as typical of the bush as possible, can be used either as a pendant, a brooch, or a hair ornament. The musicians of Sydney presented an illuminated address, while those of Melbourne hit upon the happy idea of giving their fellow-countrywoman a representation of the native lyre-bird (Menura superba) in the form of a diamond ornament. The address presented by the people of Alberton, in the region of which Miss Crossley was born, must be given in full:

We, the residents of the Shire of Alberton, take the earliest opportunity of bidding you a hearty welcome to your native land. Should your many engagements permit of your revisiting the home and scenes of your childhood, we shall be delighted to give you a right royal reception. We recall with pleasure that your girlhood was passed amongst us, and we also remember the many public services rendered by your late esteemed father as a Councillor and President of the Alberton Shire.

We have followed with interest and pride your career as you have achieved success after success, till you have gained the pride of place in the musical world. In all your triumphs we have rejoiced to know that you have shed an added lustre upon Australia, and upon our little corner of it in particular.

We trust that you may long be spared to enjoy the fame you have so deservedly won, to use for others' pleasure the great talent which has been given to you, and to reap the rich reward of your labours.

Signed on behalf of the Residents of the Shire. (The signatures follow.)

The vocal achievements of Miss Crossley are so well known, not only in Great Britain, but in Australia, South Africa, and America, that there is no need to enlarge upon the charm of her voice, or to dwell upon the artistic excellence of her interpretations. To quote the words of Mr. Fuller Maitland ('Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' new edition), 'while musical people delight in her exquisitely pure and musicianly style in the classical works, the less cultivated audiences take equal pleasure in the beautiful quality of her sympathetic voice, and her delivery of ballads.' In regard to her methods, it may interest composers and singers to learn that she always makes a point of studying the words of a song before she touches the music. 'If the words appeal to me,' she says, 'then there may be possibilities in the music; but I do not think that good music can be written to inane words.'

The importance of an abstemious and healthy life cannot be overestimated in the career of a public singer, as in other vocations. Every morning Miss Crossley takes regular exercise by practising a Danish system of callisthenics, in addition to a vigorous use of the skipping-rope! Like all true Colonials, she is an excellent horse-woman, and often enjoys a canter on Hampstead Heath. Of an exceedingly happy disposition, she is kind-hearted to a degree, and it is no wonder that she has hosts of friends.

The marriage of Miss Ada Crossley to Dr. Francis F. Muecke, son of the Hon. H. C. E. Muecke, of the Legislative Council, Adelaide, South Australia, took place at St. Marylebone Parish Church on April 11, in the presence of an immense congregation. A feature of the nuptial ceremony was the singing, by 'ten girl friends of the bride,' of the hymn 'O perfect love,' to music specially arranged by Mr. George H. Clutsam. After the ceremony a large number of friends and well-wishers assembled at the Hotel Great Central to offer their congratulations to the happy pair. As Mrs. Muecke does not intend to retire into private life, she will have many opportunities of giving pleasure by her beautiful voice and artistic interpretations.

VERDI AND 'KING LEAR.'

By R. A. STREATFEILD.

During the eight years of life that remained to Verdi after the production of 'Falstaff' in 1893, in spite of his reiterated asseverations that he had done with the stage once and for all, it was often rumoured that he intended to return to the scene of his former triumphs. Italian journalists refused to believe that Verdi had finally made up his mind to write no more operas, and many were the subjects upon which at one time or another the aged composer was said to be engaged. Among them were 'Romeo and Juliet,' 'King Lear,' and 'Ugolino.' There seems to have been no foundation for the rumours that the composer had any serious thoughts of writing another opera; but it is curious that 'King Lear' should have been one of the subjects selected for Verdi by the scribes to whom the wish was father to the thought, since at an earlier period of his career he had formed the definite intention of writing an opera upon the subject of Shakespeare's tremendous tragedy, and had even bought and paid for the libretto, which was the work of a certain Antonio Somma, author, or rather adapter, of 'Un Ballo in Maschera.' An interesting little volume relating to this episode of Verdi's career has lately been published by Signor Alessandro Pascolato, in which a number of Verdi's letters to Somma are printed for the first time. They deal for the most part with merely technical points in Somma's libretto, but incidentally they illustrate Verdi's character in a very delightful manner, besides conveying a remarkable impression of his literary culture and knowledge of stage effect. Somma was a Venetian lawyer of good family, who, at the time of his correspondence with Verdi, was about forty years of age. It is probable that he made the composer's acquaintance when the latter visited Venice in 1853 for the production of 'La Traviata,' which took place on March 6 of that year. It will be remembered that 'La Traviata' failed completely at its first performance, a fact announced by Verdi to a friend in a characteristically laconic telegram:—"Traviata" a fiasco yesterday evening. Whose fault is it, mine or the singers? I don't know. Time will judge.' Somma and others of Verdi's Venetian friends did not hesitate to assure him that the fault lay entirely with the singers, which indeed was satisfactorily proved fourteen months later when 'La Traviata' was revived with a different cast and, in the expressive Italian phrase, 'went to the stars.' Somma, besides being a lawyer, was a poet of some reputation, and it is possible that during Verdi's stay in Venice the question of a libretto may have been discussed by the two friends. At any rate, in April, 1853, little more than a month after the 'Traviata' fiasco, we find Verdi writing to Somma in answer to various proposals made by the latter as to the subject of the opera that was to be. His first letter contains some particularly interesting remarks upon Italian opera in general:

My own experience has confirmed me in the ideas that I have always entertained with regard to theatrical effect, although at the outset of my career I had not the courage to act upon them altogether. For instance, ten years ago I should never have risked writing 'Rigoletto.' The truth is that Italian opera in our day sins by monotony, so much so that I should now refuse to set subjects of the character of 'Nabucco' and 'I Due Foscari.' They present certain interesting situations, but they lack variety. One note runs through all of them; a noble one if you will, but always the same. I will try and explain myself better—Tasso's great poem may be the finer, but I infinitely prefer Ariosto's. For the same reason I prefer Shakespeare to all other dramatists, the Greeks not excepted.

It appears that Somma had suggested various subjects, all of which Verdi thought lacking in varied colour, and 'Sordello' in particular he mentions as a subject in which all the personages have too much of the same character. In return he had a suggestion of his own to make:

When poor Cammarano (author of 'Il Trovatore,' 'Luisa Miller' and other librettos) was alive, I suggested 'King Lear' to him. Do you mind skimming through it?—I will do the same, as it is some time since I read it—and tell me your opinion.

A month later Verdi wrote again:

I have re-read 'King Lear,' which is marvellously fine, though I foresee difficulties in the necessity for reducing that vast canvas to reasonable proportions, while retaining the originality and grandeur of the drama and its characters. But courage! Who knows if we shall not succeed in making something quite out of the common? I am inclined to think the libretto should be reduced to three, or at the most to four acts. In the first act would come the division of the kingdom and the departure of Cordelia,—the latter would be an Aria—the successive scenes in the two Courts (i.e. of Goneril and Regan); and I would finish with the invective of the King in which he says:

'I will do such things,
What they are yet I know not; but they shall be
The terrors of the earth.'

The second act I should begin with the scene of the Tempest, then the other scenes, among them that of the Judgment (very original and affecting), and I should finish when Cordelia sends to seek her father, who flies at seeing the officers, &c.

The third act I should begin with Lear asleep; Cordelia assists him (sublime duet), &c., &c. Battle and last scene.

Principal parts: Lear, Cordelia, the two brothers, Edgar and Edmund, the Fool, whom perhaps I should make a contralto. Secondary: Goneril, Regan, Kent, &c. The others minor parts.

The principal pieces, so far as I have at present made them out, will be: The introduction with Cordelia's air, the scene of the Tempest, the scene of the Judgment, the duet between Lear and Cordelia, and the last scene.

These are my ideas on the subject, but of course you must do what you think best, only keep in mind the necessary brevity—the public is so easily bored! It struck me when I read the play—and I still hold to my opinion—that in the first scene the motive for which Lear disinherits Cordelia is childish* and from the point of view of a modern audience ridiculous. Could you not find some more important motive? Or would that injure the character of Cordelia? At all events this scene needs to be treated very carefully.

I specially commend to your notice the character of the Fool, for which I have a particular affection—it is so original and so profound. Take care, too, that the part of Lear be not too arduous and exhausting.

Somma did his best to work upon the lines suggested by Verdi, but he evidently found the task of turning 'King Lear' into an opera libretto a difficult one, which indeed need surprise no one. Verdi was full of suggestions and criticism, and a long correspondence followed, in which every detail was thoroughly threshed out between them. But it is plain that the thing was destined not to turn out a success. The most drastic measures were resorted to to get it into shape. First Gloucester was sacrificed, then Edgar, in order to shorten the work which Verdi feared would be too long for the public. But then difficulties arose as to how Edmund should be disposed of, and all the time Verdi was continually complaining of the unmusical character or Somma's words, of the difficulty of working them into cantabile phrases, into concerted numbers, and so forth. At length, after fully two years of constant correspondence, 'King Lear' seems to have been dropped by mutual consent, and the two collaborators turned their attention to 'Un Ballo in Maschera,' which for both of them proved a much easier task. Still it is plain that Verdi never altogether gave up the idea of setting Somma's libretto. Writing to his librettist in 1863, with reference to a proposal of Somma's that he should write an opera on the story of 'Ivan the Terrible,' he says: 'At the present moment I do not intend to begin on any composition, and if I decide to do so later, I have several poems in my portfolio, among them your magnificent "King Lear." Long afterwards, probably about the period of 'Aida,' Verdi appears to have discussed the question of setting 'King Lear' with Ghislanzoni, and after the composer's death Signor Ferdinando Fontana found a notebook among his papers, containing sketches of proposed librettos, in which 'King Lear' figured by the side of 'Hamlet' and 'The Tempest.' It is possible, of course, that Verdi may have begun an opera upon 'King Lear' and found that the subject did not lend itself well to operatic treatment. We know not what priceless sketches may not have been committed to the flames in the large box of manuscripts which, by the composer's special command, was destroyed immediately after his death by his executors. When we remember what Verdi accomplished in 'Otello,' it is disappointing to think of the masterpiece that we might have had if he had persisted in his determination to make an opera of 'King Lear.'

* This opinion of Verdi's was combated by Somma, and in a subsequent letter the composer admitted his error with charming and characteristic frankness.

Occasional Notes.

O Music, voice inspired of all our joy!
When on us streams the golden light
Of sunny days, no cloud in sight,
And heaven and earth are radiance bright,
Thy noblest powers our grateful hearts employ.

O Music, source of consolation sweet!
When round us fall the shadows drear,
When shrinks the soul with mortal fear,
'Tis light and peace if thee we hear;
Of heavenly rest thou speak'st in accents meet.

O Music, highest gift to mortals known!
Upon thy soaring wings we rise
Above the earth, above the skies,
Till open on our ravished eyes
The splendours of the Everlasting Throne.

From 'The Dream of Jubal.'

JOSEPH BENNETT.

There is a story of a clergyman who took temporary duty at a country church. After the service he, in confidential tones, interrogated the clerk as follows: 'Did my sermon seem all right, this morning? Was it long enough?' 'Yes, sir,' replied the clerk, 'I thought it was a werry nice sermon, just the right length.' 'I am very glad to hear you say that,' smilingly observed the cleric, 'because just before I started to come here my dog got hold of my sermon and ate some of the leaves, and I had no time to write any more.' After a moment's silence the clerk looked into the parson's face and said: 'Couldn't you give our wicar a pup o' that 'ere dawg, sir?' Substitute score for sermon, and the moral of the story may be applied to some musical compositions we wot of. But might not the eaten leaves cause some disagreeable sensations in the bodies of the dogs?

'Strike the lyre,' composed by Tom Cooke, is one of the most popular of English glees. And yet how little is known of its history. As a matter of fact it failed to secure the prize offered by the Manchester Gentlemen's Glee Club seventy-four years ago! If we turn to the advertisement pages of the Manchester Courier of June 28, 1831, we shall there find the following announcement:

Gentlemen's Glee Club, Manchester.

Premiums for New Glees.

The Committee of this Club, being desirous of encouraging the composition of English Glees, hereby offer a PREMIUM of FIVE POUNDS for the best SERIOUS GLEE, and another of similar amount for the best CHEERFUL GLEE, to be submitted for their approbation, it being expected that such as are sent in will be written for the occasion, and distinctly understood that none shall be sent to them which have been before the public in any manner whatever.

Composers becoming Candidates are requested to put some distinguishing mark or motto on the glees they transmit, and a similar one on a sealed envelope, containing their name and address, which envelope will not be opened until the Prize Glees have been fixed upon.

The Compositions to be sent must be delivered to the undersigned, on or before the first of September, 1831.

G. E. AUBREY,

Honorary Secretary to the Club, Manchester.

No fewer than 46 compositions—25 serious, 21 cheerful glees—competed for the 'premiums.' Of the composers who entered the fray, twenty-four hailed from London—'all of whom, with an exception of two, are eminent in the profession,' so the Harmonicon records—seven came from Manchester gentlemen; the remainder from Liverpool, Edinburgh, Glasgow, York, Bristol, Hull, and Plymouth.' The words of all these 'candidate glees' were printed for the purposes of adjudication. One of the judges was a Mr. A. Ward, a professional musician residing in Manchester. His copy of the word-book, with his judicial annotations marked therein, is now before us, kindly placed at our disposal for these 'notes' by its present owner, Dr. Henry Watson, the genial conductor of the Gentlemen's Glee Club of Manchester. Among the names of the competitors—written by Mr. Ward against their respective glees—are those of T. Attwood Walmisley (Croydon), and his father, T. F. Walmisley, H. R. Bishop, T. Cooke, and Vincent Novello. The 'premium' for the serious glee was won by Bishop with his setting of 'Where shall we make her grave?' while for the cheerful glee Vincent Novello with his 'Old May morning' (the words by his son-in-law, Charles Cowden Clarke) came off victorious over Tom Cooke in his 'Strike the lyre.' Cooke seems to have taken his beating in a generous spirit, as very shortly after the contest he caused the son of his opponent to publish his glee, and, moreover, he dedicated it to the Club that had offered the 'premiums.' Here is the title of the original publication, doubtless issued in 1833, folio size:

STRIKE! STRIKE THE LYRE, Glee for Alto, two Tenors, and Bass, composed and inscribed to The Gentlemen's Glee Club, Manchester, by T. COOKE.
Ent. Sta. Hall. Price 3s.
London: Joseph Alfred Novello, Music seller to Her Majesty & the Royal Family, 67, Frith Street, Soho Square.

Judged by its subsequent success nothing could be more appropriate than the motto selected by Cooke for his 'Strike the lyre'—it was 'Nil desperandum.' May not unsuccessful competitors in similar contests be encouraged thereby?

The Gentlemen's Glee Club (Manchester) was founded in the year 1830, and still flourishes. Its initiation is recorded in the Harmonicon of June, 1831, in a letter evidently written by one of the original members, wherein the 'outline of the rules' is thus set forth:

The Club to consist of fifty members.

The subscription to be one pound per annum, out of which a cold supper to be provided.

An entrance fee of one pound to be paid by every member for the purchase of music.

Every member to be allowed to bring one friend each night (paying for his supper), but no gentleman to be admitted twice, unless residing at more than six miles from the Manchester Exchange.

Members not present at half after seven o'clock, to forfeit 2s.; not attending at all 2s. 6d.

Singing to commence at half after seven: supper to be on the table at ten; and the chair to be vacated, and the room quitted, at twelve: no refreshments of any kind permitted to be brought into the Club Room before supper.

The meetings to be held on the first Wednesday in every month, from September to April both inclusive.

A President, Vice-President, and four Stewards elected every night for the succeeding meeting: the President to make the selection of glees, and appoint the parties to sing them; the Honorary Secretary giving sufficient notice to such parties.

At the last meeting for the season, the committee for the next season to be elected by the members at large.

The Club closed its first season—on April 28, 1831—with an 'extra meeting,' at which about 350 ladies and gentlemen were present. We are told that 'the Salford Town Hall was tastefully fitted up for the occasion, and wines, cakes, fruit, &c., were provided in the ante-rooms, as refreshments between the parts into which the selection was divided.' Many glees were sung, the programme being diversified by three songs, and Chopin's 'Grand Polonaise brillante' was played by Mr. R. Andrews. 'It may be necessary to explain,' apologetically says the writer in the Harmonicon, 'that the songs and the Polonaise were introduced in order to afford that variety which ladies not accustomed to glees, and into the merits of which they may be supposed, therefore, not to enter so readily, might have thought agreeable.' Curiously enough—as bearing on the main theme of these 'notes'—at this same music-making in 1831 a glee composed by the said Mr. R. Andrews (the Polonaise performer) was sung, it being a setting of the words 'Strike the lyre'! Mr. Andrews's glee, which was published, bears on its title-page the statement that the words are a translation from the Persian poet Sâdi. But is this so? In no other instance (word-books, programmes, &c.) is Sâdi's name given in connection with the words, and various attempts to trace them have hitherto failed. Can any of our readers throw fresh light on the authorship of the words of Thomas Simpson Cooke's delightful glee 'Strike the lyre'?

The Lancet, in an appreciative comment on our April issue, especially the biographical sketch of Manuel Garcia, says: 'Among the other articles we are glad to see one calling attention to the beauties of Bach's choral preludes. Why is it that these wonderful compositions are so seldom played?'

Peter Cornelius—one of whose vocal compositions forms a special supplement to our present issue—was born at Mayence on Christmas-eve, 1824. A poetic-minded musician, he did not find scope for his aspirations until he had reached the age of twenty-seven, when he went to Weimar. There he joined the band of those enthusiastic young artists who, under Liszt's magnetic personality, eventually formed the 'New German' school. At Weimar he not only became very intimate with Liszt, but made a special study of Wagner's works. Having the pen of a ready writer, Cornelius rendered great service to the propagation of the 'cause,' both by original articles in the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik and by translating from the French a series of lectures delivered by Liszt. His greatest work, 'The Barber of Bagdad,' a comic opera in two acts, of which Cornelius wrote both the words and music, was produced at Weimar, under Liszt, in December, 1858, and failed. This unsuccessful first performance was so resented by Liszt that he left Weimar, which then ceased to be the centre of the school. Cornelius—who was a nephew of the celebrated painter of that name, in whose honour Mendelssohn composed his well-known March—then went to Vienna, where he formed the friendship of Wagner. In 1865 Cornelius followed Wagner to Munich, and became reader to the eccentric King of Bavaria, being subsequently appointed professor of harmony at the Conservatorium, or 'Königliche Musik-schule,' of which Hans von Bülow was principal. Wagner's influence upon the younger composer is evidenced in the latter's grand opera the 'Cid,' produced at Weimar in 1865. While at work on another opera, 'Gunlöd,' Cornelius died at Mayence on October 26, 1874, in the fiftieth year of his age. The whirligig of time has had its revenge upon the adverse verdict of the Weimarites in regard to 'The Barber of Bagdad.' Since its revival at Munich, on October 15, 1885, the opera has become one of the most popular in Germany. The many beauties of the orchestral score—written before 'Die Meistersinger' had been composed—were made manifest at the excellent performance given, in English, by the students of the Royal College of Music at the Savoy Theatre, December 9, 1891. In England, Cornelius has hitherto been best known by his exquisite 'Vätergruft,' set for baritone solo and unaccompanied chorus of sopranos, tenors, and first and second basses (no contraltos). The publication of other vocal compositions by him with English text will doubtless cause his name to become more familiar in this country. Amongst these may be specially mentioned the unaccompanied mixed-voice part-songs, 'I can but love Thee' ('Ich will dich lieben'), in six parts; 'O death! thou art the tranquil night' ('Der Tod, das ist die kühle Nacht'), in eight parts; 'The surrender of the soul' ('Liebe, dir ergeb' ich mich!'), in eight parts; 'Throne of mercy, Star of goodness' ('Thron der Liebe'), in eight parts; and the male-voice chorus 'The Old Soldier's Dream' ('Der alte Soldat'), in nine parts. All these pieces are highly characteristic of Cornelius's peculiar style. This style is deeply expressive, with a tendency to sombreness, relieved by finely wrought-up and thrilling climaxes. The music is often extremely difficult. Strange, weird chords, discords hard to hold, sudden contrasts of distantly related keys are frequent and provide stiff problems for the ears and voices of the most experienced singers. 'O Death' ('Der Tod') is one of the test-pieces for highest class in the Morecambe Festival (May 17 to 20), and 'The Surrender of the Soul' ('Liebe, dir ergeb' ich mich!'), and 'The Old Soldier's Dream' ('Der alte Soldat'), are chosen for the Blackpool Festival to be held in October next.

The centenary of the death of Friedrich Schiller recalls the association of that great German poet with the works of some of the most eminent composers. These include 'William Tell,' Rossini's masterpiece in opera; 'To the Sons of Art' (Festgesang), set by Mendelssohn for a chorus of male voices with accompaniment of brass instruments; 'Nänie,' composed in cantata form by both Goetz and Brahms; many poems wedded to the immortal strains of Schubert; operas by Weber ('Turandot'), Verdi ('Luisa Miller'), and Dvorák ('Dimetrius'); Schumann's overture to the 'Bride of Messina,' and, in the region of 'popular' music, Romberg's setting of 'The Lay (or Song) of the Bell.' To the foregoing must be added, by way of special mention, the choral ending of Beethoven's mighty Ninth Symphony, of which the words are selected from Schiller's 'An die Freude' ('Ode to Joy'), written in 1785, the composition of which occupied Beethoven between the years 1817 and 1823. It appears that at the early age of twenty-two Beethoven intended to compose 'Schiller's Freude verse by verse' (see Grove's 'Beethoven and his Nine Symphonies,' p. 322 et seq.), but he abandoned that idea for the choral ending to the cap-stone of his symphonies. The selection of the words and the dovetailing of them into the instrumental portion greatly troubled Beethoven. He wrote (in 1822) to Rochlitz: 'You see, for some time past I have not been able to write easily. I sit and think, and think, and get it all settled; but it won't come on to the paper, and a great work troubles me at the outset; once get into it, and it's all right.' How true this is, even in its application to smaller things and the creative work of those who, unlike Beethoven, are not geniuses. 'Once get into it, and it's all right' are words of encouragement to many a brain-worker who finds it hard to begin a literary or musical piece of work. It is interesting to recall the fact that Schiller was born in the same year that Handel died, 1759: the poet drew his last breath, at Jena, on May 8, 1805. A complete list of all the musical settings of Schiller's dramatic works will be found in the March issue of 'Novello's Monthly Bulletin of New Foreign Music,' which may be obtained gratis on application.

To the distinguished Belgian conductor, M. Dupuis, every credit is due for giving the supporters of the Concerts Populaires, Brussels, the opportunity of hearing Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' which was given for the first time in the French language on March 26 (not March 19, as inadvertently stated in our last issue, on p. 269). All accounts refer to the extreme care taken by M. Dupuis in the presentation of the work, and some idea of the impression thereby created may be gathered from the following excerpts:

Sir Edward Elgar has acquitted himself in a masterly manner of his self-imposed mission, and the audience at the Concerts Populaires ratified the sensation created first at the Birmingham Festival and subsequently at the Rhenish Festival in Düsseldorf. Sir Edward Elgar's scoring is manifestly that of a profound, learned and inspired musician, of an artist who has ideas, and who above all possesses the talent to give them their full value and to dispose them in such fashion as to produce the maximum of intense and decisive effect.—L'Indépendance Belge.

The 'Dream of Gerontius' is a beautiful work. That which characterizes it especially is its intense mysticism and profound conviction. Its technique is irreplicable, particularly with regard to the choral portions. Among the most successful pages of the work may be cited the Finale of the first part, which has a sonority and poetical feeling worthy of the greatest models. To sum up, Elgar is a personality of which the English school has a right to be proud.—Le Soir.

In the region of oratorio I know of no inspiration more noble, of sincerity more moving, of religious feeling more profound, than that of the Island musician who, highly reputed in England and the United States, was yesterday hardly known to us, but will to-morrow be elevated to the level of a master on the Continent as elsewhere. The most curious, as it is the happiest circumstance, is that Elgar does not pretend to dazzle us with the subtlety of his writing, the novelty of his tone, the pathos of his orchestration. He has done better than that by the thought which expresses itself in simple terms, sometimes ingenuous and original, by the purity of idea, and by that something untranslatable which is the soaring upwards of the soul. In both parts of the work we find many pages admirable and even sublime.—Le Petit Bleu.

The nobility of style, the elevation of sentiment, the ingenuity and skill with which the choral parts and orchestration are treated, are those of an illustrious musician who knows how to avoid the extravagance of Wagner or Debussy. And in the meritorious ensemble there shine two or three pages of such extreme beauty,—the recit. of the 'Angel of the Agony,' which shows veritable genius in its admirable accent of supplication and love, the Finale of the first part displaying so ideal a sonority, and the peroration, developing an important phrase, Beethovenian in style, in its joyous evocation of the angelic regions.—Le XXe Siècle.

The development of local resources—collective and individual—has been often urged, and will continue to be urged, in these columns. A man perfectly well-equipped for a position of great responsibility only needs the opportunity in order to prove the 'stuff' that is in him. Such an instance came especially before our notice in a second visit we recently paid to the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union, the operations of which we noticed with peculiar pleasure in an illustrated article on Newcastle music in THE MUSICAL TIMES of January, 1902. Since then Mr. James M. Preston has conducted all the choral concerts given by that flourishing organization on the banks of the Tyne. Evidence of his fitness for those duties, and of his hold upon the members of the choirs, was furnished at the concert given by the Choral Union in the Town Hall, Newcastle, on March 29 last, and noticed by our correspondent on page 334. In the renderings of Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal' and Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' one could not fail to be impressed with the beauty of tone, phrasing, intelligence, and poetic interpretation of the music by those vocal Tynesiders under Mr. Preston's inspiring sway. This combination of gifts was manifested in all the choral work of the evening, reaching its high-water mark in Brahms's lovely work and in the chorus of the maidens in Senta's ballad from the 'Flying Dutchman.' Congratulations to the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union, its officers, conductor, and excellent chorus.

Mr. G. B. Dobson, of Anerley, writes :—

It may be interesting to some of your readers if I still further supplement the particulars you give on page 243 of the April number of THE MUSICAL TIMES in reference to Mr. Bartholomew Johnson, of Scarborough.

Lord Mulgrave commissioned a portrait to be painted of him by J. Jackson, R.A., which was presented to the Corporation, and has ever since hung in the Town Hall. He is represented as seated beside his favourite instruments, the violoncello and the bassoon. This portrait was subsequently engraved by John Bird, and issued to a limited number of subscribers.

For seventy years Mr. Johnson was one of the town 'waits,' who must have been in those days rather superior to their successors. When he attained the age of 103 further honours were showered upon him, for a ball was given and a silver medal struck to commemorate the event. On one side of the medal is a bust of the gentleman, who much resembles his patronymic of Fleet Street, and the words 'Mr. Bartholomew Johnson, aged 103. To the Corporation of Scarborough.' On the reverse a group of instruments—flute, bassoon, violoncello, and horn—with the quotation 'He was a man take him for all in all, we shall not look upon his like again.' He died on February 14, 1814, in his 104th year.

Perhaps I may add that my grandmother actually danced with Mr. Johnson at the said ball! She also subscribed to the engraving and medal, both of which are now before me.

The outline programme of the Worcester Musical Festival—appointed to be held on September 10, 12, 13, 14, and 15—has been issued. Subjoined is a list of the principal works set down for performance:

Choral: 'Messiah,' 'Sleepers, wake' (Bach), 'Requiem' (Mozart), Selection from 'The Beatitudes' (César Franck), 'De Profundis' (Parry), 'Dream of Gerontius,' 'Apostles' (Elgar), and two eight-part motets by Cornelius. The surrender of the soul to the Everlasting Love, and 'Throne of mercy, Star of goodness.' The new choral works specially composed for the Festival are 'A Hymn of Faith' (the libretto arranged from Holy Scripture by Sir Edward Elgar), by Mr. Ivor A. Atkins, conductor of the Festival; and a short cantata, to be sung at the opening service, from the pen of Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, who has selected words from Milton's 'Paradise Lost.'

Instrumental: A Symphony by Beethoven, Brahms's Fourth symphony, and Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung.'

In accordance with an imperative custom the famous Passion Play at Oberammergau, in the Bavarian Highlands, can only be given every ten years. As the last representation took place in 1900 no other can occur until the year 1910. But the villagers intend to perform another old mystery play, or 'Sacred Drama,' entitled the 'Kreuzeschule' ('The School of the Cross'), during the summer of this year, on various dates ranging from June 4 to September 17. Thirty years have elapsed since this particular mystery play was given, and as the previous text was unsatisfactory, entirely new words have been written by the Rev. Dr. Joseph Hecher, Court Chaplain at Munich, and fresh music composed by Professor Wilhelm Müller, also of Munich. The performances will take place on the huge open-air stage, with mountains for a background, so familiar to visitors to the Passion Play. Full particulars of the representations, &c., may be obtained from the official representatives in England of the Oberammergau Community, Messrs. Hugo Lang & Co., 14, Church Street, Liverpool.

HYMN-TUNES DERIVED FROM WEBER.

When Weber, in the last stage of consumption, produced his 'Oberon' at Covent Garden Theatre on April 12, 1826, he little thought that one of his melodious strains in that fairy-charged opera would be turned into a hymn-tune. But such is the case. To the fine overture—written by Weber in London, and dated '9 April, 1826'—immediately succeeds a chorus of elves entitled 'Light as fairy foot can fall,' set for sopranos, altos, and tenors. The stage directions are as follows:

SCENE. Oberon's Bower. At the rising of the curtain, several groups of fairies and genii are discovered, who sing the following chorus:

(24 bars of instrumental Introduction omitted.)

This delightful strain caught the fancy of one William Shore, an amateur composer of Manchester (1791-1877), who 'boiled it down' into a 7's metre hymn-tune thus:

In this form it will be found, unfortunately, in some collections of hymn-tunes, named either 'Weber' or 'Shore.' Weber's fairy chorus made its first appearance in its hymn-tune guise in William Shore's

'Sacred music, selected and arranged from the works of the most eminent composers,' published in 1833. The late Dr. W. H. Monk, the first musical editor of Hymns Ancient and Modern, has recorded that when contributions were invited towards that well-known hymnal, 'my house was full of MSS. tendered for acceptance from all quarters, and the tune of which I received the greatest number of copies was an adaptation of a chorus in Weber's "Oberon" — the identical chorus referred to above.

Another Weber melody, the lovely horn passage in the overture to 'Der Freischütz,' has been hymn-tuneized thus and called 'Agatha':

No comment is necessary on such a distortion of one of the most beautiful creations in music.

A DELIGHTFUL OLD ORGAN!

Where is it? On the Chiltern Hills is a little village named Lacey Green. In its parish church is the said organ, and moreover practically in the same condition as when it came from the factory of Samuel Green, London, in 1792, the date recorded on the instrument. The organ could not have been built for Lacey Green church, because the ecclesiastical parish was not formed nor the church erected until the year 1824. Except the addition of pedals—which only pull down the manual keys (there are no pedal pipes)—and the placing of all the drawstops on the right-hand side of the keyboard, this Green organ has not been modernized, but stands to-day as an interesting specimen of the craftsmanship of an eminent 18th century organ-builder. Its tone is musical—not only in regard to individual stops, but in their various combinations, the blending being most satisfactory, while the full organ is by no means provocative of a headache. Can all this be said of many modern organs? The open diapason is free from assertiveness, and the stopped diapason speaks with just that touch of wheeziness which lends additional charm to its tone. After the over-blown and loudly-voiced organs of the present day it is quite refreshing to let one's fingers wander over the keys of this old instrument—one that is in perfect harmony with the quietude of that Buckinghamshire village.

The following is a list of the stops, with their various divisions, where they occur:

- Stopped diapason treble (to fiddle G).
- Stopped diapason bass.
- Open diapason.
- Dulciana (to fiddle G).
- Principal treble (to middle C).
- Principal bass.
- Flute (to middle C).
- Fifteenth.
- Cornet (to middle C).
- Sesquialtera (bass to cornet stop).

THE 'OO' VOWEL IN THE TRAINING OF BOYS' VOICES.

Much has been said and written of late years as to methods of training boys' voices for church choir and other purposes, with the result that in schools and divers places 'where they sing' the matter has received a good share of attention. Given a teacher who has grasped right principles and scientific methods of working them out, it is proved that highly satisfactory results can be gained from apparently unpromising raw material. All the methods current are necessarily founded more or less on a 'forward' vowel production, and a favourite vowel in this connection is oo, which is found to be an efficient voice taming as well as a voice training means. But there is reason to fear that the peculiar timbre thus evolved is often used too exclusively. A teacher and his pupils during the practice of exercises get so accustomed to the peculiar ventriloquial, distant, up-the-chimney quality of this vowel oo, that in singing pieces they are apt to become unconscious of the fact that all other vowels are permeated with the oo quality. In some cases we have noted recently it has been oppressive and exceedingly monotonous to listen to services and other performances where this 'ocarina' tone—as it has been very well described—is adopted. We commend the matter to the consideration of those concerned. The colour of the other foundation vowels of our language is quite easily developed. It may be worth while to add that the singular charm of a variety of vocal timbre in boys' voices can be heard to perfection at St. Paul's Cathedral.

THE ETHICS OF ORGAN-BUILDING.

An eminent firm of organ-builders writes:

We sincerely trust that the Corruption Bill, which has passed the House of Lords, may also pass the Commons, for the commission traffic between certain organists and organ-builders is, as your last correspondent remarks, a curse to honesty. We have lost many a contract by resisting it, and you would be surprised could you see the list of prominent Doctors of Music and others who are the chief offenders.

The worst feature of the system is that it is the common practice of these persons, when consulted about an instrument, to expect, and frequently demand, commission from every firm which tenders, so as to secure themselves in any case.

We have often had letters, and even telegrams, from organists, some of them perfect strangers to us, saying: 'Your scheme, with those of other builders, has been sent to me for advice, what commission will you allow me if I recommend you?' or similar communications, which have doubtless been sent to the others also.

It is needless to say that there are many honourable exceptions among the ranks of organists, and that certain firms have done much to stimulate this pernicious system by regularly offering, by their agents, and their ordinary tenders, a commission as an inducement to the organist to obtain for them the contract. Hence we are often told: 'You must allow me my commission in your tender; So-and-so, and So-and-so offered me ten per cent.'—and not unfrequently more than this!

The same cankerous methods do not appear to be restricted to Great Britain. In an article on 'Organ- and organ-building' contributed to The New Music Review (New York), Mr. E. H. Lemare thus refers to similar practices in America:

I am afraid to say it; but I fear the reason why the professional organist is not more often consulted [in the building of an organ] is that there is a certain more or less shady reputation still hovering over him in relation to 'commissions.' This unjust and undignified system, I am sorry to say, I find almost as prevalent here as it is in England.

I know of many cases where an organist has received a 10 or 15 per cent. commission from the builders, and, at the same time, has taken a good round fee for his advice into the bargain. A case came before my notice a few weeks ago where an additional 5 per cent. from an inferior builder induced the organist to take the order—verbally promised—away from a really good firm.

'The labourer is worthy of his hire,' and if his advice is sought it ought to be paid for; but he must not rob the people he advises by taking out a few stops which ought to be in the organ and putting them in his pocket, which I fear is often done. My advice to those who can resist this tempting way of making money is,—let it be known at once that you are above corruption in this matter, and you will receive many honest fees for honest advice.

I know I shall have the support of all right-minded musicians concerning this matter; but it is only just to the organ-builders to point out the various complications from the business point of view with which they have to contend; and so long as this unfair competition exists, the art of organ-building will remain a purely business proposition.

CATHEDRAL SPECIAL SERVICES.

ST. PAUL'S.

Solemnity, devotion, and art in its highest form were beautifully harmonized in the rendering of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion in the Metropolitan Cathedral on April 18. Wren's masterpiece was crowded by a huge congregation who listened to the great Cantor's noble creation in a spirit of true reverence. Criticism would be as a jarring note in recording a service so spiritual, but mention must be made of the singing of the soprano and alto solos by all the St. Paul's boys (in chorus); that in itself was an inspiration. Sir George Martin as 'chief musician,' Mr. Charles Macpherson at the organ, a capable orchestra, and well-trained choir, formed a combination worthy of the magnificence of the music.

CHICHESTER.

The English version—skillfully adapted by Mr. F. J. W. Crowe—of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' entitled 'At the foot of the Cross,' was performed at Chichester Cathedral on April 6. A choir of about 120 voices were accompanied by a small orchestra, and Mr. Stephenson presided at the organ. The excellent rendering of the music made a deep impression on a large congregation, and the Bohemian composer's beautiful work should find increased acceptance for church purposes in the English form of its text. Mr. Crowe, organist of the cathedral, conducted.

LINCOLN.

Brahms's 'Requiem' was sung in Lincoln Cathedral at two special services on March 31 and April 14. The choruses were rendered by an increased choir of 150 voices, and the soloists were Mr. C. Woodward and Masters Worland and Baker. Mr. H. S. Trevitt presided at the organ, and Dr. G. J. Bennett, the cathedral organist, conducted. The collections at the two services—in aid of the Typhoid Relief Fund—amounted to over £47.

WELLS.

An impressive musical service was held in Wells Cathedral on April 12, when Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was sung under the direction of the organist, Dr. T. H. Davis. The chorus singers were drawn from four different places—Wells, Shepton Mallet, Street, and Wedmore—an excellent plan, as it enabled actual villagers to take part in singing the noble strains of the mighty master; moreover, these good people sang well and with an intense appreciation of their privileges and the music. The double orchestra of forty-eight players acquitted themselves well, the cathedral choir sang the solos, and Dr. Percy Buck, of Harrow, a former organist of Wells Cathedral, officiated at the organ. All those who so enthusiastically co-operated to make the service a success—which it undoubtedly was—deserve full commendation and every encouragement for future efforts.

Elgar's 'Light of Life' was sung at Hampstead Parish Church on April 6, under the direction of Mr. George Aitken, organist of the church.

With regret we have to place on record the death of JOHN BAPTISTE CALKIN, which occurred at his residence 37, Hornsey Rise Gardens, on April 15, in his seventy-eighth year. Born in London on March 16, 1827, Mr. Calkin has long been favourably known as a composer of church and organ music, in addition to his painstaking work as a private teacher and at the Guildhall School of Music, where several of his pupils have gained distinction. He was a man held in affection and esteem by all those with whom he came into contact, and his loss will be much deplored not only by his family but by a large circle of friends.

Dr. B. Agutter has resigned the offices of precentor, organist and choirmaster of St. Peter's Church, Streatham, which he has held for the long period of thirty-eight years. In a highly appreciative notice of Dr. Agutter and his work, the Vicar of St. Peter's, writing in the Parish Magazine, says: 'Through all the numberless changes that have taken place within the Church and without, he has remained at the organ, aiding the devotions of generation after generation of St. Peter's people, and it is not too much to say that he has contributed more than any other one man to the fame which the Church enjoys.'

THE FIRST SYMPHONY OF BRAHMS.

(IN C MINOR, OP. 68.)

BY SIR GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

Un poco sostenuto. Allegro.Andante sostenuto.Un poco allegretto e grazioso.Adagio: più andante: allegro moderato ma con brio.

Brahms's first symphony, which bears the late Opus number of 68, was first played under the direction of the composer at Carlsruhe, on November 4, 1876. It was first heard in England, under the baton of Dr. Joachim, at a concert given by the Cambridge University Musical Society on March 8, 1877. Few first symphonies have ever been more anxiously expected by the musical world, and few have more amply justified the favourable expectations formed from the many previous important works of the composer.

I.—Like other orchestral works of Brahms, this Symphony is written for the ordinary band, the double-bassoon being the only unusual instrument employed. It opens with a short introductory movement, un poco sostenuto, espressivo e legato, thirty-seven bars long, in the key of C minor.

No. 1.

Violins (Vn.)

Cello & Bass

Cor. 1

&c.

From the few bars quoted it will be seen that the materials of which it is composed have a close relation to the principal subjects in the Allegro which follows, and the measure is the same (6-8), though interrupted (after the seventh bar) by one bar of 9-8. It is stamped with the same character of restless, passionate, subjective melancholy that distinguishes the Allegro, to which movement it forms a true introduction.

The Allegro itself is reached without any pause. Its first four bars form a kind of prelude to the chief theme, which starts in the violins at (a):

No. 2.

&c.

Violins (Vn.)

Basses & Central Basses

&c.

and is harmonized by a chromatic phrase which has occurred immediately before (see the first four bars of the quotation), and will be found to have a strong relation to the second subject. This theme is developed at considerable length and with great vigour and intensity, and with much use of a characteristic phrase of four notes which immediately follows the last quotation:

No. 3.

Violins (Vn.)

Wood.

The second subject hardly interrupts the character of the movement, for it is in the key of E flat, and delivered by the oboes, clarinets, bassoons, and horns:

Oboes (Ob.)

Clarinets (Cl.)

Bassoons (Bsn.)

Horns (Hr.)

&c.

As just mentioned, in its chromatic progressions it resembles a passage already much used (see lower staff of No. 2), and it is harmonized (very effectively) in the strings by a phrase derived from the principal subject, in keeping with the method employed by the composer throughout the symphony, of making the themes of each movement as closely as possible related to each other, and to those of the other movements. But it differs essentially from anything preceding it in the rests which occur between its two main portions, and gives them the effect of two mighty wails or sobs. A kind of second part to the last quotation is formed by a further melody in the oboes, harmonized by sustained notes in the bassoons, violas, and violoncellos:

No. 5.

A bar of this (see b in the above quotation) forms shortly afterwards the subject of a graceful imitation between clarinet and horn, flute and bassoon—

No. 6.

to an accompaniment of syncopated chords in the strings, the whole gradually dying away, and furnishing a welcome relief, both in key and rhythm, to the agitation which has preceded it. The relief, however, is of very short duration. A new figure, rough and forcible, makes its appearance in the strings—

No. 7.

and we are again plunged into an ocean of agitation. In this mood of restless energy, and in the key of E flat minor, the first section of the Allegro ends.

After the usual repetition of the whole of the preceding section, the working out commences by a sudden transition to the key of B major with the first subject (No. 2, a) in the strings and clarinets, and sustained chords in the other wind instruments. The strings then change to tremolo, and an augmented version of the theme (i.e., in notes of increased length) is given by the bassoon—and completed by the flute:

The signature of three flats then returns, and the development of the various themes and phrases in the first section proceeds with great ingenuity, closeness, and display of counterpoint. First we have the triple figure (quoted as No. 7), but now ending in the following new melody—

No. 10.

of which considerable use is afterwards made. A long diminuendo, of a very poetical cast, leads to a passage in which, through thirty bars and increasing by slow degrees from a mere whisper to the loudest fortissimo, the violins carry on a series of imitations with the double basses and double-bassoon—

No. 11.

while the triplet figure appears at intervals of four bars. Following close on this we have a combination of the triplets with the semiquaver figure from the very opening of the Allegro—

No. 12.

and then a passage in which the figure last mentioned is combined with the second subject:

No. 13.

The whole of the latter part of the working-out is loud and furious and leads into the customary réprise of the original first subject, in the original key of

C minor. After this, all is recapitulated with the usual change of keys. The second subject (No. 4) appears in the oboes, bassoons and horns, in the key of C major. The quiet passage of response (No. 6)—the oboe this time taking the place of the flute—is also in C, and so on until an unpretending but impressive coda concludes the movement poco sostenuto as it began. The quotations may serve to show, to some extent, the ingenuity and contrapuntal skill with which this portion of the work is conducted; but they give no idea of the vigour and passion and poetry which are embodied in the music, and which are worthy of any master—especially of any master writing his first Symphony.

II.—The second movement is an Andante sostenuto in 3-4 time and in the key of E major—the same succession of keys as in Beethoven's third pianoforte concerto. It is full at once of beauty and passion, and is instinct with the spirit of that great Viennese master of whom Brahms was in many respects the true successor.

It opens with the following* theme, of the melody and harmony of which Schubert himself might be proud. The following are its two main portions—

No. 14. Andante sostenuto.

No. 15. Melody and bass only. Oboe.

now divided by an afterthought in the shape of a passage of twelve bars, which had no existence when the symphony was originally played from manuscript parts.

The last quotation is immediately followed by an intense passage in the strings—

No. 16.

* Derived from the old Church-phrase, of which all the great masters have been, in turn, so fond.

and this again by a passage for the oboe, with an answer from the clarinet, and later on from the basses—

the sound of which shows how deeply Brahms imbibed Schubert's spirit in the combination of his darling wind instruments. When the clarinet enters, with a delicate enharmonic change in the accompanying strings, it is almost as if we saw the author of the "Unfinished symphony in B minor" standing in the orchestra, and saying, "So I would have done it." The accompaniment to this—violins and violas alone in staccato chords—is in the happiest vein. After much more beautiful work, which space alone forbids our quoting, the movement ends with the original melody distributed between a solo violin and the flute, and accompanied with great ingenuity and charming effect.

The unrest which so disastrously disturbs the Empire of Russia has entered the realm of music. M. Rimsky-Korsakoff has been 'dismissed' from the Conservatoire of Music at St. Petersburg because he criticised the bureaucratic methods of the Russian Government. The distinguished composer's 'dismissal' has been followed by the resignation of three of his colleagues, MM. Glazounow, Liadow, and Auer. M. Rimsky-Korsakoff has also withdrawn from the Academy of Fine Arts. A performance of his opera, 'Kascheg', by the students of the Conservatoire, was the scene of a wild outburst of enthusiasm. Flowers were showered upon the composer from all parts of the house, and many speeches were delivered. The police vainly endeavoured to stop the proceedings by lowering the fire-proof curtain, which, however, in spite of its great weight, was upheld by some of the audience; but ultimately the theatre was cleared. What a pitiable state of affairs!

An exceptionally fine performance of Elgar's 'The Apostles' was given by the North Staffs District Choral Society in the Victoria Hall, Hanley, on March 30, the composer himself conducting. That Mr. J. Whewall, the Society's conductor, had trained his forces with the most satisfactory results is evident by the opinion of the distinguished composer, who, in a letter to the secretary of the Society, says: 'The choruses, so far as my own experience goes, have never been sung with more intelligence, pathos, and force, and I thank each individual member for the loving care bestowed upon the preparation of my work.' High commendation indeed, coming from such a quarter. The solo music was also admirably interpreted by Miss Muriel Foster, Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Mr. W. J. Ineson, Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. Andrew Black. The good work being done by this Society received special attention in our issue of April, 1903.

MAX Reger.

Readers of German musical journals will have noticed that no living composer, with the single exception of Richard Strauss, occupies at present such a share of the German critics' attention as Herr Max Reger. Concerts wholly or chiefly devoted to his music are given generally 'with the assistance of the composer,' in most of the music centres of Germany, and the opinions expressed thereon by the sages of the Press are as diverting and wholesome in their variety as any that can be quoted from the standard biographies of Schumann or Berlioz, Wagner or Brahms. One thing in the midst of this confusion of 'expert' opinions seems certain: Reger is evidently one of those rare personalities of commanding power who divide into two opposite camps the musicians and music-lovers who take—or fancy they take—an interest in the present and future of their art. There are the enthusiastic admirers on the one hand, and the unbelieving detractors on the other; the prophets of their hero's great future, and the augurs of ill-omen who foresee the early collapse of the Reger 'boom.'

Max Reger

(Photograph by Gebrüder Lützel, Munich.)

Max Reger was born on March 19, 1873, at Brand, near Weiden, Bavaria. His father was Josef Reger, a musician who taught his art to the pupils of the Roman Catholic Präparanden-Anstalt at Weiden. Young Max received his first pianoforte lessons from his mother; his father, and a Herr D. Lindner, taught him the organ. After passing through the Weiden Realschule, he entered the Präparanden-Anstalt to qualify himself for a school teacher; but a visit to Bayreuth made such an impression upon the young enthusiast that he decided to devote his life to music. He studied composition, and submitted his first efforts in the way of orchestral pieces to Herr Hugo Riemann. The highly favourable opinion expressed thereon by that distinguished theoretician prompted Reger to become Riemann's pupil, first at Sondershausen, and subsequently at Wiesbaden. In 1898 a serious illness forced him to return to the parental roof; but in 1900 he moved to Munich, where he now resides. Quite recently he was appointed professor of harmony, counterpoint, and organ at the Königliche Akademie der Tonkunst, and (as successor to the lately-deceased Professor Max von Erdmannsdorfer) conductor of the famous Porgesscher Gesangverein in the Bavarian capital.

One of the most remarkable features of Reger's creative activity is his tremendous industry, his latest published work bearing the high Opus number 86. Needless to say, this almost Schubertian productivity is only possible because of his marvellous facility. In this connection Reger is reputed to have written the aforesaid Op. 86, a most elaborate set of variations with fugue, for two pianofortes (four hands), on a theme by Beethoven, without any sort of preliminary 'sketching,' straightaway in finished 'engraver's copy.' And here it may be mentioned that he has so far shown a great affection, and a quite exceptional gift for handling the variation form, some German critics going so far as to place him in this respect on a line with Bach, Beethoven, Schubert, and Brahms. However this may be, we believe his works include already more sets of variations than even Brahms produced during his lifetime. Reger's organ music presents difficulties to the player such as have never been known before. According to some of his compatriots, Reger is doing for the organ what Wagner did for dramatic music. At their fifth 'Organistentag' (Organists' meeting) held at Bielefeld on December 28, 1904, German organists paid him the signal compliment of arranging a sacred concert devoted only to Bach and Reger, when Herr Gustav Beckmann performed the symphonic fantasia and fugue (Op. 57) which is dedicated to him, a remarkable work which is said to have been inspired by Dante's 'Inferno.' The young composer's staunchest champion seems to be Professor Waldemar Meyer, of Berlin, who during the past winter season gave three performances of a representative Reger programme, including a string quartet in D minor (Op. 74), a Ciacona from a G minor sonata for violin alone (Op. 42), and a string trio in A (Op. 77B).

Reger's compositions include eighteen works for the organ—some of them comprising as many as a dozen large pieces—in which the influence of Bach is strongly evident. Of these his fifty-two choral preludes (Op. 67) appear most likely to find immediate favour, on account of their comparative simplicity. There are also two sonatas (Op. 33 and 60), a fantasia and fugue on BACH, a set of variations (Op. 73), and about half-a-dozen most elaborate fantasias on old German chorales (Op. 27, 30, 40, and 52 I., II., III.). His chamber music includes four sonatas for violin solo (Op. 42), which seem to take us back to Bach—for what composer since Bach has written sonatas of any artistic value for the violin alone? Then we have two romances for violin and pianoforte, sonatas for violin and pianoforte, violoncello and pianoforte, clarinet and pianoforte, a string quartet, a serenade for flute, violin and viola, a trio for violin, viola, and violoncello, and many elaborate works for pianoforte solo. He has already written 200 songs, of which his 'Schlichte Weisen' (simple tunes)

(Op. 76) seem destined to become popular. Of his choral music, three sacred cantatas based on old German chorales, and intended for the chief festival days of the Protestant Church, deserve notice. They are 'Vom Himmel hoch, da komm' ich her,' for four solo voices, two solo violins, organ, chorus of children, and congregation (for Christmas), 'O wie selig seid ihr doch, ihr Frommen,' for mixed chorus and congregation, string orchestra and organ (for All Saints), and 'O Haupt voll Blut und Wunden,' for contralto and tenor (or soprano) soli, solo violin, solo oboe, organ, and mixed chorus (for Good Friday). The choral parts in these church cantatas are comparatively simple, because to them is assigned the cantus firmus, while the variations and ornamentations are given to the instruments. It may be readily imagined that these compositions are modern imitations of Bach's wonderful church cantatas. In fact, the influence of that master is everywhere to be traced in Reger's music, and what better, deeper, sounder foundation could a composer of Reger's undoubtedly gifts build upon than the incomparable Johann Sebastian?

The work which seems to exercise the critics most at present is undoubtedly the violin and pianoforte sonata in C (Op. 72). To some it is a 'quite wonderful (ganz wundervolles) work, which leads us into worlds of feeling never trod before, and opens for us vistas new, great, and astonishing' (according to Herr Ferdinand Pfohl in the Hamburger Nachrichten); while other critics confess dejectedly or contemptuously (according to their mood) that they 'cannot understand in the least what it is all about.' It is certainly a strange and wild effusion, a sort of challenge to the critics—and even more. For Reger seems to have written it to insult his detractors. There are in the first movement two snatches of themes, several times repeated, which in the German nomenclature of the notes 'spell' the words 'Schafe' (sheep), and 'Affe' (monkey), thus:

This is a bad joke, which however has the merit of brevity. An indulgent public which pardons Strauss's ponderous fooling in the 'Antagonists' section of his 'Heldenleben' and the 'Nursery' scene in his 'Domestica,' will doubtless extend a similar courtesy to the younger and no less 'serious' artist.

Reger's most important contribution to chamber music, the above-mentioned string quartet in D minor (Op. 74B), was produced for the first time at Frankfort-on-Main in December last; it was repeated at a Reger concert given on January 6 by the enterprising Musikalische Gesellschaft at Essen-Rhur. On both occasions it seems to have made a great impression on serious-thinking musicians and amateurs, while at Professor Meyer's three Berlin performances the impression deepened with each successive hearing of this 'most difficult quartet in existence,' as it has been called. One of the leading conductors of the Rhineland, who is also a tremendous Bach enthusiast, went so far as to express to the present writer his conviction that the work is 'one of the most beautiful things since Beethoven!' and that Reger, if not a whole, is at least half a Bach redivivus!

Reger does not seem to have published anything for the orchestra alone, but he is at present completing a symphony, the first performance of which has been promised to the aforesaid Gesellschaft at Essen.

Reger is a striking figure, even physically, for he stands well over six feet, and he has a powerful head with a lofty brow; a disdainful mouth betrays strength of character. He is reported to be a great humorist, and his boisterous fun seems to show itself in his 'Six Burlesques' and in many a merry scherzo. Who will be the first to introduce the young master to an English audience?

Reviews.

Worship Song with accompanying tunes. Edited by W. Garrett Horder.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The Rev. W. Garrett Horder is an earnest student of, and an acknowledged authority on sacred poetry. His cultured taste and wide catholicity are manifested in his anthology 'The treasury of American sacred song' and the hymnal 'Worship Song,' of which latter collection the book before us forms its natural complement. Mr. Horder mistrusts the 'musical editor.' He says, in the preface to his book, 'the result of such single musical editorship has usually been the inclusion of too large a number of the editor's own compositions, and even when that has not been the case the selection of tunes has been determined too much by his individual judgment.' The first part of this indictment may be true, but, on the other hand, a hymnal may be weakened by not having an experienced, even a non-composing musician at the helm. In the present instance the friendly criticism of such an editor might have prevented the separation of so time-honoured a mating as Bishop Ken's Evening Hymn with the tune 'Tallis' Canon,' and might have avoided the 'tinkered' version of 'Bedford' by adopting the more beautiful triple rhythm as written by its composer. We also notice that Hewlett's fine tune 'Dalkeith' has been rhythmically 'touched up' and so, apparently, has 'Holy Cross' (No. 423); and a future edition of the book would be more complete with an index of composers' names.

'Worship Song' contains 803 hymns, but as the tunes number 627 some of the latter have been repeated, in some instances even four, five, and six times. In so large a collection this repetition was almost inevitable, and no objection could be raised thereto in the case of what may be termed 'common tunes,' those that are not specially associated with any particular words; but it seems a pity not to have restricted the use of such tunes as Oakley's 'Abends,' E. J. Hopkins's 'Ellers,' Sullivan's 'St. Gertrude,' Hewlett's 'Dalkeith' to the words for which they were specially written. Regret may also be expressed at the omission of such standard tunes as 'Warrington' (an ideal tune for 'Jesus shall reign where'er the sun'), 'Trinity' (by Giardini), 'Martyrdom,' and 'Wareham.' A large number of new tunes has been specially contributed to the book by nearly thirty different composers, about a score being the handiwork of Mr. Henry Baker, author of the devotional tune 'Hesperus,' which has worthily found its way into many hymnals. Time alone will tell how large a proportion of these new strains will endure themselves 'to the great congregation'; but a careful examination of the new tunes in each freshly compiled hymnal as it comes from the press forces upon the mind the conviction that 'the old is better.' There is, however, so much that is really good in the music of 'Worship Song' as to justify words of warm commendation. It is a collection of which any editor might be proud, and Mr. Horder is to be congratulated upon having thus crowned the success of his labours in the issue of a hymnal that is distinctly practical, worshipful, and meritorious.

Nocturne. For the pianoforte (Op. 13). By Maud Matras.
[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

There is a touch of the tragic in this piece which will appeal to pianists of an imaginative turn of mind. The piece begins forte and ends fortissimo, and although quiet passages occur by way of contrast, stern determination and strong passion prevail. It is no summer's night that the composer depicts, but the tempestuous darkness of mid-winter.

Hector Berlioz (1803-1869): Sa Vie et ses Œuvres. Par J. G. Prod'homme.

(Paris: Librairie Ch. Delagrave.)

M. Alfred Bruneau, in a brief preface to this volume, refers to certain new documents mentioned in it, also to facts little known or even unknown, so that he regards the book as completing the 'moving Odysee of the Mémoires.' Then although those Mémoires are profoundly interesting, some fancy is mixed with the facts. There seems, for instance, no ground whatever for the story of Habeneck's coolly taking a pinch of snuff at a most critical moment when conducting Berlioz's 'Requiem'; again, Berlioz himself says in one place, after relating an anecdote: 'Ceci est un mensonge et résulte de la tendance qu'ont toujours les artistes à écrire des phrases qu'il croient à effet.' M. Prod'homme presents his readers with a very impartial and at the same time very interesting account of the man and the composer. The writer inspires confidence because, however much he admires his hero, his compositions, and his writings, he is not blind to the fact that Berlioz was not in all points perfect. Throughout the volume we find not only the author's opinions, but many extracts from the works of important writers—Julien, Noufflard, &c.—and from newspapers favourable or otherwise. One long extract is particularly interesting and valuable, viz., on Berlioz as a writer for the orchestra, from H. Lavoix's 'Histoire de l'Instrumentation.' In connection with the performances of 'Les Troyens à Carthage,' at the Théâtre-Lyrique, in addition to serious notices of the work M. Prod'homme gives some humorous specimens. Le Nain Jaune spoke of 'Les Troyens! paroles et tapage de M. Berlioz,' also of the composer, who, 'having during fifteen years overthrown musicians, has at last overthrown himself.'

Space prevents us from entering into detail, but we must refer to the useful and complete bibliography of Berlioz's musical and literary works. Of the former the dates of production, names of publishers, and other details are given. Then there is a list of 'Ouvrages à consulter sur Berlioz,' in which not only French, but German and English works are named, as are also musical papers containing articles. Of the latter, the Athenæum and The Musical Times are mentioned; but the Monthly Musical Record, containing various articles by Professor Niecks and other writers, also the Musical World, in which Mr. J. S. Shedlock gave a series of articles with illustrations of both parts of Berlioz's 'Les Troyens,' might have been included in the list.

Thy Presence. When parted. Songs for Soprano or Tenor. Composed by G. J. Bennett.

Just before Bedtime. Six songs for children. Words by Elphinstone Thorpe. Music by J. M. Capel. [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Cultured vocalists will find two grateful mediums for their skill in Dr. Bennett's settings of Goethe's and Uhland's poems, of which the original German is given as well as English version, the latter being by Miss Elizabeth Wilson. 'Thy Presence' contains an impassioned climax, and could be made effective in the concert room. 'When parted' is cast in a more meditative mould, but its melody is none the less attractive.

In not a few cases songs for children are not childlike, but this cannot be said of the series called 'Just before Bedtime,' a title presumably chosen as a hint concerning the most appropriate time for their performance. Words and music are studiously simple, and as each song relates a little story, and has passages to be sung in choral union, the attention of little folks is likely to be won and sustained in the singing thereof.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Handel ruled supreme at the Royal Albert Hall on March 30, the works chosen for this occasion being 'Acis and Galatea' and the 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day.' The statement that the former had not been sung previously by the Royal Choral Society seemed almost incredible, particularly as the choruses afford special opportunities for effect by a large body of voices. As will be surmised the 'Wretched lovers' and other choral numbers were sung with magnificent precision and also with attention to light and shade, whereby the performance was made memorable. Equal justice was rendered to the 'Ode,' the chorus 'From harmony, from heavenly harmony' in particular drawing forth a superb volume of vocal tone. Madame Sobrino sang charmingly as Galatea, and in the 'Ode' gave a most expressive interpretation of the air 'What passion cannot music raise and quell.' The other solo parts were also admirably interpreted by Messrs. William Green, John Harrison, and Harry Dearth; the last-named specially distinguishing himself in a fine rendering of 'O ruddier than the cherry.' Sir Frederick Bridge conducted with true Handelian enthusiasm.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

Eastern idiom played an important part at the Philharmonic concert on March 29 at Queen's Hall, for the principal works were Mr. Arthur Hervey's tone-poem 'In the East' and M. Rimsky-Korsakoff's symphony entitled 'Antar.' It was the first performance of the former work in London since its production at the Cardiff Festival of 1904. The favourable impressions made by the music on that occasion were distinctly deepened by a second hearing, and the composition is so picturesque and prompting to the imagination of the listener that it should become familiar in many concert-rooms. The same can hardly be said of M. Korsakoff's symphony, the weaknesses of which became more apparent with further acquaintance. A feature of the evening was the début in London of Señor Pablo Casals, a violoncellist of artistic perception and finished style, who was heard to advantage in M. Saint-Saëns's concerto in A minor. The vocalist was Miss Lillie Wormald.

The concert on April 13 does not call for detailed notice. Dvorák's symphony in D was revived, and Sir Edward Elgar's descriptive overture 'In the South' added to the Philharmonic repertoire. The latter work received an effective interpretation under Dr. Cowen's careful direction, while Mendelssohn's exquisite scherzo in G minor was played with delightful crispness and delicacy. Herr Bronislaw Huberman played with great verve and brilliancy in Tchaikovsky's violin concerto in D, and Miss Antonia Dolores sang the 'Shadow song' from Meyerbeer's 'Dinorah.'

The Directors and Conductor of the Philharmonic Society should sternly repress all encores; by so doing they would earn the gratitude of the great majority of those who attend their concerts.

At the meeting of the Musical Association held at Messrs. Broadwood's, on April 4, an interesting paper was read by Mrs. Newmarch on 'The Development of National Opera in Russia: Rimsky-Korsakoff (1844).'

Mr. J. C. B. Tirbutt, Lecturer in music at University College, Reading, read an interesting paper on 'Municipalities and Music' before the Incorporated Society of Musicians (London section) on April 8.

London Concerts.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

A NEW CONDUCTOR.

The illness of Dr. Hans Richter prevented him from conducting the specially arranged Beethoven-Wagner concert given on March 27 at Queen's Hall, but in consequence of the great chief's regrettable absence, Londoners had an opportunity of becoming acquainted with yet another continental conductor of repute—Herr Franz Beidler. This musician holds the baton of the Imperial Opera House, Moscow, and last year attained to the distinction of conducting the second cycle of the 'Ring' at Bayreuth. As the London Symphony orchestra was engaged, and by reason of the music being thoroughly familiar, Herr Beidler had a good opportunity of showing his skill and the audience of estimating his abilities. His conducting qualities are considerable, and the excerpts from Wagner (whose music formed the greater part of the programme) were finely interpreted. The interpretation, however, of Beethoven's 'Eroica' symphony lacked distinction.

The fourth of Mr. Charles Williams's interesting series of orchestral concerts—that held at Queen's Hall on April 7—gained special distinction by reason of the masterly rendering of Mendelssohn's violin concerto by Mischa Elman. The performance of the work by this wonderful boy of twelve years was astounding in its absolute triumph over technical difficulties, and in the poetic feeling which this soulful little fellow threw into every bar of the music. Master Elman's performance of Saint-Saëns's 'Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso' was equally wonderful. It was pleasant to listen once more to Schumann's delightful B flat symphony, a work not often played in London. Why?

The presence of Dr. Richard Strauss, as conductor of his 'Symphonia Domestica,' at the concert of the Queen's Hall orchestra attracted an immense audience to Queen's Hall on April 1. This repetition performance, if less strenuous than that under Mr. Wood's direction, did not alter the impressions of the work recorded in the April issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES. Who can say if it will take a permanent place among the masterpieces of music? The remainder of the concert (conducted by Mr. Wood) included the 'Midsummer-Night's Dream' and 'Academic' overtures, and Bach's Suite in B minor for flute and strings, the solo instrument being in the capable hands of Mr. Albert Fransella.

A very hearty welcome was extended to Mr. Georg Henschel on his appearance at Queen's Hall on April 11 to conduct the now famous London Symphony Orchestra. A truly magnificent performance of the 'Meistersinger' overture was given, and the execution and interpretation of the second symphony (in D) of Brahms were of the highest kind of excellence. Miss Evangeline Anthony played Max Bruch's violin concerto with fair success, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies gave with fine effect Wotan's farewell from 'Die Walküre.'

Miss Dora Bright gave the second of her concerto concerts at Bechstein Hall on April 3. The works selected were those by Mozart in D minor, Schumann in A minor, and Ferdinand Hiller in F sharp minor. Miss Bright, who was assisted by a contingent of the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald, played with her usual artistry, but such programmes are a mistake.

The programme of the Strolling Players' Amateur Orchestral Society for the concert at Queen's Hall on April 6 included a concert overture not previously performed, by Mr. G. Halsey. This proved to be a bright and spirited work, to which justice was done by the orchestra under the direction of Mr. William Shakespeare.

Miss Grace Sunderland and Mr. Frank Thistleton concluded their excellent series of concerts of old chamber music on March 28, at Broadwood's concert hall. As at the previous performances, the programme contained several little-known works, first performances in this country being claimed for two sonatas of one movement each for organ, two violins, and violoncello by Mozart, now published in the Köchel edition, Nos. 224 and 336.

CHAMBER CONCERTS.

Mr. Joseph Holbrooke gave one of his interesting chamber concerts on March 27 at the Salle Erard, at which he took part in the first performance of his symphonic quartet for pianoforte and strings. Originally written in 1896 as a trio, the work in its present form opens with a well-knit Allegro appassionato, which leads into an expressive Larghetto that charms the ear and stirs the imagination. The third and last movement is gay and spirited, and is worked up to a brilliant Finale. Other novelties of the evening were a movement from Borodine's unfinished quartet, and a Réverie for violin, viola, and violoncello (Op. 20), by Mr. Frederick Kessler. The excerpt proved a characteristic example of the early-Russian school; music full of earnest intentions but often weak in expression. The Réverie is a grief-stricken piece, which seems to hug its own misery.

The distinguishing feature of the concert given by the Cathie quartet on March 28 at Æolian Hall was the production of a quartet in E minor by Mr. John B. McEwen, whose previous work in this form in the key of A minor, produced last year, will be remembered by many musicians. The E minor quartet is somewhat restless in tonality, but contains several remarkably effective passages, its most striking movement being the Finale. The work thereby leaves a favourable impression. At the conclusion of the performance Mr. McEwen was summoned to the platform and heartily applauded.

Words of praise and encouragement are due to the Ingleton trio—Miss Evelyn Ingleton, Mr. E. van Praag, and Mr. Bernard Reynolds—who gave a concert on April 13, at Broadwood's Concert Hall; and to The New Trio—Messrs. Epstein, Zimmerman and Ludwig—who made their first appearance thus combined on April 3 at Æolian Hall, and played again with excellent results on the 16th of the same month.

VOCAL RECITALS.

Mr. Manuel Garcia, grandson of the famous centenarian, gave a vocal recital at Æolian Hall on April 5. The event bore witness to the truth of the theory of heredity, as his recital was one long lesson on the supreme value of vocal cultivation and earnest study. Mr. Garcia chiefly attracted Continental composers, but his programme included Purcell's 'Ah! how pleasant 'tis to love,' and 'I'll sail upon the Dog-star,' both songs being interpreted with artistic perception of their old-time characteristics.

Miss Agnes Nicholls, accompanied by Mr. Hamilton Harty, gave an interesting vocal recital on April 5 at Bechstein Hall, which merits a few words of praise. The popular singer's selection of songs was admirably comprehensive, and included Dr. Somervell's clever song-cycle, 'Love in Springtime,' in which the gifted vocalist was particularly successful, especially her renderings of 'Oh, what comes over the sea' and 'Dainty little maiden.' Two songs, severally entitled 'Sea-wrack' and 'Bonfires,' by Mr. Harty, proved uncommon and dramatic, and another clever new song of piquant character, composed by Mr. Cyril Scott, was oddly entitled 'Don't come in, Sir, please.'

VIOLIN RECITALS.

The extraordinary success achieved by Herr Kubelik and Miss Marie Hall would seem to have not only increased the taste for violin playing, but to have stimulated other artists, and violin recitals are now as numerous as those devoted to pianoforte music. The new Dutch violinist, Herr Leon Sametini, gave a second recital at Bechstein Hall on March 30, when he may be said to have deepened the favourable impression he made on his first appearance in this country. Associated with Herr J. Presburg, an excellent reading was given of Brahms's sonata in A (Op. 100), and although he was less successful in music by Bach, Herr Sametini is manifestly a young artist full of promise.

After an absence of two years M. Jacques Thibaud reappeared in London on April 3 at an orchestral concert at Queen's Hall conducted by Señor Arbos. He followed this appearance by giving a recital in the same hall on April 8. On the first occasion M. Thibaud was heard to great advantage in Max Bruch's concerto in G minor (No. 1), playing the beautiful slow movement with beauty of tone and chaste expression. At his recital his principal work was Mozart's concerto in E flat, which proved an advantageous medium for the French violinist's refined and finished style.

M. Trebini, who made his début at Bechstein Hall on April 14, and not yet out of his teens, is another aspirant for fame. When he has come to manhood's estate he will doubtless be a more matured artist.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The students of the Royal Academy of Music gave an excellent account of themselves at their concert at Queen's Hall on April 4. Directed by their principal, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, they played with notable intelligence in Smetana's symphonic poem 'Výšehrad,' and entered with zest into the humour and spirit of a neatly-written overture called 'A Connemara Revel' by their fellow-student, Arnold E. T. Bax. Two MS. songs by Margaret Bennett testified to taste and imagination, particularly that named 'Imogen.' Other features of the concert were the brilliant playing of Percy Hughes, a Welsh boy, in Weber's Concertstück, and Wilfrid Peppercorn's clever rendering of Boëllmann's theme and variations for the violoncello.

The following awards have been made at the Royal Academy of Music. The Charles Mortimer Prize, (Composition), to Herbert J. Boden (London). The Louisa Hopkins Memorial Prize (Pianoforte), to Margaret Bennett (Stoke-on-Trent).

NEW RHAPSODIES BY LISZT.

Herr Wilhelm Backhaus gave distinction to his coming-off-age concert on April 4, at Queen's Hall, by playing for the first time in England two of the recently-discovered quartet of Hungarian rhapsodies by Liszt. These rhapsodies were found, with some smaller pieces by the same composer, on the shelves of a music-publisher named Nador Balman, in Budapest, and now form part of the 'Universal Edition' published by Mr. E. Ascherberg. If they are not in any sense important works which add to Liszt's reputation, they are short and characteristic examples of his style. The clever young artist rendered them with all needful verve, but was heard to greater advantage in Beethoven's E flat and Tschaiakovsky's B flat minor pianoforte concertos. The orchestral portions of these works were excellently played by the North London Orchestral Society, under the able direction of Mr. Lennox Clayton.

MADAME WANDA LANDOWSKA'S RECITALS.

This Polish artist has given recitals both on the harpsichord and pianoforte in various cities abroad, and report spoke of her in highly favourable terms. At her first recital given at Queen's Hall, on April 11, Madame Landowska proved herself worthy of all the good things that had been said about her. The programme was devoted to 'Johann Sebastian Bach and his Contemporaries.' The Leipzig master was represented by his Suite Anglaise in E minor, minus the Allemande. The rendering of the music was so full of life and character, so finished as regards technique, that to complain of this omission seems somewhat ungallant. Excisions in a very long work may be forgiven, but in the present instance there was surely no such excuse. Among the contemporaries represented were Handel, Domenico Scarlatti, Zipoli, Durante, &c., and all the selections were interesting and admirably interpreted. The majority of the pieces were played upon a modern Pleyel pianoforte, the harpsichord being used for a delightful set of compositions by Couperin entitled 'Les folies Françaises,' and two other quaint numbers. Bach, and some sonatas of Domenico Scarlatti, sound well on the pianoforte, but the Couperin are out-and-out harpsichord pieces. At the second recital, on April 15, the programme was of an historical character. First came Voltes by Byrd, Praetorius, Chambonnières and Morley on the harpsichord, next, Laender and Waltzer by Schubert, on an old pianoforte of Schubert's period, and finally modern waltzes, ending with a group by Chopin.

THE BACH CHOIR'S PERFORMANCE OF 'EVERYMAN.'

This organization gave their sixty-sixth concert on April 12 at Queen's Hall. The chief work brought forward was the cantata 'Everyman,' which was given under the direction of the composer, Dr. Walford Davies, who is the conductor of the Society. The performance was a very careful one, and was often deeply impressive. The choral portions would perhaps have been even more effective if the male-voice section of the choir had more resonant voices. The work was ably conducted (entirely from memory) by Dr. Davies. The soloists were Miss Muriel Foster, Miss Gleeson-White, Mr. Gregory Hast, and Mr. H. Lane-Wilson. Mr. W. H. Harris was organist, and Mr. Charles Jacoby led the orchestra.

A new overture to the work, 'written especially for the occasion,' was performed. Although this introduction is permeated by the mysticism of the subject, it cannot be said to have produced much effect, and it did not seem to lead naturally to the succeeding section of the work. Another hearing however may make its meaning clearer. Bach's church cantata 'O light everlasting' was performed as a second part.

Much credit is due to the students and professors of the London Academy of Music for the spirited and intelligent revival at St. George's Hall, on April 12 and 15, of Racine's sacred tragedy of 'Athalie,' with Mendelssohn's music, given with the scenery and costumes designed for the first performance in England by the same institution in 1900. The choruses were excellently sung with appropriate action, the chief solos being ably rendered by Miss Grace Butt and Madame Blanche Newcombe. The orchestra also was good, especially in the Overture and 'War march of the priests.' Mr. Henry Beauchamp was an alert and skilful conductor. Although it is not in our province to deal with the dramatic part of the performance, mention may be made of Miss Olive Kennett (Athalie), Miss Frances Sykes (Josabeth), Mr. William Stewart (Abner) and Miss Kate Neill (Joash). The stage direction was in the experienced hands of Mr. Charles Fry, who appeared as Joad, the High Priest.

The successful series of Curtius Club concerts at Bechstein Hall was concluded on April 8 by Miss Susan Strong, who, assisted by Mr. Korbay at the pianoforte, sang a selection of songs ranging from a charming air from Haydn's 'Orpheus and Eurydice' to two examples by Mr. Fritz Delius and Dr. MacDowell.

Two performances of Elgar's 'Caractacus' took place in London during the month of April—by the Finsbury Choral Association, at the Northern Polytechnic on April 6, under Mr. Allen Gill's inspiring direction; and at Queen's Hall, on April 10, by the London Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Arthur Fagge.

Competitions.

ISLE OF MAN.

The three days' musical competitions organized by the Isle of Man Fine Arts and Industrial Guild were held at Douglas on March 21, 22, and 23. The report recently issued in a pamphlet of seventy-one pages bears witness to the comprehensiveness of the scheme and its high educational value. The Manx Choir (Miss Cannell) gained the chief choral prize, the test-pieces being the first chorus in 'Spring' (Haydn) and 'I love the jocund dance' (Corder). A concert was given by the combined choirs, assisted by Mr. Harry Wood's orchestra. The first part of the programme included a portion of Haydn's 'Seasons,' conducted by Mr. R. H. Wilson, of Manchester, who also adjudicated, having as his colleagues Mr. P. Leslie Agnew (London), Mr. Westlake Morgan (Bangor), and Mr. G. H. Gregory (Boston, Lincolnshire).

LEIGH (LANCASHIRE).

The seventh annual Eisteddfod was held in the Co-operative Hall, Leigh, on April 1. The principal event of the afternoon was a competition for mixed-voice choirs of twenty-five to forty voices, the test-piece being Stainer's anthem 'What are these.' Five choirs competed, Leigh Wesleyan being successful. Great interest was taken at the evening meeting in the competition for male-voice choirs of thirty to forty-five voices. Ten choirs competed, the prize (ten guineas and silver cup) being awarded to the Wigan Harmonic Male-Voice Chorus, which gained 100 points out of a possible 105; Warrington Male-Voice Choir being second with 98 points, and the Nelson Arion Prize Glee Union third with 97 points, the test-piece being 'The Martyrs of the Arena.' The tone of the winners was very round and sonorous, whilst their expression was convincing. Mr. Robert W. Baker, of Manchester, adjudicated.

STRATFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

This well-organized scheme still prospers in the East of London. The festival was held on April 4, 6, 8, 10, and 15. Almost every branch of musical study was catered for, and the entries generally were numerous. As usual the pianoforte-playing was one of the chief and most satisfactory features. This branch is divided into numerous sections. The gold medal offered to previous prize-winners was won by Miss Greta Gingell, of Epping, the test-piece being Chopin's Scherzo in C sharp minor. The Caxton Choral Society (Mr. Alfred Sears) gained the challenge shield, and St. Columba's Church Choir gained the male-voice choir prize. Concerts by the prize-winners were given on April 18, at which Lady Palmer distributed prizes to the Juniors and Sir Frederick Bridge to the Seniors. There were eight adjudicators, all well-known in the musical profession.

LADIES' CHORAL COMPETITION.

A choral competition for female voices was held at the Kensington Town Hall on April 6. Mr. Walter Ford was the judge. In Class I. (limited to church choirs), in which five choirs competed, the piece selected was 'Lift the trumpet' (Henry Smart). St. Peter's, Cranley Gardens (Mr. E. Read), won the first prize, and St. Philip's, Kensington (Mr. W. H. Hickox), the second. In Class II., in which four choirs competed, the two-part song 'Orpheus with his lute' (Haton) was taken; St. Michael's won the first prize and St. John's, Wilton Road (The Hon. Richard Strutt), the second. In Class III., for which four choirs competed, the three-part song 'Sweet day so cool' (G. A. Macfarren) was sung; St. John's secured the first prize and St. Michael's, North Kensington (Miss C. E. Denison), the second. In Class IV., for which six choirs competed, the piece selected to be read at sight was 'It was a lover and his lass' (A. Herbert Brewer); in this, Mrs. Layton's choir gained the first prize, and St. John's the second. In Class V., for which two choirs competed, the three-part song 'To a Skylark' (Charles H. Lloyd) was sung; Mrs. Layton's choir was successful, and the same choir carried off the prize in Class VI. (two choirs competing), with the four-part song 'My true love hath my heart' (W. A. C. Cruickshank) as the test-piece. At the conclusion of the competitions, the Mayor of Kensington (Mr. Percy Gates) distributed the prizes.

NORTHAMPTON.

The seventh of the series of annual competitions promoted by the Hon. Mrs. C. R. Spencer was held on April 8 and 15. The junior competitions took place on the first day and the adult competitions on the second. There were sections for pianoforte, sight-singing, vocal quartets, choral societies in five classes, and for male-voice choirs.

The Earl's Barton Baptists (Mr. W. A. Hast) gained the first place in three of the chief choral classes. The orchestral classes brought forward nine small bands. Mr. T. Tertius Noble, of York Minster, adjudicated. A concert wound up the proceedings, and the combined choirs sang Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion,' under Mr. S. P. Waddington. The prizes were distributed by H. H. Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein.

BRIGG AND GRIMSBY.

Competitions open to North and East Lincolnshire were held at Brigg on April 10 and 11, and at Grimsby under the same auspices on April 12. The leading spirits in both events were Mr. Gervase Cary-Elwes and his wife, Lady Winefride Cary-Elwes, and the Hon. Everard Feilding. At Brigg the Saxby Choral Society won the premier position in the mixed-voice class. The male-voice choirs did not satisfy Dr. Coward, who adjudicated. He said that the test-piece, 'The Vintage Song' (Mendelssohn), was sung about as enthusiastically as a set of teetotallers would have sung it. The humour of the remark is that Dr. Coward is himself an enthusiastic teetotaler, and so the standard attained should have met his views. In another choral section the Waddingham Choral Society bore off the palm. An old man of eighty-five years of age took part in the folk-song competition. At an evening concert Mr. Cray conducted the combined choirs. There were some interesting results in the school sight-singing at Brigg. Mr. W. H. Leslie, whose labours to improve school-singing are effecting great good in various rural districts, was the examiner.

At Grimsby, town and village choirs met, and Dr. Coward was again the adjudicator. The Gunby choir, under Mrs. Massingberd, gained the first position in the principal choral section. Grimsby Spring Church choir was first in another section. At an evening concert the combined choirs sang Bach's 'I wrestle and pray,' under Mr. J. W. Smethurst, and Mr. Percy Grainger conducted two of his own compositions.

LONDON WORKING GIRLS' CLUBS.

The eighteenth annual singing competition of the London Working Girls' Clubs was held in the City of London Schools on April 15. Nine clubs competed in two classes. Most of the singing was distinguished by good tone and gratifying refinement. The chief prize, a challenge picture, was won by the St. Mary's, Borough, Club under Mr. Harvey Grace. The clubs combined to sing a short programme under the direction of Mr. H. J. B. Dart. Dr. McNaught adjudicated.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, April 15, 1905.

In connection with the centenary celebration of the death of Friedrich Schiller, the Concert Society recently gave a brilliant Schiller festival, under the direction of Ferdinand Löwe. The 'Meistersinger' overture was performed in praise of the poet as an ideal Meistersinger, also the choral symphony ending with the 'Ode to joy.' The eminent tenor singer Ludwig Hess sang some of Schubert's settings of Schiller's poems, while a prologue, recited by Gerhart Hauptmann, one of the most famous of modern German poets, gave to the whole a poetic glow. This festival concert created such a sensation that it was twice repeated. One of the repetitions was for youths and maidens, and thus became a poetic and musical school festival of the worthiest kind.

Among the novelties introduced by Löwe at the Concert Society, a small fantasia by Jean Sibelius, 'Der Schwan von Tuonela,' was the most acceptable. It is a fanciful, melancholy piece for English horn with orchestral accompaniment. The Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde has performed Berlioz's 'L'Enfance du Christ,' a work which hitherto has never been given here in its entirety. The rendering, under the direction of Franz Schalk, Court Opera capellmeister, was excellent.

The Society of Composers, of which Brahms was one of the founders and also honorary president, celebrated the anniversary of his death by a performance of several of his compositions, among which were his first published work, the pianoforte sonata in C, with Ignaz Brüll as excellent interpreter, the female choruses, with accompaniment of harp and horns, a string quartet, &c.

The concerts of Baroness Wolff Hommersee, i.e., Alice Barbi, have attracted large audiences. She has deeply impressed them, and moved them to tears by her singing of Brahms's lieder, and old Italian melodies.

The Berlin vocal quartet, consisting of the Mesdames De Jong and Behr, Messrs. Hess and Eweych, have achieved extraordinary success. They have noble, well-trained voices, and their ensemble is perfect. Their performances included Brahms's 'Zigeunerlieder,' Schumann's 'Spanisches Liederspiel,' and two merry lieder by Haydn.

Dr. Felix von Kraus, a native of Vienna, but living in Leipzig, has given, together with his wife, a brilliant concert. Dr. Kraus is excellent in songs of an epic nature, his wife in those of a lyrical character. Of other concerts, those by Miss Fanny Davies, the pianist Lamberino, and the violincellist Professor Julius Klengel deserve mention.

In chamber music we have had two striking novelties: a trio for strings by Max Reger, one of the most gifted of young German composers, and a violoncello sonata by Hans Pfitzner, which the composer performed with Friedrich Buxbaum, of the Court Opera.

Pfitzner's opera 'Die Rose vom Liebesgarten,' given under the direction of Mahler, did not make a great impression. The work contains many beauties, especially in the orchestra, but it lacks cohesiveness and dramatic fire. The libretto is confused, and the dramatis persone lack characterization and contrast. Pfitzner has a poetic nature; he only needs a good book to produce something excellent.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the eighth of the Queen's College concerts the Max Mossel quartet from Birmingham performed the nocturno from Borodin's string quartet in D and the whole of Arensky's quintet (Op. 51), which is distinguished by its most original variations on the old French song 'Sur le pont d'Avignon.' By-the-way, this version of the old air is in a minor key, while in many collections it is in a major key. Could any of your learned readers say which is the original, and where it is to be found in its most primitive form?

Several other concerts deserve to be recorded, notably that of the Ashley Choral Society, on March 28 (a new choir, conducted by Mr. A. M. Gifford); the Belfast Cecilian Society (at which Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' was the principal item); and a violin recital by Mr. George Vincent. Dr. Price has given weekly recitals on the Ulster Hall organ, and Dr. Koeller's orchestra has given performances every week at well-attended promenade concerts in one of the City Markets. There may not be in connection with these anything requiring special notice, but to be able to record them is very gratifying to one who desires the love of good music and the opportunity for hearing it to increase and multiply in such a community as ours. From this time till the sun enters Scorpio the songs of the birds will take the place of the voice and lute.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The City Choral Society's last concert took place in the Town Hall on March 30, when Granville Bantock's rhapsody for chorus and orchestra 'The Time-Spirit,' and Elgar's 'Gerontius' were performed. The first was given brilliantly by all concerned, and at the close of the performance the composer was twice called to the platform and enthusiastically cheered. The vocal principals were Madame Marie Brema, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Dalton Baker. The semi-chorus of eighteen singers, and chosen from Mr. Beard's select choir, were absolutely faultless, the whole performance of the 'Dream of Gerontius' being exceedingly fine. Mr. F. W. Beard conducted.

On April 6, at the final concert of the season, the Festival Choral Society presented two works new to Birmingham—Joseph H. Adams's cantata 'King Conor,' and Elgar's 'Caractacus.' 'King Conor' is a version of an old Irish legend by T. D. Sullivan. It tells of a wounded pagan Irish chieftain so moved by the relation of the story of the Crucifixion, that he forgets the restrictions laid upon him, and rushing forth to help or avenge the unknown Saviour, falls dead. The music is laid out for baritone solo, chorus, orchestra and organ. The theme that links the whole together is distinctly Irish in feeling, and altogether the composition has much merit. With Mr. Andrew Black as soloist the performance went exceedingly well, and the composer was called for and heartily cheered. Great interest attached to the performance of 'Caractacus,' the Town Hall being crowded. The work marks Dr. Elgar's transitional state between 'King Olaf' and 'Gerontius.' The vocal principals were Madame Agnes Nicholls, and Messrs. William Green, Francis Braun, and Andrew Black. On the whole the rendering was very fine, the orchestral work in particular being exceedingly well done. Dr. Sinclair conducted, and Mr. C. W. Perkins was at the organ.

At the last of the Halford concerts we were to have had Elgar's introduction and allegro for string orchestra, but a change was made, and the overture 'In the South' substituted. This work thus had a second performance during the season. Beethoven's ninth symphony (without the choral portion), the 'Leonora' overture No. 3, and Wagner's 'Parsifal' prelude were also in the programme. Miss Muriel Warwood, the young violinist, gave a brilliant exposition of the solo part in Ernst's so-called violin concerto in F sharp minor, and Mr. Halford conducted. The concert was a fitting conclusion to a fine series.

Mr. Percy Stranders, a popular pianist, gave a concert in the Masonic Hall on April 3; on April 8, the musical matinées were resumed at the rooms of the Royal Society of Artists, under the direction of Mr. Oscar Pollack; and on the same evening the Midland Institute School of Music held its annual students' orchestral concert. The highly interesting programme of the last-named comprised the 'Beatrice and Benedict' overture by Berlioz; the second concerto in D, for flute and orchestra, by Mozart, with Mr. F. H. Thomason as soloist; a prelude by Järnefelt, of the younger Finnish school; and Haydn's 'Surprise' symphony. Mr. Bantock conducted.

The only Saturday evening concert calling for notice was that of the Choral and Orchestral Association on April 1. Handel's 'Messiah' was performed, with Miss Laura Taylor, Miss Nellie Pritchard, and Messrs. Albert E. Benson and Thomas Howell as principals. Mr. Joseph H. Adams conducted. On April 13 the combined choirs of the churches in Handsworth gave a performance in St. James's Church of Gaul's 'Holy City.' Sixty ladies supplemented the boy trebles. Mr. Theodore Tearne, organist of St. James's, conducted, and the composer was at the organ.

The Moody-Manners Opera Company began a week's season at the Theatre Royal on April 3. The operas given included Meyerbeer's 'Huguenots,' which had not been heard here since 1893, and nearly ten years had elapsed since the last performance of 'Mignon,' also included in the representations.

The Wolverhampton Festival Choral Society's season ended on March 27 with a performance of Elgar's early cantata 'The Black Knight,' which evoked the enthusiasm of the audience. A miscellaneous selection followed, including Granville Bantock's 'The Time-Spirit,' and songs by Richard Strauss, sung by Mrs. Henry J. Wood, to the pianoforte accompaniment of Mr. Wood. Mr. Bantock conducted.—A performance of Haydn's 'Creation,' by the Walsall Philharmonic Union, on April 3, was the occasion of the successful local debut of Madame Minadieu in the soprano part. The other principals were Messrs. Webster Millar and Charles Knowles. Mr. Amos Keay ably conducted a successful performance.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

There was a crowded audience at the Victoria Rooms on April 1, when the North Bristol Choral Society gave a performance of 'Elijah.' Choir and band numbered 300, Mr. F. S. Gardner being the leader, with Mr. C. W. Stear (organist of the Church of the Holy Nativity) at the organ. The principal vocalists were Madame Maggie Purvis, Miss Margaret Stone, Mr. G. W. Brierley, and Mr. C. Knowles. The music for the Youth was nicely rendered by Master Cyril Broad, of the Holy Nativity choir. Under the direction of Mr. J. Bending (organist of St. Paul's Church), the oratorio was effectively presented.

The City Road choir on April 3 held their fifteenth annual concert in the presence of a large assembly at the Lecture Hall, Mr. A. E. Ellis conducting. Anthems and choruses were excellently interpreted, and there were solos by Miss Amy Perry, Miss Clara Aldersley, and Mr. H. Summerell.

At the Victoria Rooms on April 4 the last of the series of symphony concerts was given by the Bath Pump Room orchestra, augmented by players from Bristol. Mr. Max Heymann conducted admirable performances of Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony and Saint-Saëns's pianoforte concerto in G minor, Madame Edith Meadows being the soloist in the latter work. Mr. Norman O'Neill directed his 'Hamlet' overture, which afforded much gratification.

On April 8 the Clifton quintet gave their last concert of the season at the Victoria Rooms. The players were Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Hubert Hunt and Maurice Alexander (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), and Percy Lewis (violoncello). The chief compositions performed were César Franck's quintet in F minor, and Schumann's quartet in A major, and these received adequate interpretation.

The Choral Society of the Bristol Young Men's Christian Association, at a concert on April 10, rendered Cowen's 'Sleeping Beauty,' with Miss Edith Evans, Miss Maude England, Mr. Lewis Wensley, and Mr. F. H. Baber as soloists. A small but efficient band was led by Mr. Harold Bernard, and Mr. W. A. Barter conducted the performance, which gave pleasure to a large audience.

Bach's 'St. John' Passion was sung, with orchestral accompaniment, at Bristol Cathedral, on April 11. The cathedral choir was augmented by several ladies and gentlemen. Mr. Hubert Hunt (the cathedral organist) conducted, and his pupil, Mr. Warrell, was at the organ. The soprano solos were sung by the twelve boys. A creditable rendering of the work greatly impressed the large congregation, computed at 3,000 persons.

At the church of All Saints, Clifton, on April 14, Spohr's 'Calvary' was performed, with Mr. Cedric Bucknall at the organ, and an orchestra led by Mr. F. S. Gardner. The Rev. A. H. Hitchcock directed the performance, which was listened to with devout interest.

At the concert of the Bristol Choral Society, at Colston Hall, on April 15, Verdi's 'Requiem' and Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' were performed, under the direction of Mr. George Riseley, when the choir and band numbered 600 performers. Both works were admirably interpreted, the soloists being Madame Emily Squire, Madame Marie Brema, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. Dan Price.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Dublin Orchestral Society gave the fourth concert for this season on March 22, the principal item on the programme being Dvorák's 'From the New World' symphony. Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees played Böellmann's symphonic variations for violoncello and orchestra; the 'Leonore' No. 3 overture, and the 'Entrance of the Gods into Walhalla,' from 'Das Rheingold,' completed the programme. In the latter selection, the music of the Rhinemaidens was very well sung by the Misses Rafter, Eaton, and Edwards.

The Orpheus Choral Society gave their third and last concert for the season on April 11. A feature of the programme was the choral rondo, entitled 'Spring,' composed by the conductor of the society, Dr. J. C. Culwick, and performed at this concert for the first time. Madame Gertrude Drinkwater was the solo vocalist, M. Henri Verbrugghen the solo violinist, and Mr. Arthur Oulton accompanied.

Mr. Vincent O'Brien's choir gave a performance of Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Haydn's 'Creation' in the Rotunda, the solos being sung by various members of the choir.

Concerts have also been given by Miss Agatha Irelande, one of our best local vocalists, and Mr. William Harrison, a local violinist.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The performance by the Choral Union of the 'Golden Legend,' on March 20, was one of remarkable excellence. The chorus gave an admirable exhibition of high-class singing, while the quartet of soloists, Misses Muriel Foster and Lillie Wormald, Messrs. John Harrison and Charles Tree, was one hard to excel. A good orchestra, partly amateur, partly professional, led by Mr. Dambmann, gave a spirited rendering of the accompaniments, and Mr. T. H. Collinson conducted with his usual skill. Equally fine was the performance by Mr. Kirkhope's choir, on March 29, of Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' and Dvořák's 'Spectre's Bride.' This grand body of singers fully maintained their great traditions, and showed every good quality of choral work. The soloists, Madame Agnes Nicholls and Messrs. John Coates and Charles Tree, were above reproach. The band, led by Mr. Verbrugghen, gave a splendid rendering of the instrumental portions of the work, the whole performance being under Mr. Kirkhope's able guidance.

Mr. Winram's pupils' orchestra seems to grow in numbers and excellence, and his annual concert to become more interesting year by year. It would be difficult to conceive better amateur string playing, and much commendation is due to the teacher and conductor. Honourable mention must also be made of the loyal support given by the professional wind players. Performances of the 'Leonore' overture No. 3, and the Tannhäuser march must be singled out for special praise. Madame Kate Gray sang a choice selection of good songs in admirable style.

The sixth and last Denhof concert took place on March 25, and formed a fitting conclusion to this really great series. Mr. Denhof had for instrumental colleagues M. Zacharewich and Dr. Klengel, artists of the first rank, and the superb singing of Madame Camilla Landi was an enjoyable feature of the concert.

Mr. Stronach's Ladies' Choir gave an excellent rendering on March 6 of Barnett's 'The Wishing Bell,' and a miscellaneous programme, and had strong support from Messrs. Winram and Millar Craig.

The Portobello Choral Society (Mr. H. Douglas Archer, conductor) performed on March 31 Haydn's 'Spring' and the 'Hymn of Praise.' The choir of Fountainbridge Mission Church (where Mr. I. Grosset does a praiseworthy work in a somewhat neglected district) gave the cantatas 'Calvary' and 'The Land of Promise' with orchestral accompaniment and in capital style on March 30. Two choral societies gave their concerts on April 8—North Richmond Street United Free Church Musical Association (conductor, Mr. William Rae), 'Judas Maccabæus' and a miscellaneous second part, and the Western Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Gavin Godfrey), 'Elijah.' A most impressive and devotional rendering of Graun's 'Passion of our Lord' was given on April 14, in St. Mary's Cathedral, under the able direction of Mr. T. H. Collinson, in which the choir of the cathedral and an excellent orchestra, led by Mr. Dambmann, co-operated. The Amateur Orchestral Society quite upheld its reputation in a programme (on April 10) of a most ambitious nature, one of the items of which was Schubert's B minor symphony. A most successful appearance was made by Miss Jean Hore, who gave a very artistic reading of Max Bruch's second violin concerto, and the singing of Miss Nana Strachan was much admired. The concert reflected much credit on Mr. Collinson, who conducted.

That valuable musical prize, the Bucher Scholarship at Edinburgh University (£120 per annum for three years) has been gained by Mr. William B. Moonie. Professor Niecks has decided that Mr. Moonie is to pursue his studies at Frankfurt Conservatoire.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Mr. A. H. Gibbons, organist at Cirencester Abbey Church, and conductor of the Cirencester Choral Society, is to be heartily congratulated on the success of the annual concert given in the Corn Exchange on April 6. The programme included Sir Hubert Parry's 'Job,' Mr. Gibbons being fortunate enough to get the composer to conduct his work, and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' which was conducted by Mr. Gibbons. Mr. E. G. Woodward was the leader of a capable band, and Mr. A. H. Barnes rendered valuable aid at the organ. The soloists were Miss Hicks-Beach, Miss Wood, Mr. G. W. Brierley, Mr. James Capener, and Mr. H. Lane-Wilson. The Cirencester Choral Society, which, under Mr. Gibbons, has made remarkable progress, deserves every encouragement. As further evidence of the vitality of music in Cirencester and of the excellent feeling that exists there in musical circles, we may mention an admirable performance of Mr. Lee Williams's 'Last Night at Bethany,' given during Lent at the Abbey by the combined choirs of the Abbey and Watermoor, under the composer's personal direction.

The Newent Choral Society gave, on March 23, a successful performance of Gaul's 'Ruth,' Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer,' and selections from Mozart's 'Twelfth Mass.' The soloists were Misses Violet and Georgina Perry, Miss Boyd, and Mr. H. Brown, with Miss Hartland at the pianoforte and Miss Penwarden at the organ. Mr. Wargent proved an able conductor.

The choir of St. Catherine's Church, Gloucester, assisted by members of the Festival Class and Gloucester Choral Society, gave a good rendering of Stainer's 'Crucifixion' on April 13, with Mr. Keene at the organ.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

César Franck's 'Beatitudes' was given by the Philharmonic Society on March 21. The Welsh Choral Union performed on March 25 'The Golden Legend' and Harry Evans's 'The Victory of St. Garmon.' The dramatic power, poetic charm, and originality of Mr. Evans's cantata were fully revealed by the help of the excellent chorus, who sang splendidly under the composer's direction. Miss Evangeline Florence, Miss Maud Forester, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Emlyn Davies, and Mr. R. Wynne Jones were the soloists.

The Church Choir Association gave their annual concert on March 28 in St. George's Hall. The choir of 600 voices was drawn from about 30 churches, and the programme consisted of familiar anthems and solos. The volume of tone was sound, and Mr. Branscombe conducted with skill; Dr. Peace ably presided at the organ.

The Oxtun string orchestra played Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony on March 23, and the Societa Armonica, on April 4, performed Tchaikovsky's Suite for orchestra (No. 3), the Prelude and Liedestod from 'Tristan,' and the Prelude and Angel's Farewell from Elgar's 'Gerontius.' Miss Violet Simpson was the vocalist at the latter concert, and Miss Gladys Akeroyd proved herself to be an accomplished violinist.

The Liverpool and District Welsh Baptist Musical Festival took place at Everton on April 12, when the choir numbered 400 voices, and Mr. J. T. Jones conducted. The choral singing was excellent.

Mr. Ernst Schiever introduced on April 7, under the auspices of the Wirral Orchestral Society (of which he is conductor), a very remarkable boy violinist, aged fifteen years, named Vivian Burrows, who triumphed over the difficulties of Paganini's concerto (Op. 6).

Mr. Appleyard revived Astorga's seldom-heard 'Stabat Mater' at Rock Ferry on April 12, and the Southport Choral Society gave a meritorious performance of Berlioz's 'Faust' on April 11, with Miss Gleeson-White, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Herbert Brown as principals. Mr. J. C. Clarke conducted.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The beautiful Whitworth Hall of the Victoria University was crowded on March 25 to listen to, and applaud, a really excellent concert performance of 'Figaro' by the principals of the Royal Manchester College of Music. The principal, Dr. Brodsky, conducted.

The Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company fulfilled a week's engagement at our premier theatre, commencing April 10, with commercial and popular success of quite unexpected and most encouraging character.

I did not write the truth when I stated that the concerts at the Schiller Anstalt had finished their season's course. There was a fourth chamber concert on April 1. Mr. Wilhelm Backhaus and Mr. Carl Fuchs played the D minor sonata for pianoforte and violoncello of Ludwig Thuille, which Mr. Max Mayer and Mr. Carl Fuchs introduced a season or two ago. Perhaps the sonata may be followed by the composer's 'Romantic' overture, and his pianoforte quintet, both I know regarded favourably in Germany. Mr. Carl Fuchs and Mr. Backhaus contributed solos, the latter giving a remarkable display of energy and brilliance of execution in the Liszt paraphrase of the 'Faust' waltzes, and touching more serious depths in an original reading of Chopin's 'Nocturne' (No. 2, Op. 62). Fraulein Else Schinemann contributed songs by Schumann, Brahms, and Hugo Wolf.

The last Brodsky quartet concert took place on April 5, when the programme comprised Beethoven's string quartet in F minor; Dvorák's pianoforte trio (Op. 90), known, from the elegiac episodes in it, as 'Dumky'; and Brahms's sextet in B flat (Op. 18). The glorious sextet, admirably played, roused the large audience to a special demonstration of applause, and reminded us again that the one outstanding phenomenon in the history of music in Manchester for the last few seasons has been the success of Dr. Brodsky and his colleagues in developing a warm appreciation of chamber music. Mr. Isidor Cohn, one of the best of our resident executants, took the pianoforte part in the trio, and Mr. Arthur Catterall and Mr. William Warburton—both old students of our Royal College—made up the sextet of executants for Brahms's work, as second viola and second violoncello respectively.

The extra concert of the Hallé orchestra has added £343 to their Pension Fund—a record amount.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The chief concert of interest has been the first performance in Newcastle of Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal,' by the combined forces of the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union and the Hallé orchestra (on March 29), under the skilful direction of Mr. J. M. Preston. The honours of the evening fell to Mr. Charles Fry, whose splendid delivery of Mr. Joseph Bennett's tasteful verse was a masterly piece of elocution. The stately funeral march proved the most impressive musical number. Miss Ethel Wood and Mr. Wilfrid Virgo were the solo vocalists, and the former contributed to the second part of the programme a spirited and dramatic interpretation of Senta's ballad from 'The Flying Dutchman.' Weber's 'Oberon' overture and a finished and expressive performance of Brahms's lovely 'Song of Destiny' completed the programme. Stanford's 'Elegiac Ode' was given under the conductorship of Mr. N. Kilburn, on April 5, by the Middlesbrough Musical Union, with Miss Nanie Tout and Mr. Herbert Brown as solo vocalists. Herr Wilhelm Backhaus played Beethoven's fourth pianoforte concerto with his customary fluency and charm, and the orchestra contributed Schumann's B flat symphony, which was conducted by Mr. Horning.

There has been no lack of repetition of standard works. 'Elijah' has been given at Jarrow (principals, Madame Goodall, Mrs. A. Wall, Messrs. Edwin Kellet and Charles Knowles—conductor, Mr. G. Dodds); at West Hartlepool (principals, Misses E. Wood and L. Lund, Messrs. A. Heather, and C. Tree—conductor, Mr. J. F. Hard); and at South

Shields (Mr. M. Fairs), all with orchestral accompaniment. 'The Creation' has been performed by our oldest choral organization, the Newcastle Amateur Vocal Society (on March 23), under the direction of the cathedral organist, Mr. J. E. Jeffries, Miss Perceval Allen and Messrs. F. Fallas and F. Burton being responsible for the solo portions; by the Newcastle Co-operative Society on April 5 (soloists, Madame J. Reed, Messrs. C. C. Cradock and H. Parker; conductor, Mr. W. Maddock); and by the Elswick Road Wesleyan Choir (Mr. Geo. Dodds) on April 17.

Although Barnett's 'The Building of the Ship' constituted the chief feature of the concert of the Newcastle Postal Telegraph Choral Society (Mr. J. Hutchinson), local interest was mainly centred in the first public hearing of a well-written and effective part-song by Dr. Arthur Docksey, of South Shields, wherein the choir exhibited possibilities not indicated by their rendering of the other work.—The programme of the Northumberland Amateur Orchestral Society, on March 30, included Schumann's first symphony, Beethoven's 'Prometheus' overture, and W. H. Reed's 'Suite Venitienne.' Mr. C. Horsley conducted.—In the province of chamber-music two items of interest have been the visit of the Brodsky quartet (March 24) and the performance of Svendsen's octet for strings, under the direction of Mr. A. Wall, at the Newcastle Musical Society's concert on March 22.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Gedling Choral Society gave their concert on March 30, when part-songs by Cooke, Pinsuti, Wagner, Bridge, Elgar, and G. J. Bennett were rendered. Instrumental and solo numbers were given by the members, and great credit is due to the conductor, Mr. Gerring, for the success of the concert. The choir of St. John's, Grantham, aided by the members of the Philharmonic Society, sang Haydn's Passion music on March 26, under the conductorship of Mr. H. P. Dickenson. Miss Emily Hart was the soloist. The work was repeated at Woolsthorpe Church, at Great Gonerby Church, and at Barkston Church on the three following Sundays.

A performance of 'Elijah,' on April 4, terminated the work of the Sutton-in-Ashfield Choral Society for this season, when a band and chorus of 200 performers, under the guidance of Mr. Bonsor, gave a fine performance. The soloists were Miss Maggie Jacques, Miss Ethel Meggitt, Mr. White, and Mr. J. Lycett, and Mr. Pickerill was the leader of the band. At Shodfriars Hall, Boston, Mr. Gregory's Choral Class also gave a performance of 'Elijah' on April 14. The principal vocalists were Miss Winifred Marwood, Miss Constance Gregory, Mrs. Brough, Miss Woodthorpe, Mr. Robert Wright, Mr. Montague Borwell, and Mr. Herbert Thacker.

An interesting programme was given in connection with the Old Girls' Association on April 15 at the Nottingham University College, when the music was drawn from the works of Sir Edward Elgar. Mr. Henderson, who conducted, gave a sketch of the composer's life; and the 'Banner of St. George,' 'O happy eyes,' 'Chanson de Nuit,' and 'Canto popolare' were among the works performed.

The Pye Hill Choral Society gave Gaul's 'Holy City' on April 15, in aid of the organ fund of St. Mary's Westwood. Mr. Bonsall conducted, and Mr. Bonser presided at the organ. The band and chorus numbered eighty performers, and the soloists were Mrs. Haynes, Miss Blatherwick, Mr. A. Wilson, and Mr. Joseph Sharp.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Two concerts which took place in the closing days of March claim attention by reason of their special interest. The Rotherham Choral Society exceeded their own strenuous best when they included in one programme Brahms's 'Triumphlied' and the 'German Requiem,' together with Beethoven's 'Leonora' No. 3 overture. The chorus-singing of this remarkable society was a marvel of accuracy, vigour, and endurance, for, be it noted, the choir included only eleven tenors. Mr. Thomas Brameld, who conducted, is a musician of great talent and enthusiasm.—Another South Yorkshire body, the Hoyland Common Choral Society, successfully performed a new work, 'Ariadne in Naxos,' by Mr. G. Blake Walker, a well-known amateur. The programme also included Dr. Cowen's 'The Rose Maiden.' Mr. W. H. Jones conducted both works.

The most important event of the month has been the performance by the Sheffield Choral Union of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion. Mr. J. Duffell directed an excellent performance, in which choral merits compensated for a few mishaps in the orchestra. The rendering of the chorales was particularly fine, and in the 'thunder' chorus the ensemble was imposing. Madame Goodall, Miss L. Hovey, Mr. H. Stubbs, and Mr. J. Lycett were the soloists, and Mr. J. W. Phillips was organist.—The Heeley Musical Union, a progressive society, gave a successful concert under Mr. M. Tomlinson, 'Acis and Galatea' and 'Blest pair of Sirens' being the chief choral works.

Among the suburban choral societies that have given concerts, in the main successfully, both as regards attendances and artistic results, are the Handsworth Choral Society (Bridge's 'Inchcape Rock' and Gade's 'Spring's Message'); Wincobank and Blackburn Society ('Elijah'); Penistone Choral Society ('Hymn of Praise'); Walkley Musical Society (Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Mozart's 'Twelfth Mass'); Male Glee and Madrigal Society (short works by Goss, C. H. Lloyd, Cooke, Hatton, &c.); St. Mary's Church Choir (Spohr's 'Last Judgment'); Heeley Wesley Choral Society ('Leoni's 'The Gate of Life'); Rammoor Church Choir (Mendelssohn's 'Christus' and Thirteenth Psalm); and St. Barnabas Choral Society (Schubert's 'Song of Miriam').

The instrumental concerts of the month have included several interesting events, notably the final meeting of the Brincliffe Musical Society (Tschaikovsky's fifth symphony and 'Casse Noisette' suite), and concertos by the Sheffield Amateur Instrumental Society (Mozart's G minor symphony); and the Sheffield Ladies' orchestra (Volkmann's serenade, Op. 69, and Beethoven's C minor pianoforte concerto—soloist, Miss Hickmott). On April 7 Mr. Henry J. Wood delivered a new lecture on 'The Brass-Wind of the Orchestra,' with examples by a dozen members of the Queen's Hall orchestra. The Brodsky quartet appeared at the last concert of the Sheffield Chamber Music Society, playing quartets by Dittersdorf (in E flat), Brahms (Op. 67), and Beethoven (Op. 59, No. 1).

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS.

After fighting shy of 'The Dream of Gerontius' for more than four years, Leeds has had two performances of Elgar's work within a month. That given by the Leeds Philharmonic Society on March 22 has already been chronicled, and it was followed on April 12 by the Leeds Choral Union, which went one better, since it made a sort of miniature 'Elgar Festival' of the event, following it up on the next day with a performance of 'The Apostles.' Neither expense nor pains were spared to do justice to the two works. The cast of principals could hardly have been excelled: Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Messrs. John Coates, Franganon-Davies, Andrew Black, and Lane-Wilson. The Queen's Hall orchestra was engaged for the occasion, and while Sir Edward Elgar conducted the two oratorios, Mr. Henry J. Wood appeared to conduct the beautiful 'Variations.' On the whole, more brilliant performances it would be hard to imagine; the large and powerful chorus, most carefully trained by Mr. Alfred Benton, took immense pains, and threw themselves heart and soul into their task, while in the lavish but judicious expenditure which the employment of such forces must have involved one cannot but recognize the liberality of a Leeds amateur who is the founder and chief stay of the society.

The season of the Leeds Municipal Orchestra ended on March 25, when the twelfth concert of a most interesting and artistically successful season was given. Two movements of Mr. Hattersley's very able symphony in D minor—the first performance of which was given by this orchestra a year ago—were repeated, and a new work, a concertstück for pianoforte and orchestra, by the same composer, was given for the first time. Less distinguished than the symphony, it possesses the excellent attributes of melodic grace and brilliance. Miss Alice Simpkin's very finished playing of Saint-Saëns's 'Rondo Capriccioso' for violin and orchestra, and Mr. Gordon Heller's really impressive singing of Löwe's intensely dramatic 'Edward' were other interesting features of a concert which, like its predecessors, reflected credit on this local orchestra and its energetic conductor, Mr. Fricker. On March 29 the Leeds Symphony Society, under Mr. Grimshaw, played a Haydn symphony, and Mr. Percy Richardson appeared as the soloist in one of Mozart's pianoforte concertos. The Leeds Musical Union, a society which exists for the cultivation of male-voice choral music of a more artistic kind than is sung by the average competition choir, gave a concert of the usual type on April 3, under its new conductor, Mr. Noel Bell.

OTHER YORKSHIRE TOWNS.

The York Musical Society performed Mozart's noble 'Requiem' on April 4. Though by an unlucky chance two of the principals were unable to appear, substitutes were obtained at short notice, and Miss Rich and Madame Amy Dewhurst did their best under the circumstances, while Messrs. H. Brearley and Herbert Brown were more than satisfactory in their respective parts. The chorus sang with spirit, if not with all the charm of vocal phrasing such music demands, and Mr. T. T. Noble conducted very ably. The other Yorkshire city of Ripon possesses in Mr. C. H. Moody, the cathedral organist, a musician whose enthusiasm is equal to that of his York colleague—which is saying a good deal. He conducted, on April 14, a performance by the Ripon Choral Society of 'Elijah,' in the cathedral, distinguished by some bright and effective choral singing.

The Hallé orchestra appeared at the Huddersfield subscription concert on March 28, and though the programme was stereotyped, it had a measure of freshness for the audience in the fact that it was conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, who had not before been seen at Huddersfield. Needless to say his readings were original, interesting, and brilliant. On April 1 the local Philharmonic Society assisted at one of the Corporation popular concerts, and some interesting music for organ and orchestra was introduced. Mr. Weston Nicholl conducted his clever concert overture, and Prout's E minor organ concerto and Guilmant's 'March Fantaisie' were also in the programme. The borough organist, Mr. Arthur Pearson, was the soloist, and he also gave an able interpretation of one of the most interesting things in modern organ music, Reubke's remarkable sonata based on the ninety-fourth Psalm. Mr. Ibeson conducted with marked care and ability.

The Hull Vocal Society, on March 28, gave Mr. T. T. Noble's powerful cantata, 'Gloria Domine,' and on March 31 the Hull Harmonic Society introduced to the town 'The Dream of Gerontius,' a plucky attempt, if barely within the society's means. The Harrogate Choral Society gave a fine, expressive rendering of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha' on March 24, reflecting great credit on their conductor, Mr. C. L. Naylor, and on March 30 Mr. Alfred Benton conducted a very creditable performance of the 'Walpurgis Nacht' by the small but very efficient Morley Choral Society. At Bridlington the local orchestral society has been taken in hand by Mr. Bernard Johnson, the recently-appointed organist of the Priory Church, and on April 13 a concert was given under his direction, the feature of which was Bach's concerto in C minor for two pianofortes. Miss Durley and Mr. Johnson were the soloists, Mr. A. W. M. Bosville, well known in the district by the festivals he has organized and conducted, for the nonce took over the baton.

Mention should be made of the music which has been given in some West Riding churches during Holy Week, since, apart from works of no artistic value, the list includes an interesting series of compositions which have for their subject the Passion. Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was given in Ripon Cathedral and Leeds Parish Church, his 'St. John' Passion in the Church of St. John the Evangelist at Leeds; Schütz's Passion music at St. Chad's, Headingley, Leeds; Haydn's 'Seven Words' at Chapel Allerton, Leeds; and Spohr's 'Calvary' at Bradford Parish Church.

Foreign Notes.

ANTWERP.

The fourth anniversary of the death of Peter Benoit was celebrated here at the Flemish Opera by a programme consisting of fragments of 'Charlotte Corday,' one act of the 'Princesse d'Auberge' of Jan Blockx, and one act of Jacquet's 'Quentin Metzys.'

BRONN.

A Beethoven festival is announced to be held here from May 28 to June 1. The composer will be represented by four quartets (performed by the Joachim quartet), the septet, the pianoforte trio (Op. 11), the sonata in G for pianoforte and violin (the Opus number is not stated, but we presume it is Op. 96), and the pianoforte sonata in A flat (probably Op. 110). In addition to Beethoven music there will be performed quartets by Haydn, Mozart and Brahms, and a number of other works by Haydn, Mozart, Bruni, Jacchini, Lorenzini, &c., &c., which, though old, will certainly be novelties. In these compositions the Société des Instruments à Vent, from the Paris Conservatoire, and the Société des Anciens Instruments, also from Paris, will take part.

DÜSSELDORF.

The following works are announced to be performed at the Lower Rhenish Festival, June 11-13:—Sonata for two wind bands and viols, G. Gabrieli; and Handel's 'Israel in Egypt.' Second day: Symphony (two flutes and strings), W. F. Bach; Cantata, 'Also hat Gott die Welt geliebt'; Brahms, second pianoforte concerto, and Mahler's second symphony in C minor with soli and chorus; 'Appalachia,' symphonic poem with chorus, by F. Delius; 'La Canzone dei Ricordi,' for alto solo and orchestra, by Martucci; 'Till Eulenspiegel,' by Strauss; and Fantasia for pianoforte, chorus, and orchestra, Beethoven.

PRAGUE.

'Ib and little Christina,' by Basil Hood and Franco Leoni, has been performed at the New German Theatre here; also 'Fisherman and Caliph,' based on a tale from the 'Arabian Nights,' music by Félix Draeseke—an actual novelty.

Handel's 'Saul' was performed by the Finchley Musical Society at Woodside Hall, Finchley, on April 14. The fine choruses were sung with great expression, and a small but efficient orchestra of professional strings (leader Mr. R. Carrodus), with pianoforte and harmonium, provided the instrumental accompaniment. Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night' was also performed. The soloists were Mesdames K. Cherry, G. Macaulay, and Messrs. H. Plevy and E. Webster. Miss Curtis and Mr. Walter Layton rendered good service at the pianoforte and harmonium respectively, and Mr. Munro Davison conducted.

A concert was given at the Castle Assembly Rooms, Richmond, by Master H. Vernon Warner and Miss Elsie Warner on April 4, assisted by a full orchestra, which included many of the leading players in the London Symphony Orchestra. The programme included Grieg's concerto in A minor (Master H. Vernon Warner), and Mendelssohn's concerto in E minor (Miss Elsie Warner). Miss Dorothy Ray and Miss Carrie Herwin were the vocalists, and Mr. Harry E. Warner conducted.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society gave a concert at the Crystal Palace on April 8. The programme included Massenet's 'Eve,' Villiers Stanford's 'Last Post,' and a miscellaneous selection. The solo vocalists were Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. Vivian Bennetts, and Mr. Frederick Ranalow, who did well in their respective parts. Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted.

Dr. G. H. Smith, who has been the honorary conductor of the Hull Vocal Society for the last nine years, was presented by the members of the Society at their final rehearsal on March 27 with a cheque for 100 guineas, as a mark of appreciation of his valuable services.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

BEXHILL.—Handel's Passion music was sung at the Parish Church on April 5, by the choir of the church, augmented by the newly-formed Ladies' Festival Choir and assisted by a small string orchestra and the organ. Mr. P. S. Hallett presided at the organ, and Mr. W. H. Speer conducted.

BLACKBURN.—The final concert this season of the St. Cecilia and Vocal Union took place on April 7 in the Exchange Hall. The band—selected, as usual, from the Hallé Orchestra—and choir numbered over 200 performers. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha' was given with much pathos and expression. Cowen's 'John Gilpin' was also well performed and greatly enjoyed. Miss Gleeson-White and Mr. Ivor Foster, the principal vocalists, were alike excellent. The orchestra played Gounod's overture 'Mirella' and Tchaikovsky's 'Casse Noisette' suite. Dr. E. C. Bairstone conducted.

BRIGHTON.—An excellent performance of Handel's 'Israel in Egypt' was given by the Sacred Harmonic Society at the Dome on March 30. The choir has never been heard to greater advantage, singing with much power and impressiveness, and reflecting every credit on their able trainer and conductor, Mr. Robert Taylor. The solo parts were undertaken by Miss Carrey Kershaw, Mrs. W. J. Mobbsy, Miss Agnes Coates, and Mr. W. Maxwell.

BURNLEY.—A highly creditable performance of the 'Dream of Gerontius' was given under the auspices of the Burnley Literary and Scientific Club at the Mechanics' Institution on April 6. Great care had been taken by Dr. Crump, the conductor (who, although an amateur, is a highly enthusiastic and capable musician), in the preparation of the work, with the result that the chorus acquitted themselves with much credit. The Hallé orchestra assisted, and the solo vocalists were Madame Agnes Paddon, Mr. John Coates, as Gerontius, and Mr. Herbert Brown.

CHELMSFORD.—The Musical Society gave an impressive performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' on April 5. The soloists were Mrs. Helen Trust, Miss Charlotte Eyre, Miss Isabel Clear, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. Montague Borwell. The chorus and orchestra numbered 120 performers, and Mr. F. R. Frye conducted.

COVENTRY.—The last concert of the Musical Society this season, which took place at the Corn Exchange on April 4, was rendered notable by the performance of Mr. A. Herbert Brewer's Gloucester oratorio 'The Holy Innocents,' under the able direction of Mr. F. W. Beard. The choir displayed excellent qualities, and reflected great credit on their conductor. The solo vocalists were Miss Edith Kirkwood, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Dalton Baker, and the performance of this fine work created a very marked impression. The second part included the overture 'Tannhäuser' and Liszt's 'Hungarian Fantasia' (solo, Miss Ethel White).—Dr. Ferris Tozer's Lenten cantata 'The way of the Cross' was sung at St. Michael's Church on April 11 and 18 by a choir of about 10 voices, accompanied by strings, drums, and organ. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Biddle, Miss F. Powles, Mr. O. Durham, and Mr. Herbert Smart, and the choruses and chorales were very impressively sung under the direction of the composer, organist of St. Michael's Church, Exeter. Mr. Walter Hoyle, organist of St. Michael's, Coventry, presided at the fine Willis organ throughout the service.

DERBY.—The Choral Union brought its thirty-ninth season to a close with a miscellaneous concert on April 11, in the Temperance Hall. Part-songs by Gaul, Schumann, Macfarren, Benedict, Harvey Löhr, and a madrigal dedicated to the Society by Mr. Hancock, the conductor, were the main features of the programme.

FALKIRK.—The Falkirk and District Choral Union gave a performance of Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' in the Town Hall, on April 5. The choir sang with intelligence, and an efficient orchestra, led by Mr. W. H. Cole, assisted. The solo vocalists were Miss Eva Rich, Miss M. Dalziel, and Mr. James Davies. Mr. James Love was an efficient conductor.

GRAVESEND.—The Orchestral Society gave a concert at the new Public Hall on April 12, when the chief works in the programme were the minuetto from Mozart's symphony in C, two movements from Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony, and Weber's concertstück, the solo part played by Miss M. L. Goddard. Violin solos were contributed by Miss Marian Jay, and the solo vocalists were Miss Hester Owen and Mr. Henry Turnpenny. Mr. Howard Moss ably conducted.

HEDNESFORD.—The Hednesford and District Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Ernest Amphlett, gave a highly-creditable performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' in the Drill Hall on March 31. The soloists were Miss Maggie Jacques, Miss Ada Green, Mr. Joseph Whitehouse, and Mr. James Coleman.

KETTERING.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Haydn's 'Creation' on April 11, in the Victoria Hall. The solo vocalists were Miss Agnes Baines, Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. Robert Radford. Mr. H. G. Gotch conducted.

KIRKCALDY.—The Musical Society gave a concert in the Adam Smith Hall on March 22. The programme consisted of Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' the 'Golden Legend,' (Sullivan), and the 'In Memoriam' overture by the same composer. The solo vocalists were Madame Sobrino, Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. John Harrison, and Mr. Charles Knowles; and the orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. W. H. Cole, contributed much towards the success of the concert. Mr. Charles M. Cōwe conducted.

PAIGNTON.—The recently-formed Philharmonic Society gave its initial concert in the Public Hall on April 11, when the chief feature of the programme was Mendelssohn's 'Athalie.' The choir showed excellent promise, and were supported by an efficient orchestra. The solo vocalists were Miss Linford Brown, Miss Risdon, Miss Winifred Waycott, and Miss Florence Rossiter. The illustrative verses were excellently delivered by the Rev. J. B. Jones. Two movements of Beethoven's 'Eroica' symphony were also performed by the orchestra. Mr. Frank L. Harris and Mr. F. W. Benson were the joint conductors.

PORT-GLASGOW.—The Choral Union gave their second concert of the season in the Town Hall on March 29. The chief item of the programme was Stanford's 'Revenge,' which was excellently performed by the choir. Mr. Charles E. Midgley conducted.

ROEHAMPTON.—A full selection from Bach's Passion music ('St. Matthew') was given at the church of Holy Trinity, Roehampton, on April 11, by the choir, assisted by Mr. William Forington, Mr. Louis Godfrey, and two boys from the Temple Church. Mr. Basil Allchin, the organist of the church, who conducted, had evidently spared no pains in the training of his choir, and his efforts were amply repaid, the rendering of the unaccompanied chorales being especially good. Mr. W. H. Harris presided most efficiently at the organ.

WEDNESBURY.—The Choral and Orchestral Society completed their twelfth season on April 5, when they gave an excellent performance of Smart's cantata 'The Bride of Dunkerron' and a miscellaneous selection in the Town Hall. The society's orchestra played the accompaniments excellently, and also gave a good rendering of Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' march and Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' suite. The choir sang well, and the solo vocalists were Madame Aston, Mr. Walter Pugh, and Mr. James Coleman. Mr. Ernest Amphlett conducted.

WELLINGTON (N.Z.).—A new Choral Society, with a membership of nearly 200 performers, and of which Mr. Maughan Barnett has been appointed conductor, has recently been formed in this city.

WORCESTER.—The Co-operative Choral Society gave their eighth concert in the Public Hall on April 6, when Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' was performed in character. The solo parts were undertaken by Miss Dora Manning (May Queen), Miss Kate Manning (the Queen), Mr. W. J. Wainwright (the Lover), and Mr. Thomas Osborne (Robin Hood). Mr. G. Leonard Wainwright conducted.

Answers to Correspondents.

H. M. B.—Your inquiry concerning the bass (vocal) note in the 11th bar of the first recitative in Haydn's 'Creation' has been raised on previous occasions. G natural or G flat, that is the question. Well, the original edition of the full score (issued one hundred years ago) has G natural; so have all Novello's editions—the full score, the large octavo, and the small octavo. The full score published by Peters also has G natural. An intelligent vocalist would naturally take care not to sustain the note quite its full length, in order that it should not clash with the G flat which follows in the accompaniment.

SPHINXES.—(1) Before endeavouring to acquire the diploma of 'L. (not A.) R.A.M.,' it might be advisable for you to feel your way by entering for the examination conducted by the 'Associated Board.' (2) You will find information regarding the Sphinxes of Schumann's Carnaval in THE MUSICAL TIMES of January, 1905, p. 53. (3) In the absence of a metronomic indication, you should use your own judgment as to the correct speed, the Largo time-word being your guide.

THIRTY-FIVE YEARS' SUBSCRIBER.—The balance of tone in an organ should be so adjusted that each note forming the fullest chord should be well heard, no one note predominating over the other; but many voicers of organ pipes, in their craze after brilliancy, are too prone to make the 'trebles' too shrill and cutting. This is a matter in which the art of an organ-builder has fine scope for its application, but unfortunately all organ-builders are not artists.

E. K.—As to 'whether it is contrary to professional etiquette to have visiting cards printed with the letters of a diploma after one's name,' this is purely a matter of personal feeling and the status of the diploma. The letters 'L.R.A.M.' are not only above reproach, but should be a great help towards securing you professional advancement.

SPERANZA.—Your hymn-tune and chant, being 'first attempts,' may, like 'first offenders,' be let off easily. If the melodies seem somewhat familiar, their harmonic substructure is quite original. Why did you choose the key of G flat for this initial excursion into the region of composition? Why flatter your muse (and your music) thus?

DOUBTFUL.—For the training of boys' voices try the following books: 'The art of training choir boys,' a primer by Sir George Martin (Novello); 'The boy's voice,' by J. Spencer Curwen (Curwen), and 'A treatise on a practical method of training choristers,' by J. Varley Roberts (Henry Frowde).

T. W. J.—The illustrated articles on English Cathedrals and Colleges began in November, 1901, with Winchester. They have been continued, though not in successive months, up to the present issue; it is intended to go on with the series as opportunity offers. Thanks for your kind words of appreciation.

A CONSTANT READER.—There is no book treating of Beethoven's pianoforte sonatas on quite the same lines as Sir George Grove's volume on the master's symphonies; but you might read with advantage Mr. J. S. Shedlock's erudite work 'The Pianoforte Sonata' (Methuen).

T. V. E.—As we have not heard two of the four organs mentioned by you, nor the other two for several years, we are unable to say if they are 'four of the best.' How many organs would you include in a list of 'the best?' That is the question in answer to your question.

'THE' OR NOT 'THE'?—This is evidently a knotty point with you. There is no law on the subject; but as 'possession is nine points of the law,' you may make a point of favouring the possessive case, the work you mention serving as a case in point.

W. H. L.—'Three sketches for the pianoforte (Sunday morning, Sunday evening, and Parting),' by E. J. Hopkins, are unknown to us. Perhaps some of our readers can trace these compositions by the late organist of the Temple Church.

W. H. B. (Canada).—The melody you inquire about is that entitled 'Carillons de Dunkerque,' by Thomas Carter (circa 1780). It is arranged for the organ by Dr. E. H. Turpin and published by Messrs. Weekes.

PALATE.—The quality of vocal tone is largely determined by the shape of the mouth. The material of the plate would very slightly affect the tone. We assume that you are in the hands of a good dentist.

PIANIST.—There are two cadenzas to Liszt's second Hungarian Rhapsody, one by F. Bendel, the other by Karl Klindworth: they can be obtained from Messrs. Novello.

A. C.—The metronome indication (crotchet = 72) in Novello's edition of Rachmaninoff's prelude in C sharp minor is quite correct, as it is authorized by the composer.

F. P. (U.S.A.).—Madame Bertha Thillon, formerly known as an operatic singer, died at Torquay early in May, 1893, and is buried in the cemetery there.

J. C. S.—You will find much information, interestingly set forth, in Mr. A. J. Hipkins's primer 'A description and history of the pianoforte' (Novello).

A. H.—We cannot trace the instrument called a 'Koelison,' invented by a Polish clockmaker named Maslousky, at Berlin, in 1804.

OPHICLEIDE.—Yes, we quite hope to write an illustrated article on the public school you mention. Curiously enough it was the next on our list.

ABIDE WITH ME AN EVENING ANTHEM

FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR SOLI, UNACCOMPANIED DUET (S.A.), AND FULL CHORUS (S.A.T.B.)

COMPOSED BY ALFRED J. GENTRY.

"The music is laid out effectively, and creates an atmosphere appropriate to the occasion for which the anthem is intended. It has also the advantage of being thoroughly vocal, and the pre-writing is clear. We should imagine that the work would be popular with congregations, as with choirs, inasmuch as it adequately expresses the sentiment of the well-known poem."—Haltfax Guardian, Sept. 3, 1904.

BEETHOVEN AND HIS NINE SYMPHONIES

BY GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

PRICE, CLOTH, GILT, SIX SHILLINGS.

"I recognise it, without the smallest hesitation, as one of the most important and valuable amongst recent contributions to musical literature. . . . The best informed of professional musicians may learn a great deal about the master-works of Beethoven from Sir George Grove, whose wide reading and acute perceptiveness have enabled him to marshal an astonishing array of facts, and whose intimate acquaintance with the spirit of the master has qualified him to throw light upon pages which, to many, are still obscure. . . . I must be satisfied with the remarks already made, earnestly recommending all who recognise Beethoven's greatness as shown in his immortal symphonies to obtain Sir George Grove's volume, and walk in the luminous paths through which he is ready to conduct all who trust his guidance."—Daily Telegraph.

THE PARISH CHOIR MANUAL

CONTAINING

THE CANTICLES AT MORNING AND EVENING PRAYER

SET TO APPROPRIATE CHANTS

FERIAL AND FESTAL RESPONSES, LITANY, RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS, FINAL AMENS, VESPER HYMNS AND VESTRY PRAYERS

TOGETHER WITH

ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS TO THE LORD'S PRAYER, APOSTLES' AND NICENE CREEDS.

The Canticles, with the Cathedral Psalter Pointing, have been set to appropriate Chants by Sir John Stainer, Sir George C. Martin, Sir Joseph Barnby, Sir George Elvey, and other well-known church composers.

The Responses to the Commandments have been selected from the Services of the above composers as well as those of Myles B. Foster, Dr. Garrett, Ch. Gounod, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Dr. C. H. Lloyd, Merhecke, H. Smart, John E. West, S. S. Wesley, and others.

Sir John Stainer's Sevenfold Amen is also included, as well as Vesper Hymns by Beethoven, Sullivan, and others ; concluding with two Vestry Prayers by S. S. Wesley and the Rev. Canon Hervey.

PREFACE.

Organists, choirmasters, and librarians of choirs often have occasion to wish for a choral service-book of a comprehensive nature. This desideratum the "Parish Choir Manual" seeks to meet by supplying within one cover the Canticles for Morning and Evening Prayer, Responses (Ferial, Festal, and to the Commandments), Final Amens, Vesper Hymns and Vestry Prayers, in addition to organ accompaniments to the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds.

The constant usefulness and the practicability of such a compilation are obvious, and a glance at the names of the composers will assure confidence in a publication that should commend itself for use "in quires and places where they sing."

OLD ENGLISH ORGAN MUSIC

EDITED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has for some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day.

Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance.

The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

1A. TECHNICAL PRACTICE (1st Position)	2s. od.	1B. STUDIES (1st Position) 2s. od.

ALLEGRO
FOR STRINGS
(QUARTET AND ORCHESTRA)COMPOSED BY EDWARD ELGAR.
(Op. 47.)Full Score and Parts (in the Press).

THE TIMES.

The alternation of tone-colouring gives many charming effects, and the disposition of the instruments is of the happiest. . . . What is really a remarkably poor little Welsh tune is turned to noble purposes in the two movements, and never has the composer given us work of finer or more individual quality, in spite of the tenuity of his theme. Phrases of admirable breadth and beauty occur, and there is an amusing fugato of capital structure in the development section. When it is as familiar as the spirited "Cockaigne" and the beautiful "Variations," there is little doubt that it will rank as high as they.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Far more important than the March is the piece for strings. This showed that the composer can make his mark without the aid of a ponderous orchestra. It proved, indeed, that Sir Edward Elgar can produce from his strings surprisingly varied effects of colour, especially when, as yesterday, he has the advantage of a solo quartet. The work is made up of excellent material, and, simply as music, satisfies the connoisseur.

MORNING POST.

The second novelty, an Introduction and Allegro for strings, is an interesting and extremely ingenious work. A solo quartet is employed in the most effective manner, in addition to the strings of the orchestra, and the piece is elaborated in a masterly fashion.

DAILY NEWS.

It is an old idea made new, and the contrast of the quartet with the full orchestra of strings has the happiest effect. A theme in the Welsh idiom gives a special character to the work, and it is finely worked up in the Coda. The elaborate fugato section which takes the place of the ordinary development is full of energy and interest, and the whole work is one of the most powerful the composer has yet written for the orchestra.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

It was an Introduction and Allegro in G for orchestra and string quartet, and was received with hearty enthusiasm by the crowded audience. It is based on a melody written in the Welsh style, which Sir Edward, with his customary skill, twists and turns with remarkable facility, and a fugato is introduced with striking effect before the composition closes with the tune played forte by the whole orchestra. This, deservedly, will become popular, for the instrumentation shows Elgar at his best.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The resourcefulness of the composer is well shown by the series of contrasts he obtains, and a remarkable section is a fugato elaborately worked, and busily employing the entire strings. The work, indeed, is distinctly original in conception and treatment, and doubtless will become popular, for on a first hearing the naive little Welsh tune sticks in the memory, and the entire composition is of that kind which excites greater esteem with familiarity.

GLOBE.

The idea has been very happily carried out, and the music contains a great deal that is both charming and effective, while it is almost unnecessary to say that it is admirably written, for Sir Edward Elgar is a master of his art.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

Sir Edward has here adopted with excellent results an orchestral disposition of the kind that Handel approved. This, without being designed on the grand scale, is a very pleasant, grateful piece of music. I will venture to say that while the Allegro (especially the animated fugato) is fully as clever as everything of Elgar's must be, it has considerable charm and is not superficial.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Excited to the point of creativeness, as the great musician lets us know, by Welsh scenery and Welsh idiom, the thought of this composition gradually gave way to great slowness, surged into his mind. It was in the valley of the Wye, that strange river of dreams, that he finally brought his work to practical issue; and singularly beautiful that work is. We have indicated that the composer regards the work practically as a quartet; but if the orchestra is to be regarded as an essential element in the matter, the term should be changed to something more nearly descriptive. This, however, is a matter of detail, and it only has to be recorded that Elgar's dramatic sense is here in its most highly developed stage, and that the influence of a particular mood is expressed by him with such absolute truth and beauty that one likes to think of him as the English musician of to-day, who never published a bar which is dictated by insincerity of thought.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

"The musical value of some of the pieces is not inconsiderable."—The Times."Must needs prove most useful, and are not at all dry."—Daily Telegraph."The studies are quite as entertaining to the listener as they are serviceable to the performer."—Musical Opinion."Six clever and useful 'Octave Studies.' They are more than usually interesting."—Musical Standard."Excellent for practice."—Christian World."They afford a very complete course of study. The different numbers are tuneful and attractive, and the variety is great."—The Lady."Almost every branch of octave-playing is represented in these tuneful studies."—Church Bells."These studies are very melodious, and will make the irksome study of octaves quite interesting to the hard-working student."—Church Family Newspaper."Admirably adapted to formulate touch as well as style in this special branch of pianoforte technique."—Birmingham Daily Mail."Fitted for advanced students. For wrist work No. 2 is excellent, and No. 6 is good enough for a concert piece. In all there is pretty equal work for both hands."—Birmingham Daily Post."Six excellent octave studies (legato and staccato)."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph."Can safely be recommended to players who possess the laudable ambition of keeping up their technique."—Western Daily Press.

(Op. 21).

PRESS NOTICES.

"We dealt with 'King Conor' long ago, and therefore need only confirm our expressed opinion of the work, which proved to be even more dramatically effective than we anticipated. Choir, band, and orchestra did all they knew for the composer, with the result that a finer performance was hardly possible, and Mr. Adams, who received an ovation at the close, had every reason for gratification. Seldom, indeed, has a local composer received the honour of a first production by this great and historic Society. Now it only remains to hope that the Cantata may be heard again. Its merit would certainly justify further hearing."—Birmingham Gazette and Express.

"The impression created was entirely favourable, and the applause was only suspended for a moment as the composer was brought on the platform, to be renewed with double vigour as he bowed again and again in acknowledgment of the compliments showered upon him from all sides."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Mr. Adams's musical setting is continuous, the composer making use of representative themes, which are skillfully handled, most pronounced being the motive standing for King Conor, the love, and the theme. The choral portion is never abstruse or overladen, and is well written for the voices, whilst the orchestra shows a distinct advance in polyphony and picturesqueness from former efforts."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"A most favourable impression was created, the composer being enthusiastically applauded. There is much clever work in 'King Conor,' and Mr. Adams is sincerely to be congratulated upon his achievement."—Birmingham Evening Dispatch.

"Dramatic, scholarly, and effective."—Bristol Mercury.

"The work, a brief, spirited, and musically composition, should find considerable favour at the hands of choral organizations on the outlook for half-night pieces."—Glasgow Evening Times.

"The composer has caught the spirit of the poem in a remarkable way."—Catholic News.
